WHEN THEY WANT TO KNOW

ANYWAY the New Deal is still delivering the mail—which is something if we remember trying to do business when Mr. Burleson was in office.

With a week-end's accumulation of mail stacked about, we are this day impressed a bit with the many who want to know things about our industry, and what they want to know.

¶ A dean of a southern university wants a letter to show to those of his young men who would like to consider writing for the motion picture as a career.

¶ A young man, an exhibitor's son no doubt, wants material to use in a high school debate on the negative side of the question: "Resolved, that the Modern Movies are a Menace to the Church."

¶ The arts and sciences society of an eastern city wants us to lecture on the "March of the Movies."

¶ A dozen exhibitors have questions about the Code.

¶ The author of an article on the screen for popular publication wants THE HERALD to check his manuscript for facts.

¶ A freelance contributor to the Florida press wants to know, for the purposes of an article, about the chances of moving Hollywood.

¶ An exhibitor way up yonder in northern Canada wants to know what might be done about fighting daylight saving which has just hit his community.

¶ A new producer-adventurer in Egypt wants to know about the possible market or a representative in New York.

¶ An exhibitor in India has lost a back number and wants a copy of a review for his file. He's about to play a last year's release.

All these and many other matters, reflecting active and constructive concern with the affairs of the motion picture in the outside world, are a part of the functions of service of Motion Picture Herald, labours for the industry which are rarely reflected or recorded in its pages.

As an inside glance, it is interesting to note from a memorandum arriving from the busy office of Denis Shea, circulation manager, stated in his confidential manner, that the rate of spontaneous renewal by Herald subscribers has reached a new all-time high, being one and a half times the rate of renewal back in the golden days of 1928-29 when money was much easier to come-by. Presumably the readers want The Herald.

MORE GOVERNMENT

NOW it seems our government is to admit no more foreign musicians for tours and engagements in the United States unless they can prove themselves of "distinguished merit and ability." This would seem to require of our immigration officials an exercise of a judgment that we did not know they had.

While it is possible that the United States now contains plenty of mine-run musicians and piccolo players, the policy concerned would seem laden with possibilities of application that might bring on a lot of complications. If we are to accept only "distinguished" musicians, what of lecturers, authors, hair-dressers, perfumers, tailors, portrait painters, muralists, and all manner of imported art and artists?

We are at the moment annoyed to observe that in the official words of the order of Daniel W. MacCormack: "It is held that engagements such as for the performance of instrumental music in . . . motion picture houses or productions . . . shall ordinarily not be considered within the meaning of the act as 'engagements of a character requiring superior talent'."

Indeed, Mr. MacCormack—who told you?

THE tidings from the previews in the West have it that Mr. Jesse Lasky, after sundry adventures in production of late, some more pictorial than productive, has arrived at something of extraordinary box office promise in "The White Parade." Success in his valiant endeavours in the rebuilding of a motion picture career of long distinction is likely to find the support of a goodwill that he has acquired through many years of service.

OUR feet are on a radiator at a window fourteen stories above Columbus Circle, Broadway and Central Park, but our heart is somewhere way out yonder on a Missouri farm, where it is hog-killin' time and there is new made headcheese, sausage with sage in it, scrapple rich with the flavour of acorn fed pork and newly ground corn meal. The hickory fire is smouldering under the hams and bacon in the smokehouse and there's a strutting young gobbler getting too fat to live long.

THIS WEEK ---

PREMIUM INCREASE

Linen, glassware, household effects are being dispensed in increasing quantities in New York, where, it is estimated, 75 per cent of the independent theatres are operating on a policy of premium "giveaways" on an average of three times a week. There are 15 premium companies in operation in the city. The tardy showing of the films is assigned by exhibitors as the reason for the premiums, that in turn based on increased protection afforded circuit houses. . . .

FRENCH TAXATION

Reported in preparation in Paris by the French government is a plan to impose a high tax on dubbed and imported films. The present quota on foreign motion pictures is to be abolished in December. . . .

FILMS DO NOT HARM

"Cheap" motion pictures of today do not hurt our children nor does trashy fiction, recently in Saratoga, Cal., declared Mary Blake Burke, pioneer child educator, and a recognized authority in her field. "It is the state of mind in which our children see the picture, and read the book, that counts," said she. . . .

DESIGNATING FILMS

Dependent upon the public reaction to Warners' newly instituted policy of designating pictures played in its Philadelphia house as for adults only, or for family, the company will decide shortly whether to extend the policy to its theatres nationally. Editorial and general civic endorsement greeted announcement of the plan in Philadelphia. . . .

SEATTLE SAFE

No danger exists for Seattle exhibitors that attempt will be made by local authorities to close theatres on Sunday, Mayor Charles Smith last week told 150 Washington, Idaho showmen at the convention of Allied Amusements of the Northwest. Re-elected president was Hugh Bruen. Other officers: Arthur Bishel, Leroy Johnson, William G. Ripley, vice-presidents; James Hone, secretary-treasurer; Al Rosenberg, John Danz, H. T. Moore, trustees. . . .

RATING DRIVE

Toronto's daily papers have been heavy winners recently, as better neighborhood houses, in a scramble for "class" rating in good residential sections, boosted their 5 to 15 usual average newspaper lineage to an average of 70 to 108 lines per house, at 25 and 30 cents a line. Following the lead of the Hollywood, long a large space user, the others have gone to bat for a better rating. . . .

D. O. I. FILMS

No intention has the Department of Justice of cooperating with any film company in production of a picture based on Melvin Purvis, ace Division of Intelligence Chicago bureau chief, and Charles "Pretty Boy" Floyd, gangster who met numerous bullets recently, the department emphasized in Washington last week. Paramount has in work a script on Justice Department activity, but there is no indication of federal cooperation having been requested. . . .

MACAWBER INADEQUATE

After two days as Macawber in MGM's production of "David Copperfield," Charles Laughton, English actor, asked David Selznick, producer, for release from the picture on the ground the part was inadequate for him. He returns to Paramount, whence W. C. Fields is expected to be substituted for him. . . .

FITZPATRICK FEATURE

For his first feature production James A. FitzPatrick, producer of travel subjects, will film "The Love Affairs of Franz Liszt," independently on the Coast, using the three-color Technicolor process. MGM, for which the producer makes his travel subjects, may release the feature. . . .

ADMISSION BOOST

Not the Interstate Circuit, of Dallas, Texas, but local exchange men are responsible for the movement afoot to raise admission scales next season, said John Adams, secretary to general manager R. J. O'Donnell of Interstate, last week. Thus he refuted a previous statement of Colonel H. A. Cole, local Allied leader, who had said Interstate was insisting product it plays at a 40-cent top cannot play subsequents under 25 cents. . . .

IT'S RADIO THIS TIME

At least one educator publicly defended the motion picture from the charge of inciting to crime last week, as Dr. Frank Kingdon, president of Dana College, Newark, N. J., told a Hackensack women's club that "little blame can be given motion pictures for the existence of crime." But—"The radio is not a matter to be disregarded," was the unexpected addition. . . .

UNANIMOUS DEMAND

With enthusiastic unanimity the members of the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association, Philadelphia, last week insisted Benjamin Golder continue as president. Prepared to step out, Mr. Golder, at an overflow meeting, was overwhelmed with vociferous demands that he remain as head of the organization. He agreed.

REVISION, INQUIRY

Passed at the annual convention of the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania in Pittsburgh last week were two resolutions, one pledging members to seek revision of copyright laws, aimed at demands of the ASCAP, the other demanding Congressional investigation of all phases of "the so-called Code of Fair Competition." . . .

BOMBING CONFESSION

Sensational was last week's development in the case of the Labor Day, 1933, stench-bombing of the Cum-Bac theatre, Toronto, when Albert Gold, chief witness against two accused men, Fred Pitton and Lew Kendall, testified he had committed the bombing. The two, IATSE operators, immediately were acquitted. . . .

OSTRER TALENT

Filial screen acting talent, as well as directorial executive ability, has demonstrated itself to be present in the Ostrer family of England, which controls Gaumont-British. Young Pamela Ostrer, daughter of Isadore Ostrer and niece of Mark Ostrer, who guide the destinies of the major British company, plays a small part in the company's film, "Power," ably. . . .

EQUITY GETS FOOTHOLD IN HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS

Council Approves Affiliation with Screen Actors' Guild; As Ad- visor, Will See That Charter Meets A. F. of L. Requirements

The five-year struggle of the Actors' Equity Association to effect its "closed shop" principles in the ranks of Hollywood actors appeared this week to have culminated in at least a partial Equity victory when the organization's Council met in New York Tuesday and approved an affiliation agreement with the Screen Actors' Guild. The Equity Council asked organization executives and the legal department to prepare a formal draft of approval, to be resubmitted to the Council for ratification at the earliest possible moment, with probability that this action would take place November 2.

In the draft of approval to be resubmitted will be incorporated many of the technical difficulties still confronting complete rapprochement, such as the question whether members of each organization will be required to pay double sets of dues should either group wish to utilize the other's professional medium, that is, stage or screen. Also still to be agreed to will be the general statement of policy under which the two groups will function, the manner in which disputes are to be settled and arbitration effected.

There was no question raised at Tuesday's meeting by any member of the Equity Council as to the advisability of permitting the Guild to be a completely autonomous body. Frank Gilmore, Equity president, said late Tuesday night that under no circumstances would the Guild's privilege of autonomy be taken away from it.

4,014 in Guild

Subsequent to ratification of the formal affiliation agreement by the Equity Council November 2, the draft then will be referred back to the Screen Guild membership for the approval vote of its 400-odd Class A membership. The Guild's total membership is 4,014, the Class A group constituting stars and feature players.

Although, under the terms of the agreement, the Guild is to be an autonomous body having its own constitution and bylaws, Equity's immediate function being simply that of a liaison between the Guild and the American Federation of Labor, this week's action enables Equity, after much bitter antagonism and active strife, to plant its foot for the first time over the motion picture doorstep.

Will Watch A. F. of L. Interests

Under the agreement's stipulations, Mr. Gilmore, who has been the guiding hand in the Guild's efforts to "make the producers listen to reason," said Monday that the Guild will continue to bear its present name, and its new constitution and bylaws governing the motion picture activities of its members will be drawn up exclusively by the Guild

Equity Closed Shop Move Failed in '29

Herewith is presented a chronological listing of the events of 1929 when the long-standing dispute between Actors' Equity Association and Hollywood boiled over, then went into a simmer until recent developments applied the heat again.

June—Frank Gilmore, Equity president, arrives in Hollywood. Equity makes sudden demand, affecting 2,500 players, that casts of all sound and talking pictures be Equity members.

Producers threaten to close every studio rather than submit to Equity's "closed shop" demands.

Central Labor Council of Los Angeles decides to back Equity.

July—Actors demand true representation in "Equity shop" dispute as against allegedly domineering tactics of Frank Gilmore. Gilmore rejects closed meeting proposal, declaring petition invalid.

Production reaches new high despite Equity's wholesale suspension of rebelling members. Equity warns talent to join or "take the consequences".

August—Controversy carried into the streets when two men are forced from an automobile and several hundred feet of film destroyed.

Gilmore calls off Equity shop move, laying its failure to a break in the ranks.

governors, without Equity interference except insofar as it will maintain a discreet watchfulness over its regulations to see that nothing is at variance with the A. F. of L's requirements.

The Screen Actors' Guild cannot obtain a separate charter from the Federation inasmuch as only one union organization in any one industry is granted the benefit of affiliation with the Federation. Equity has held the A. F. of L. charter for the acting profession for many years.

Therefore the Guild is to be only an affiliate, governing itself, without interference from Equity to institute strikes if ever deemed necessary, and generally to conduct its business under rules and regulation promulgated by its own officers and directors.

The possibility had arisen in the past week—since it was learned that late Wednesday the directorate of the Guild had approved

Alignment Follows Struggle Five Years Ago When Equity Failed in Move to Force Closed Shop on Studios

Equity affiliation—that Guild members might have to become members of Equity, paying dues to that organization in addition to their Guild dues. This, it develops, holds to a certain extent. Mr. Gilmore explained that Guild members automatically will become Equity affiliate members and will pay dues only to the Guild. If, however, a Guild member who is not already a member of Equity wishes to appear on the legitimate stage with regular Equity members he will be required to pay the additional Equity dues. As mentioned above, this and other problems will be considered in the formal agreement.

This, Mr. Gilmore indicated, was to be construed as definite evidence of Equity's intention to maintain a "hands off" policy in the Guild's destinies.

Though in this respect Guild members do not appear to benefit extensively in their affiliation with Equity, it is noteworthy that Equity in no way will seek to influence the Guild in the matter of enforcement of its own rigid rules pertaining to alien actors working on the stage.

Equity "shop" stipulates that an alien actor, whether he be a resident of the United States or not—a state enjoyed by many of Hollywood's alien players—cannot work for a period of six months after the conclusion of an engagement.

Were this Equity ruling to be enforced in Hollywood, more than 80 featured players in Hollywood of British citizenship alone would be affected.

Last week the Guild's board of directors approved the Equity affiliation proposal. Ten days prior to this decision it had been decided to seek an A. F. of L. charter after 11 meetings of the actor-producer 5-5 committee had failed to bring the actors' desired results in the matter of new forms of contracts and rules on working hours. Then it was discovered that such a charter could not be granted separately to the Guild as Equity already held the only one granted in the amusement field.

Gilmore Enters the Picture

It was at this juncture that Mr. Gilmore entered the picture. Several meetings were held between the Guild's board of governors, Mr. Gilmore and I. B. Kornblum, Equity's West Coast attorney, and an equitable plan was arrived at whereby the Guild would become an Equity affiliate benefiting from the Federation's charter under Equity and with the right of local autonomy being granted by Equity for all screen work.

Mr. Gilmore returned to New York from Hollywood Friday night and presented the affiliation proposal to his Council Tuesday. It was abundantly evident that Mr. Gilmore

$30,264 TO WIRELESS 8 FEET OF NEWSREEL

Gaumont-British Telephoto Transmission of End of 71- Hour Race Requires 68 Hours

Gaumont-British Pictures, Ltd., of London, last week effected the costliest newsreel "scoop" in the history of the motion picture, paying $30,264 to wireless from Australia eight feet of film showing Aviators Scott and Black winning the 9,000-mile international air race from London to Melbourne.

There were 160 frames wirelessly, costing $189.15 a frame, or $3,783 for a foot of film of 20 frames, as compared with a negative cost of 50 cents a frame and $10 a foot to produce the average American newsreel.

The entire 160 frames for which Gaumont paid $30,264 to wireless to London provided but six seconds of screen material—a flashing glimpse of the fliers. Had the company transmitted a full 200-foot sequence of the event, which is an average length for an incident of such international interest, the wireless bill would have been $760,600 for a subject running a few seconds longer than two minutes.

It was a record that probably will stand unchallenged for a long time because of the obvious economic unsoundness of the project as it worked out, the expenditure for which never has been even approached by American newsreels in their most extravagant competitive outlays. Only last week the American reels declined to split the cost of $25,000 asked by the flying Mollinsons to wing across the Atlantic Ocean a complete reel containing a first-hand pictorial record of the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia.

Working very much under cover for some weeks, the hundred-million-dollar Gaumont British Pictures company of the Ostrer Brothers, controlling the largest producing, distributing and exhibition corporation in the United Kingdom, had arranged to station their newsreel cameramen in concealed locations in the control tower at the Melbourne aviation field, from which they photographed Lieutenant Scott and Captain Black setting down their scarlet Comet after breaking the 9,000-mile England-Australia record of 162 hours in 71 hours—they had flown nearly half way around the world in three days.

68 Hours to Transmit

Emerging from the laboratory a few hours later with a completed print, the process of transmitting 160 frames began. The frames from the positive were enlarged for individual telophotography transmission over the wireless limited-beam station at Somerset, near Melbourne. Owing to interference of atmospheric conditions, 68 hours were required to complete the transmission of the eight feet of motion picture film—a period of only three hours less than that required by the aviators to fly the entire 9,000 miles.

London's cinemas screened the shots immediately and general distribution followed throughout England within a few hours. Still pictures made from the film appeared in British newspapers on the following morning.

At the same time, with the first appearance of the film on the screen, there was presented a sound reel that gave the Melbourne Lord Mayor's speech of official welcome to the British fliers. This was sent to London by wireless telephone as it was being delivered at the aviation field and was recorded in London on regular sound recording equipment.

The quality of the wirelessly pictures was not entirely satisfactory, according to cable dispatches received in New York. The film gave a six seconds flash of the plane landing and showed the unshaven airmen, exhausted from their long flight. Many of the 100,000 who witnessed the finish at Melbourne's Flemington Racecourse, also used as an aviation field, could be seen in Gaumont's newsreel.

Racers to Bring Back Reel

The race may be the subject of another newsreel "scoop," if a flight now in progress in the opposite direction between Australia and England is made successfully.

Films of the air race from England to Australia are providing Cathcart Jones and Ken Waller, pilots who came in fourth in the London-Melbourne derby, with an opportunity to better, if not equal their record and be certain of a prize when they arrive back in London. Paramount News announced Tuesday that it had commissioned the pair to bring back the film, after long distance telephonic negotiations between London and Australia.

New York offices of Paramount were advised by cable that if the airmen are able to continue their present pace—they covered the first 2,000 miles on the homeward trip in ten hours—Paramount will score a "beat" of two weeks over all newsreel competitors in London and New York with a complete pictorial record of the race. The views are expected to reach New York by steamship on November 8, if Jones and Waller arrive in London November 2 as scheduled. At their best, Paramount advised, the other American newsreels cannot get to the United States with prints before November 18.

Paramount newsreel editors describe this return flight as the longest haul under the fastest circumstances yet attempted by any newsreel.

Paramount News was also busy on another front, arranging for motion pictures taken in the stratosphere in an exclusive camera arrangement with the Picards.

Publicity Men Lift Fan Magazine Ban

Hollywood publicity directors at a conference Tuesday with Jack Grant, new coast representative of Motion Picture and Motion Picture Classic, agreed to lift the ban maintained against the two fan magazines for two months, on condition the magazines submit to studio supervision in common with other fan publications.

Alien Musicians Must Pass Test on 'Merit and Ability'

Foreign musicians who seek to enter the United States hereafter to take employment must first pass a stringent investigation as to whether they come under a definition "of distinguished merit and ability." An order to this effect was issued in Washington Tuesday by Daniel W. MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

The determination of what is "distinguished merit and ability," immigration officials were advised, "shall depend upon proof of an established reputation of distinguished merit and ability, or distinguished merit, respectively, in the field of music concerned."

The definition, it was stated, could apply to organizations such as bands, symphonic, chamber or other instrumental musical organizations, as well as to individuals.

Part of Commissioner MacCormack's announcement follows:

"It is held that engagements such as for the performance of instrumental music in radio broadcasting or in connection with cabarets, roof gardens, motion picture houses or productions, vaudeville performances, conventions, dances, fairs or in hotel or theatre orchestras shall ordinarily not be considered within the meaning of the Act as 'engagements of a character requiring superior talent.'"

Max Marcus, Pioneer Exhibitor, Is Dead

Max Marcus, known to many oldtimers as "Daddy" Marcus, died in Cleveland this week after a long illness. He was 78.

Mr. Marcus was born in Berlin and first affiliated with his brother-in-law, Moe Mark, in operation of the Mark Strand theatre, New York.

Eastman Sells 10,000,000 Ounces of Silver to U. S.

Eastman Kodak Company this week sold 10,000,000 ounces of silver to the Government. The price was not disclosed. The purchase, Eastman officials explained, was made under the silver recapture order.

Supply Dealers' Hearing Held

A public hearing on the revised supplementary NRA code of fair competition for the motion picture and theatre equipment and supply dealers' trade, postponed several times, is scheduled Friday, in the Ambassador hotel, Washington.

Holmes Gets New Post

Andrew E. Holmes this week was appointed vice-president of Donahue & Coe, advertising agency. For 12 years Mr. Holmes has been associated with N. W. Ayer & Co.

Pathe Directors Meet

The regular meeting of the Pathe Exchange board of directors was held in New York Tuesday. Only routine business was transacted, according to Stuart W. Webb, president.

MRS. GILMAN ASKS GOVERNMENT OPERATE INDUSTRY AS IN RUSSIA

Chairman of Parents and Teachers Climaxes Ten Years of Fighting Film Business With "New Line of Attack"

First it was the late Reverend Wilbur Crafts—

Then it was Canon William Sheafe Chase—

Then it was the Reverend William Harrison Short . . .

And now—

It is Mrs. Robbins Gilman.

There is always someone making a profession of warring on the screen, for the sake of war—and a job.

A "new line of attack" against the motion picture industry is promised by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers through its motion picture chairman, Mrs. Robbins Gilman of Minneapolis—an attack which embraces, chiefly, a definite program on the organization's part to wheedle the United States Government into a frame of mind where it will take over control and operation of the production, distribution and exhibition branches of the industry—undoubtedly along lines similar to those encouraged by the governments of Russia, Germany and Italy.

Campaigning for Ten Years

For more than ten years Mrs. Gilman has been campaigning against Hollywood, New York and the exhibitor in the field in what has been and still is being termed a non-constructive effort to mold the industry's output to the ideals of pollyanna.

In 1922 Mrs. Gilman was engaged by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, to go up to Massachusetts and talk to the populace against motion picture censorship. The censorship movement was defeated and Mrs. Gilman's services were terminated. Since that time her activities relating to the motion picture business have been in the direction reflected by the "new line of attack" upon the industry.

At a meeting of the Western Massachusetts Parent-Teacher Association in Springfield a fortnight ago, Mrs. Gilman complained that the efforts of neither the Legion of Decency nor the Production Code Administration in Hollywood had had the slightest effect toward betterment of the general moral "tone" of the motion picture and that, therefore, the only remaining solution lies in the Government.

Incorporating in her impassioned plea for the United States to enter the picture business parts of a recent article in the NCPT organ, Child Welfare, Mrs. Gilman referred again, as she has repeatedly in the past, to the charge that "the movies have exploited our children."

That remark was greeted this week in Cincinnati, the capital of the Legion of Decency, by editorial comment on the part of William G. Stiegler, dramatic editor of the Times-Star, who termed it "cheap balderdash, typical of the exaggeration, the intolerance and unfairness of the misdirected crusading spirit run wild."

"If Mrs. Gilman or any one of her equally zealous lieutenants in this deafeningly vocal battle for cleaner films will furnish the titles of any pictures which they can prove 'exploited' children in the last two or three years," he wrote, "this department will co-operate to the extent of publishing those names in capital letters at the head of the column to warn parents."

Mrs. Gilman's move for Government production of motion pictures for children is advocated as a means of producing pictures which parents can be certain are a proper and profitable medium of education for their children. In no instance has Mrs. Gilman mentioned the fact that the motion picture could be regarded as a legitimate medium of entertainment for juveniles.

Such films would be produced strictly by government subsidy, not in Hollywood, under the direction of trained educators, and would be exhibited in churches, schools and clubs.

"They would not compete actually with commercial films," she asserted in her Springfield speech, "because no educational films come out of Hollywood anyway."

"It will do no good to make up lists of films which are proper to see, because the theatre owner or manager himself is powerless to do anything to correct films or to determine even which films he shall exhibit. It is too late to do anything about the matter after the film is ready for display."

"Nothing that has ever been tried has reduced by a fraction the production of salacious films," she told the Massachusetts parents and teachers. "There is no use looking to Hollywood for education: there is no education there. There is no use looking to Hollywood for culture: there is no culture there. We have turned our back on the old ways and started a new line of attack."

"Millions of dollars will be poured into our communities for public recreation. It is the duty of all of us to consult with our officials and stand ready to cooperate."

Joined Federal Council in 1923

In 1923 Mrs. Gilman aligned herself with the reform organization known as the Federal Motion Picture Council in America—a title which has created a popular impression that it has some definite connection with the Government, which it has not. This Federal Council was an outgrowth of the International Reform Council. Its organizer and general secretary is Canon William Sheafe Chase. Mrs. Gilman still occupies an executive post with the Council, which has supported all anti-motion picture legislation proposed in Congress, including the Swope, Upshaw and several Brookhart bills.

In 1927, having moved from New York to Minneapolis, Mrs. Gilman organized a municipal social welfare organization known as the Woman's Cooperative Alliance. The organization was disbanded as of Jan. 1, 1933, because of lack of funds. Prior to this, however, the organization had occupied itself with local reforms, protesting distribution of allegedly pornographic and licentious literature and motion pictures. When the theatres of Minneapolis contributed $11,000 to unemployment relief in 1932, the Mayor, at the suggestion of Mrs. Gilman's organization, turned the money over to open an old Y. M. C. A. clubhouse as a home for destitute girls. On this situation MOTION PICTURE HERALD on March 5, 1932, carried the following item:

"The blackout of this incident appears in the fact that one of the most active members of the Alliance is Mrs. Robbins Gilman, who for many years has made a did not intend to waste any time in taking the cause of the Hollywood actors under his wing.

EQUITY IN THE STUDIOS

For nearly six years Mr. Gillmore has been "pleading the cause" of the actor in Hollywood. In 1929 he marshaled his forces, went to the Coast and proceeded to demand an absolute closed shop. These demands included stipulations that contracts should be made for one picture only; that 48 hours should constitute the actors' working week; that all members of a picture's cast should be Equity members in good standing; that a "voice double" should not be substituted without an actor's consent; that all disputes should be settled by arbitration and that the rules of Equity should be obeyed, subject to arbitration, with the argument that these rules safeguard the working conditions of the actor as, for example, in the matter of defining rehearsals as "work" and requiring such provisions as time-and-a-half for overtime work.

The decision of Equity in June, 1929, to insist upon an "Equity shop" for all actors and actresses engaged in the making of motion pictures burst upon a surprised Hollywood. There had been virtually no indication of so drastic a program, though it had been known that Mr. Gillmore had drafted "certain requests" for film actors.

Hollywood in Three Camps

On the heels of the Equity demands Mr. Gillmore issued a statement both to the industry at large and to the trade and daily press that conditions in the studios had been going from bad to worse, that Equity could better these conditions, and that its entry into the talking picture field would be welcomed by Hollywood players. He said then that he felt producers "would recognize the fairness and good faith of Equity," but that if they did not he sounded a warning that the Equity spirit was "flaming high" and that the "Equity shop" was in talking pictures to stay.

Immediately Hollywood split into three factions—producers against Equity; actors against Equity, and actors aligned with Equity. In the third group were 400 actors, but those in the group opposed to Equity's tactics, headed by Conrad Nagel, were by far the most prominent and included such players as Willard Mack and Lionel Barrymore.

For weeks the battle surged back and forth. The producers started signing hundreds of players to short-term contracts, having first threatened to close every studio in Hollywood rather than submit to Equity's demands.

Production Reaches Peak

Despite Equity, production reached what was at that time a peak, with 45 features in work. One by one those actors aligned with Equity began to withdraw support from Mr. Gillmore's program and the climax came when Ethel Barrymore resigned her vice-presidency of Equity and criticised Mr. Gillmore's "domineering tactics" so severely that even his most ardent supporters were openly talking about the appointment of either a new Equity president or a different spokesman to handle the Hollywood situation. From this time on the Equity campaign lost momentum until, late in August, Equity retreated, Mr. Gillmore laying its failure to a "certain number of our members who turned yellow."

Shortly thereafter the actors' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was formed and Conrad Nagel was elected its first president. The Academy fought against unionization of Hollywood actors by Equity or any other type of union organization.

About a year ago, when discontent in the Academy's actor ranks came to a climax at the Washington code hearings with rumors of contemplated salary fixing for stars and feature players, nearly 1,000 actors withdrew their membership and the Guild was formed with Eddie Cantor as its first president. It now has more than 4,000 members.

Equity as Advisor

Although Equity now is promising complete local autonomy for the Guild under its new contemplated set-up, Equity definitely will function as an advisor. Equity must see to it that the Guild's constitution and by-laws in no way are contrary to the Federation charter and the Guild cannot function under a Federation charter without Equity's approval.

There is, however, still one hurdle to be jumped before complete Guild-Equity affiliation. That is the matter of the double set of dues which will be required if Guild members wish to appear on the legitimate stage.

Mr. Cantor said that in either case two sets of dues should be unnecessary, but that he did not know how the arrangements would be worked out.

"The Guild membership is 93 per cent of all the actors working in Hollywood," Mr. Cantor said in New York this week, "and most of those members are also members of Equity, paying two sets of dues. But I don't think that system would be continued."

About a dozen members of the Equity Council and official staff also are members of the Screen Actors' Guild. These include, in addition to Eddie Cantor, Arthur Byron, Peggy Wood, George Arliss, Beulah Bondi, Helen Broderick, Arthur Hohl, Otto Kruger, Frank Morgan, Ralph Morgan, Peggy Wood, Roger Pryor.

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees is about to attempt to regain its jurisdiction in Hollywood, George E. Browne, president said this week.

I consider the "What the Picture Did for Me" department the most important one in the Herald. I am not only glad to make this report, but I feel obligated to do so.

major life work of 'lambasting' motion pictures."

From 1928 to 1930, Mrs. Gilman was motion picture chairman of the National Council of Women, and in 1931, although she represented at the time no national group of women in the United States, she went to Rome in advance of the October meeting of the International Council of Women.

Withdrew MPPDA Cooperation

In 1933 Mrs. Gilman was appointed chairman of the Committee on Motion Pictures for the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. It was at this time that the organization withdrew its support from the MPPDA's public relations program.

Shortly after Mrs. Gilman's appointment to the NCPT the following statement of policy appeared in an issue of Child Welfare:

"With this issue Film Review presents an additional service.

"The first page is to be used monthly by Mrs. Robbins Gilman, chairman of the committee on motion pictures, to give information about sources of educational and recreational non-theatrical films for home, school and community use. Films of this nature have been perfected to such an extent, and are so inexpensive to obtain, that their use may now be extended among parents and teachers all over the country. Mrs. Gilman's lists will be a boon to schools and communities looking for the best in silent and talking films."

The paragraph immediately following this was as follows:

"The second page will be edited by Mrs. Morey V. Kerns, who has given for many years a remarkable service to Child Welfare. The number of films which can be recommended for children is at present very small, and so, beginning with this issue, Mrs. Kerns' listings will occupy only one page."

Demands Federal Legislation

The first issue contained the following excerpts from an article by Mrs. Gilman:

"In view of the above facts and others that might be cited, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers is developing a program which will, if carried out, facilitate cooperation with state, national and international departments of government for increased use of motion pictures as visual aids to education; assemble film libraries for systematic circulation; stimulate production, distribution and exhibition of educational films; provide circulation for non-theatrical films for wholesome recreation; and support federal legislation for the regulation and supervision of production, distribution and exhibition of commercial motion pictures for entertainment purposes."

In these words Mrs. Gilman, in behalf of the NCPT, as early as the beginning of 1933 withdrew from any endeavor to assist in the solving of the problem of the child's relation to the theatre, except insofar as restrictive legislation is proposed as a solution, and at the same time gave evidence of the organization's intention of encouragement of Government monopoly of films.

OPERA STAR SIGNED. Lily Pons, noted soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who has been signed by RKO Radio for a picture to be made next spring.

U. S. LETTER CARRIERS WILL DELIVER UNADDRESSED PROGRAMS ON ROUTES

Third Class Matter Will Be Delivered House-to-House With Only "Patron" or "Householder" as Address

Ol' Uncle Sam, after casting his eagle-eye down the bright-red side of his official family ledger, this week commissioned his Confederate-gray carriers of the mail to engage, in his behalf, in the business of making house-to-house deliveries of theatre programs and of local merchants' advertising matter without the formality of addresses affixed thereon, at three-fourths of a cent per ounce for each delivery.

It's a brand new deal for the so-called "little man" in business that places the facilities of the entire United States Postal Service at his disposal to carry his sales message from the counter to the mailbox and the home.

House-to-House Delivery

Under a new ruling made by President Roosevelt's postmaster general and campaign manager, James Aloysius Farley, the postal regulations governing the addressing and delivery of third class postal matter are very much liberalized, making it possible to establish a house-to-house delivery of such third class matter addressed to "Patron," or "Householder," without any further identification. This third class matter may be mailed under the regular rates for that class, prepaid by permit or precancelled stamps.

A list of the numbers—not names—on each letter carrier's route will be compiled and will be available for those who wish to utilize this service for an entire city or for any part of a city. The carrier will deliver matter of this kind to each of the deliveries on his route.

The benefit to the Post Office Department will be extra revenue, much of which is now diverted into the channels of private door-to-door delivery services.

The benefits to an advertiser are: (1) He may reach every householder in the city or in any part of a city with advertising matter which needs no mailing list and no specially written or printed address, thus considerably increasing his market of prospective patrons over the present limitations of a private list. (2) The advertiser may be sure, almost always, of reaching an active list, conserving the supply of his printed matter on "dead" prospects the while new prospects are added to a community. (3) He is given a guarantee that his printed messages will be handled through the regular processes of the mails, under all the protection of the United States Postal Laws and Regulations. (4) And he is further assured that his printed matter will actually be placed in mail boxes and not thrown away in bulk as is the case of many of the present systems of private door-to-door deliveries. The rate of postage, however, remains unchanged.

This service also is extended to rural routes and to postoffice box holders as well as householders in cities and towns where there is carrier service. Thus, the exhibitor and merchant can be sure of blanketing his community.

The simple form adopted by the Postoffice Department for the marking of such matter, either in writing or printed style, is:

PATRON (or Householder),
LETTER CARRIER ROUTE
(or other local form of delivery)
NEW YORK CITY

Or, the advertiser, if he so desires, may omit the name of the route service and postoffice, provided the word "LOCAL" is used in lieu thereof.

Should Provide Sufficient Number

In all cases the sender should present a sufficient number of programs or advertising pieces to serve every mail box, or, as in the case of apartment houses, every patron, on the route or routes in the city or block or neighborhood or trade area to be served.

Whenever the advertiser's supply is exhausted by the letter carriers they will be advised to provide sufficient pieces in the future. Should any pieces be left they will, if they bear a pledge to pay return postage, be returned to the sender who will be charged with the return postage.

All postmasters throughout the country are ordered by Mr. Farley to distribute advertising matter under the new order "as promptly as possible." It will not, however, be permitted to delay the delivery of the regular mails.

When advertisers prefer to address their matter to particular rural route or postoffice box numbers, or to specific occupants of residences served by city or village letter carriers they may do so. This would enable an exhibitor to continue to send programs personally addressed to those on his own mailing list, and, in addition, through the medium of unaddressed pieces, reach those on the same routes whose names he does not have.

Challenge to Showmanship

The new order which gives to exhibitors and others the service of house-to-house delivery without addressing is a challenge to the showman's ingenuity in competing with the local merchant to get the eye of the householder and prospective customer. The danger of the theatre program being "lost in the shuffle" of bulk advertising messages placed at the same time in the mail box would be lessened by use by the exhibitor of distinctively colored paper and unusual typography, odd-sized pieces and other forms that have a guaranteed appeal.

Programs and announcements sent into the homes by exhibitors have long been recognized as his most important medium of bringing residents of the neighborhood into his theatre. It is felt by some exhibitors in New York who were asked for an opinion of the possible value of the new postal order, that it should insure a more representative broadcast of the exhibitor's message to prospective patrons.

Reorganizing of RKO Is Started

A plan of reorganization for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation has been started, its progress to be limited only by the rate of improvement in the company's earnings, Paul E. Mead, head of the bankruptcy division of Irving Trust Company, RKO trustee, informed Federal Judge William S. Bondy in New York Friday. Mr. Mead's statement was in reply to a query by Samuel Spring, counsel for a group of RKO creditors, as to what specific progress the company was making.

Profit Showing Indicated

Judge Bondy said he had been told recently that RKO had begun to show a profit for the first time in many months and indicated he agreed with Mr. Spring in his contention that the trustees should provide a reorganization plan if the company's earnings continue their improvement. Mr. Spring is counsel for S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, RKO claimant in the amount of $250,000, and for Charles R. Rogers Productions, claimant of $300,000.

The Friday hearing was held in connection with a petition for instructions from the court on consummation of the recently worked out agreement between RKO and Consolidated Film Industries under which RKO is given until May, 1938, in which to retire $1,500,000 of secured notes outstanding. Prior to the agreement RKO was obligated to retire the notes by Jan. 1, 1935, through five monthly payments of $300,000 each.

Judge Bondy pointed out that the $1,500,000 of notes outstanding still are secured by collateral having a book value of $50,000,000 which was given to secure an original $6,000,000 obligation, and suggested RKO might make an appreciable saving on interest by negotiating a $1,500,000-loan "at 4 or 5 per cent" from a bank and retiring the obligation immediately, using the present collateral as security for the bank loan.

Extension Called First Need

Mr. Newton told the court that the first step to be taken by the trustee is to obtain an extension on the maturities and then to seek means of retiring the obligation in the manner suggested.

Judge Bondy instructed the trustee to proceed with negotiations for the bank loan and suggested that in the meantime efforts be made to obtain a reduction from Consolidated on the 6 per cent interest called for in the agreement. Mr. Newton explained that Consolidated already had refused such a reduction.

Judge Bondy took the agreement under advisement.

J. R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., arrived in New York from Hollywood to attend the monthly directors' meeting on Monday.

KENT SIGNS NEW 3 YEAR CONTRACT

Fox Also Signs Michel and Clark; Consolidated Net for 39 Weeks $1,506,212 After Taxes

Ratification of Sidney R. Kent's contract as president of Fox Film Corporation, a formality which was expected, was accomplished by the company's board of directors in New York Wednesday afternoon. Evidencing the lack of foundation of rumors that had been widely circulated and published to the effect that Mr. Kent was contemplating a resignation from the company, the Fox directors abrogated the old contract and a new agreement covering a three-year period was signed. At the same time it was announced that W. C. Michel, executive vice-president, and John D. Clark, general manager of distribution, had signed contracts for the same period.

Equal to 61 Cents Per Share

The company reported for the 39 weeks ended Sept. 29, 1934, a consolidated net operating profit, before federal taxes, of $1,746,213, compared with a loss of $226,345 in the same period of 1933.

In the quarter ended Sept. 29 of this year the profit from operation, before federal taxes, was $356,971, compared with a profit of $256,061 for the third quarter of 1933. After deducting a reserve for federal income taxes estimated at $240,000, the consolidated net profit for the 39 weeks ended Sept. 29, 1934, was $1,506,212.67.

On the basis of 2,436,409 shares of Class "A" and Class "B" stock outstanding, the consolidated net profit for the first three quarters of 1934, after all charges, including federal income taxes, amounts to 61 cents a share.

Earned Surplus $3,251,650

The consolidated earned surplus at Dec. 30, 1933, was $1,674,354, and after adding the net profit as stated, together with foreign exchange adjustments of $71,083 the consolidated earned surplus at Sept. 29, 1934, stood at $3,251,650, all of which has accumulated since the effective date of reorganization of the company April 1, 1933.

Theatre operations of Wesco Corporation are not consolidated, because of the bankruptcies of the principal operating subsidiaries of that company.

Distributor Seeks Restraint On Use of Name of Majestic

The appointment of a receiver for Majestic Pictures Corporation and an injunction restraining a new subsidiary known as the Majestic Producing Corporation from using the name or assets of Majestic, is asked in a suit filed last week in New York supreme court by Majestic Pictures of Pennsylvania, of which Anthony Lucchese is president. The complaint charges that Majestic of Pennsylvania built up a distributing organization, and that Majestic Pictures, headed by Herman Gluckman, caused Majestic Productions to be formed to reap the benefits of the good will established by the Pennsylvania company. A general denial was made by the picture company.

The production budget of Majestic Pictures has been increased, following conferences between Mr. Gluckman and Larry Darmour, supervisor of all Majestic releases.

Century, Skouras in 10-Year Pooling Deal

The pooling arrangement entered into between Century Circuit and Skouras theatres on Long Island is for a 10-year period, according to A. H. Schwartz of Century. In all, 17 houses are involved. Mr. Schwartz said he has signed for Warner, Paramount and MGM product. Skouras has Fox and Universal, which fact tends to discount reports distributors were opposed to the deal.

Mr. Schwartz also has a pooling agreement with Joseph Seider of Prudential, although none of the eight houses involved therein conflict with those in the Skouras deal. Mr. Seider has MGM, Fox and Warner product.

Fox Studio Employees Form Own Organization

Following several preliminary meetings, Fox studio employees last week formed the Fox Studios Employees Club with James Jensen of the carpenter's shop acting as temporary president. Purpose of the club is to promote the advancement of all the members and to make it possible for all to obtain sound legal and business advice. Statutes of the organization provide for benefits and financial compensation for needy members. The club roster will be made up of members from all departments of both the Westwood and Western Avenue studios. Meetings will be held monthly.

Giannini Hits Loans In Talk with Jones

A. P. Giannini of the Bank of America National Association, in a conference this week with Jesse Jones, chairman of the RFC, in Washington, attacked the delay of the Federal Reserve banks in approving applications for industrial loans. Dr. Giannini also discussed with Mr. Jones the formation of mortgage trust companies for relief of mortgage bondholders in need of aid.

EDUCATORS TO STUDY THE FILMS

"To offer constructive suggestions to the motion picture industry to improve the character of films shown to the youth of high school age," the National Education Association has formed a special committee to study the situation, according to Ernest D. Lewis, of Evander Childs High School, New York, association president.

Commerce Chamber Boosts Theatres

The motion picture theatres of Omaha, and indirectly the motion picture industry as a whole, were the collective recipient recently of a measure of sincere and apparently unsolicited publicity from the local chamber of commerce. It was, in effect, an indication of the extent to which the theatres of the city are appreciated by business interests, unquestionably as a result of effective, intelligent public relations.

More than half the time allotted to a radio program sponsored by the chamber was devoted to comment on the theatre and entertainment industry. In presenting the "Civic Calendar" of the chamber, Archie Bailey noted as one of the events of the week of interest the first anniversary, as a motion picture house, of the Brandeis theatre. He stressed the value of the film houses as places where the people of the city and visitors may enjoy entertainment at reasonable cost, and pointed out the numbers who are employed in the maintenance and operation of the theatres.

He said in part: "Omaha is proud of its theatres. Operated by courteous men and women, each of them is a part of Omaha's scheme of hospitality. You'll enjoy yourself when you go to the show in Omaha!"

Universal Sets Release Schedule for This Year

The Universal release schedule for the rest of this year, comprising nine features, was determined at a Coast conference last week among Carl Laemmle, Carl Laemmle, Jr., and James R. Grainger, general sales manager. All nine features are either in work or completed. Carl, Jr., has left the Coast for a three-month's vacation in Europe.

The features, and their release dates, are: "Great Expectations," October 22; "Cheating Cheaters," November 5; "Strange Wives," November 12; "Imitation of Life," November 19; "Night Life of the Gods," November 26; "The Invisible Man," December 3; "Secret of the Chateau," December 10; "Straight from the Heart," December 24; "The Good Fairy," December 31.

Sweigert Heads Variety Club in Philadelphia

A Variety Club has been formed in Philadelphia with Earle W. Sweigert as chief barker. Leonard Schlessinger is first assistant barker; Frank Buhler, second assistant barker; Jay Emanuel, wagonman; Jack Greenberg, property master, while the following are canvas men: James Clark, Edward Corcoran, Milton Rogasner, Lewen Pizor, Jerry Crowley, Herbert Elliott, Samuel D. Schwartz, Harry Wiener, Al Davis, Edward Sherman and Al Cohen. Membership in the club is limited to 50.

NEW OBJECTIVES BEING REALIZED, SMPE IS SHOWN AT CONVENTION

Engineers' Society and Academy Arrange Active Cooperation to Formulate Standards of Practice; Tasker Is President

by GEORGE SCHUTZ
Editor of Better Theatres

Recent aims of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers possessing much practical significance to the industry as a whole, and particularly the exhibition branch, have been substantially realized, it developed this week at the convention of the Society in New York.

This convention heard the first reports of the group formed since the previous meeting last spring, for the purpose of developing standards of theatre design based as absolutely as possible on the technological requirements of more effective exhibition.

It was also announced that the SMPE and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences have arranged to work together toward solution of technical problems and formulation of standards of practice, thereby ending differences which frequently have resulted in costly confusion.

Of less immediate importance, but bearing heavily upon general motion picture interests in the not-too-distant future, were formal papers and informal corridor discussions pointing toward early realization of methods making sound and picture quality in the 16-millimeter field comparable to that of standard practice, even on a scale adapted to theatre entertainment.

H. G. Tasker New President

As these notable features suggest, the fall meeting of the industry's representative technological organization was in general characterized by a forward-moving spirit, with the attendance itself—in the neighborhood of 350—considerably larger than in the past few years. Conducted at the Hotel Pennsylvania, the meeting continued from Monday through Thursday, with sessions under the direction of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, retiring president.

The new president is H. G. Tasker of United Research Laboratories. Other officers and board members announced for 1935 are:

Emery Huse of Eastman, executive vice-president; J. I. Crabtree of Eastman, editorial vice-president; W. C. Kunzmann of National Carbon, convention vice-president; J. H. Kurlander of Westinghouse, secretary; T. E. Shea of Bell Laboratories, treasurer; and M. C. Batsel of RCA Victor, and S. K. Wolf of Erpi, members of the board of governors.

Membership Now 950

The new president begins his tenure of office with a membership of 950, which represents an increase of about 500, accomplished largely since the previous meeting, as part of an expansion program designed to relate the technician more intimately to the practical functions of the industry. In view of the rapprochement between the Academy and the Society, it is significant that Mr. Tasker has been also a member of the Academy since its inception. The next meeting of the Society, moreover, will be held in Hollywood, in May.

The union of technological activities thus in-

URGES BROADENING OF FILM'S SCOPE

Development of production equipment permitting the making of an occasional motion picture for special purposes not allied with the regular channels of entertainment, was urged by Martin Quigley, president and publisher of Quigley Publications, speaking Monday at the luncheon which formally opened the convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in New York.

Such apparatus, he said, would effect a proper answer to those who would have Hollywood adapt its product, made for entertainment, to educational and other social functions, and would in general permit a broadening of the usefulness of the motion picture, enabling it to serve many other interests beyond those of the theatre.

dedicated really establishes a potentially effective link between the two ends of the motion picture mechanism, Production and Exhibition, the close relationship of which is obvious enough in some respects, but rather thoroughly ignored in some of its phases—for example, the very architecture of the theatre.

Schlanger Predicts Changes

"The size and shape of the motion picture and the cinematography shown therein are production problems which are vital elements making up the effectiveness of the exhibition of the product," declared Ben Schlanger, New York architect who, with S. K. Wolf, acoustics engineer, gave the report of this committee, the other member of which is L. A. Jones of Eastman.

"Changes," said Mr. Schlanger in his paper, "are quite likely to take place in the very near future to show definitely needed improvements in the exhibition factors. An improved and more promising type of cinematography affecting viewing conditions is already a reality."

Original studies in this phase of design were made and discussed in the BETTER THEATRES section of MOTION PICTURE HERALD the past year.

"It is entirely practicable at the present time," Mr. Schlanger asserted, "to establish standards for motion picture theatre design which would take cognizance of anticipated developments. The extra provision thus made would not cause any extra cost in construction, or any handicap to the film presentation even if anticipated developments did not materialize."

Examining conditions commonly asserted to represent over-seating, Mr. Schlanger offered data tending to show that over-seating is not so much a matter of the number of seats, but of the kind of theatres and plan of seating.

"Although 1,500 capacity has been considered in this report as the high for establishing standards, it may be shown that very few, if any, motion picture theatres need have more than 1,000 seats."

A wedge-shaped auditorium, he said, is the one that most easily avoids vision problems. Although as usually treated, this shape results in waste ground area, this can be overcome by placing one of the long dimensions of the wedge contiguous to one of the lot lines. Viewing distance should be shortened, and the projection room lowered, he said, to reduce distortion further.

Auditorium design was discussed from the point of view of acoustics in Mr. Wolf's paper. Considering the shape and size, he said that the ideal ratio proportion is in the order of two (height) to three (width) to five (length). This ratio is related to volumes up to 500,000 cubic feet. For greater volumes, the height should be less in relation to width and length. The rectangular auditorium is best adapted to good sound reception, he declared, and a square type is fairly adaptable, but a long narrow room should be avoided.

Frequency Distortion

"We should avoid the use of materials which provide a large amount of absorption at high frequencies, and only a small amount at low frequencies," Mr. Wolf pointed out, "unless they are to be used in conjunction with other types."

Screen illumination and evils of current practices in this phase of theatre operation were attacked from two sources—Dr. Goldsmith and the report of the Projection Screen Committee, headed by J. H. Kurlander. Despite the recent improvements in projector light sources, screen illumination was said to remain poorly adjusted to viewing conditions, partly because of faulty methods of determining the amount of light at the screen, and partly because of excessive economy. Mr. Kurlander reported four methods of determining the efficiency of the projection system from the projector to the screen:

1. Use of standard light source in projection room to detect depreciation in screen light output over test periods.
2. Reflecting of screen image to projection room and measuring brightness of image (this requires a meter of the galvanometer type).
3. Direct reading on projection lens, using opal diffusing medium.
4. Exploring of screen brightness by a combination of picture monitor in projection room with picture in form of an image of the screen.

This report also stated that rear projection was of no immediate importance.

The main social event of the convention was the semi-annual banquet and dance, which was held Wednesday evening in the main ballroom of the hotel, with Dr. F. B. Jewett, vice-president of A. T. & T., as the principal speaker.

Quigley Cites Morality Campaign

Other guest speakers, who addressed a luncheon formally opening the meeting Monday, were Col. Roy Winton, secretary of the Amateur Cinema League; Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson, director of the course in photoplay appreciation at Columbia University; and Martin Quigley, president and publisher of QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS. Both Mr. Quigley and Col. Winton stressed the provision of technical equipment making it possible for persons or groups to produce motion pictures not intended to satisfy the usual entertainment interests.

"The importance of the recent campaign to improve motion pictures morally to you technicians," said Mr. Quigley, "is that if it had

FOX WINS FIRST DAMAGE RULING IN TRI-ERGON PATENTS DISPUTE

Federal Court Rules Against Three Circuits in "Flywheel" Suit; Tri-Ergon Plans Collec- tion Agencies for Damages

The name of William Fox appeared prominently during the week in newspaper headlines which reported:

1. A federal district court in Pennsylvania awarded damages to American Tri-Ergon Corporation, William Fox, president, in a "flywheel" patent infringement suit against three theatre circuits. It was the first decision granting actual damages to Mr. Fox in his wholesale court attack on the industry in connection with his claim that the whole business is infringing on his two Tri-Ergon patents.

2. American Tri-Ergon was preparing to appear as a nationwide collection agency to gather any damages that may be awarded it by the courts in the various states.

3. The Radio Corporation of America finally assured its exhibitor licensees of protection against Tri-Ergon patent infringement actions and began to replace the "flywheel" mechanism in its reproducers.

4. William Fox won a New York court plea granting him the right to examine officials of Fox Theatres Corporation in his suit charging the theatre company, the Chase National Bank and others with bringing about the receivership of Fox Theatres as part of a $1,000,000 conspiracy against him.

The Pennsylvania court decision which awarded damages to William Fox's American Tri-Ergon Corporation in a suit against several theatre companies for alleged infringement of the "flywheel" patent was by far the most important development of recent weeks in Mr. Fox's campaign to collect royalties. Exhibitor and producer licensees are protected against any "flywheel" damage awards by the licensors—Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Radio Corporation.

The Pennsylvania decision, obtained by Fox against Altoona Publix Theatres, Wilmer and Vincent and the Locust Street Real Estate Company, does not apply to any other cases, which must be tried separately.

Mr. Fox was proceeding elsewhere with legal actions against some 20 producers, distributors and motion picture laboratories, charging infringement of either his "flywheel" patent in reproducers or of his "double printing" process in production.

Federal Judge Albert W. Johnson, sitting at Scranton, Pa., appointed Frank H. Stross, ex-judge of Pennsylvania's Northumberland county common pleas court, as special master to make an accounting with the plaintiff Tri-Ergon and the codefendant theatre companies and RCA—whose equipment was specifically involved—of profits, gains, and benefits which have accrued to the defendants by reason of their use of the "flywheel" in reproducing equipments.

Judge Johnson's order ended the two-year-old suit for an injunction and an accounting, which was lost by the defendants in two courts and which the supreme court refused to review a month ago. It was this refusal that brought on the deluge of Fox lawsuits against the industry.

Judge Johnson also directed the defendants to refrain from further use or sale of equipments which infringe upon the Tri-Ergon "flywheel" patent. The defendants are not especially concerned with the injunction, because RCA is now replacing the "flywheel" in its reproducers with a non-infringing substitute. The damages are for previous usage.

Leo May Head Tri-Ergon Branches

Reported organizing was a nationwide system of collection offices to be conducted by Mr. Fox and Tri-Ergon for the gathering of any monetary damages that may be awarded by courts in other states. Jack G. Leo, brother-in-law of Mr. Fox, who was a Fox Film executive under the William Fox regime of that corporation, probably will be in charge of the system, which, it was said, embraced a fixed schedule of periodical payments for theatres according to size or gross receipts.

Mr. Fox obviously is anticipating victory in the various intricate legal entanglements involving his patents, which may take years to untwine.

There did not appear to be any tangible evidence that Mr. Fox and the electricians—which eventually will pay the Tri-Ergon bills—had approached a basis for settling the claims.

Fox Wins Point in Theatre Suit

The long-pending New York court action involving Mr. Fox and the bankrupt Fox Theatres Corporation was resurrected late last week when the appellate division reversed the state supreme court in ordering William E. Atkinson, president of Fox Theatres, to appear for examination by Fox counsel in the suit to determine whether there was a conspiracy against Mr. Fox. Circumstances under which Fox Theatres Corporation went into receivership must be disclosed by Mr. Atkinson.

Mr. Fox had charged in a supreme court action, later appealed, that Fox Theatres, the Chase National Bank and others brought about the Fox Theatres receivership as part of a $1,000,000 conspiracy against him.

The $1,000,000 represents a personal guarantee by Mr. Fox of part of the purchase price of the Roxy theatre, off Broadway in New York, it was recited. The Fox Theatres Corporation had bought the Roxy in 1929 for $2,930,000. Mr. Fox's $1,000,000 guarantee covered the last three instalments, and he is now being sued for that sum by the Chicago Title and Trust Company, the guarantee having been assigned to that firm. Mr. Fox charges that the receivership was all a conspiracy against him to collect the $1,000,000.

"I greatly hope that the time will soon come when it will be possible to say to those who expect from Hollywood pictures serving other interests than those of entertainment, 'Make your own pictures.' You engineers can bring this possibility about by creating equipment that is inexpensive and can be conveniently used."

Visual Education Discussed

At a morning session preceding the Monday luncheon, the convention heard Miss R. Hockheimer of the New York public schools, on visual education.

Among notable papers read during the four-day session were:

"The Non-Rotating High-Intensity D. C. Arc for Projection," by D. B. Joy and E. R. Geib of National Carbon.

"Luminous Fronts for Theatres," by C. M. Cutler of General Electric.

"The Stablearc-Unitwin Motor-Generator for the Non-Rotating High-Intensity D. C. Arc," by Irving Samuels of Automatic Devices.

"What Is Light?" by S. G. Hibben of Westinghouse.

"Recent Developments in the Use of Incandescent Lamps for Color Motion Picture Photography," by R. E. Farnham of General Electric.

There was also a special group of papers devoted to the application of cinematography in the natural sciences. These were given by H. Rosenberger of Sandy Hook, Conn., R. F. Mitchell of Bell & Howell, R. F. James of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, and J. R. Townsend and L. E. Abbott of the Bell Laboratories. H. I. Day of Electrical Research Products discussed the use of high-speed cinematography in industrial development work, and Martin Johnson talked on technical aspects of wild animal photography.

Request Trustees for Art Cinema Corporation

A bill for appointment of trustees in dissolution for the Art Cinema Corporation, a Delaware corporation which filed a certificate of dissolution at Dover last week, was filed in chancery court at Wilmington, Del., by Harry Buckley, of New York City, a stockholder.

Mr. Buckley's bill recommended that Denie F. O'Brien, William Jasie and William P. Phillips, directors of the corporation, be appointed trustees. Art Cinema filed an answer agreeing to the appointment of these three men. Art Cinema owns stories, plays and other literary property and finished motion pictures and also shares of stock in United Artists Corporation. Through a subsidiary it owns a tract of land in Culver City, Cal.

SINCLAIR DEMANDS FEDERAL QUIZ CHARGING LIES IN ELECTION FILMS

Accuses Industry of "Fake Propaganda" on Screen in "Inquiring Reporter"; Says Block Sales "Crush Independents"

Upton Sinclair, thrice a Socialist candidate for public office, and author-in-anticipation of "I, Governor of California—How I Ended Poverty," this week brought his California gubernatorial campaign into the Halls of Congress at the 11th hour with a publicly announced demand for a federal investigation of the whole motion picture industry because of its reputed activities in broadcasting "fake propaganda" to defeat him in Tuesday's election. He urged that the investigation be made regardless of the outcome of the election.

Mr. Sinclair, Democratic-Epic candidate for the governorship of the Golden State, voiced his demand for an investigation rather heatedly in a telegram sent Monday from Los Angeles to Senator David Ignatius Walsh, Democrat of Massachusetts, and to Senator Wright Patman, Democrat of Texas. He charged that the motion picture industry "had entered a war against me."

As Exhibit A the Baltimorean offered the senators a story which, he said, was printed on October 26 in the Hollywood Reporter, which he described as the "official publication" of the motion picture. In that story, he charged, there was voiced an open boast that Louis B. Mayer, "president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer," C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Hays organization, and "Carey Wilson and Irving Thalberg, producers," were waging a war against his candidacy and were aiding the campaign of Governor Frank W. Merriam, Republican, seeking reelection.

The Hollywood Reporter is a studio publication in California. Mr. Mayer is vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, not president as stated by Mr. Sinclair, and Mr. Wilson is a writer.

Charges "False Propaganda"

"I have made the undeniable charge," Mr. Sinclair's telegram said, "that these men produced false propaganda in pictures under the title 'The Inquiring Reporter,' which is falsely influencing California voters."

"Whether or not you sympathize with me on my platform is beside the point," he told the Senators, but, "If the picture industry is permitted to defeat unworthy candidates it can be used to defeat worthy candidates. If it can be used to influence voters justly, it can be used to influence voters unjustly."

"I telegraphed Hays charging false propaganda and that Pettijohn claims to represent the entire industry and requested Hays to verify by wire. Hays refused to verify, stating merely Pettijohn is a Democrat."

"Will you assist me," he asked, "regardless

NEWSPAPER DEFENDS FIGHT ON SINCLAIR

The industry had sufficient reason for seeking the defeat of Upton Sinclair in his campaign for governor of California, declared the Kansas City Journal-Post this week.

"Upton Sinclair complains that the motion picture industry has entered a war against his candidacy for governor of California," the paper said in an editorial article.

"If we have read the news aright, it was Mr. Sinclair who started the war, not only against the motion picture industry but against all business, which means also against all employees of business.

"There are some things about the movies that we don't like, but we are with them 100 per cent in their efforts to prevent Mr. Sinclair from making California an economic wilderness. . . . We'll feel like forgiving them for all their shortcomings."

of the success of my candidacy, in a Congressional investigation of the motion picture industry, including efforts of the Legion of Decency to clean pictures of block book and blind buying that have crushed independent exhibitors of the country, and also with the purpose of a full, fair and complete investigation of political activities of the motion picture industry in this and other campaigns to the end of federal supervision as was effected in the meat packing industry through my activities in 1905?"

In his telegram to Mr. Hays, Mr. Sinclair said, in part: "I ask you to state whether your organization sanctions the making of lying motion pictures to defeat a people's candidate for the governorship of California. I expect and demand an explicit repudiation from your organization of Mr. Pettijohn's activities."

The opinion of observers at Washington was that Congressional investigation demanded by Mr. Sinclair will depend upon the temper and the personnel structure of the new Congress which convenes in January.

Whether Mr. Sinclair's charges are taken up or not, the feeling now running on Capitol Hill is that pictures will bulk more largely in Congressional activities next year than they did during the last session.

Demands for restrictive legislation are expected to be made by some of the religious groups, and the independents are expected to continue their agitation for the elimination of block booking, probably supported by outside groups.

The industry, however, is seen in a better position to resist any legislative attacks in Congress, due to its voluntary adoption of machinery to raise the standards of the motion picture and to the concessions it has made in block booking practices, through elimination privileges.

Prior to the extensive screen campaign in the Sinclair-Merriam contest, Mr. Sinclair was a three-to-one and two-to-one favorite for election. Near the close of the campaign, the odds had been reversed to three-to-one and five-to-one in favor of Merriam.

On the other hand, so-called "wild" reports were bandied about freely in California that Mr. Sinclair was receiving strong financial support of William Fox, both of whom collaborated last year in presenting the "story" of Mr. Fox's loss of the Fox Film companies.

Threats made by various motion picture leaders early in the campaign that the industry would be transplanted in Florida if Sinclair was elected appeared to fade toward the end of the contest.

Morgan Walsh, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Northern California, rejected an invitation of Mr. Sinclair to join him in a fight begun by Sinclair against "nefarious influences of the moving picture industry in politics, on the morals and the industry of the country."

New York Censor Rejects Only 15 Of 1769 Pictures

The New York state censor board during the year from July 1, 1933, to June 30, 1934, reviewed and licensed 1,769 films, of which 286 were approved with eliminations and 15 were rejected outright, although two were later revised and approved, according to the annual report of chief censor Irwin Esmond to Frank P. Graves, commissioner of education.

The 2,195 eliminations were classified in the report as follows: indecent, 838; inhuman, 79; tending to incite to crime, 511; immoral or tending to corrupt morals, 752; sacrilegious, 15.

The net revenue to the state for the year totaled $170,670.79, expenditures for the period having been $60,827.09 and receipts $231,497.88. The net revenue is $8,973.32 greater than for last year. Since the organization of the board, in 1921, the total net revenue to the state has been $1,688,764.63.

The report of Mr. Esmond pointed to the fact that 8,362 reels of films were reviewed during the year, that 15 pictures were rejected outright, and that 2,195 eliminations were made on statutory grounds.

Fees Argued in Paramount Case

Special Master John E. Joyce on Monday in New York took under advisement the arguments of counsel on vital legal points affecting the allowance of fees approximating $800,000 to trustees, their counsel, and special aids for services incident to the Paramount Public bankruptcy. Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, the trustees, have petitioned the court for interim allowances of $100,000 each, while their counsel, Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, asked for $350,000.

Mr. Joyce raised the question whether the allowances should be limited to the provisions of the old bankruptcy law which specify that fees shall be 2 per cent of the money handled by the trustees for the bankrupt estate. This, it was said, would limit the allowances to less than $50,000.

The old laws do not apply, since Paramount filed for reorganization under the new Section 77-B, argued Arthur A. Ballantine, of counsel for the trustees, who pointed out that the new statute provides that the court shall set "a reasonable allowance." Mr. Ballantine also said the trustees in any event should have their allowances computed on the money handled for Paramount Publix subsidiaries, in spite of the fact that most of these were not, themselves, in bankruptcy.

Malcolm Sumner, representing Paramount bondholders, advocated a part payment, "on account," final payment to be made when the legal points have been decided.

Mr. Joyce is continuing his examinations of former and present Paramount officials in connection with the trustee's action to recover up to $12,700,000 from former directors of the company as a result of stock repurchase agreements from 1928 to 1932.

Paramount home office sales executives, division and district managers returned this week after having completed plans in Hot Springs for a national sales drive with bonuses to last three months, from January 1.

Federal Judge Alfred E. Coxe, at an informal meeting in chambers, expressed impatience at the inability to complete a reorganization plan.

Gaumont-British Sales Force Here Totals 62

The sales force of Gaumont-British in this country now totals 62, according to Arthur Lee, heading the organization here. George Weeks, general sales manager, leaves next week for the Coast, to organize a western sales staff. In New York the company's product, with 16 features planned for the season, will be sold only on a picture-to-picture basis.

Mr. Weeks announced this week Gaumont product has been sold for every first run situation in the country, the majority of the deals covering the first eight releases. Jessie Matthews, musical comedy star, has been signed to a three-year contract, for a maximum of nine pictures. Lillian Bond also has been signed. Sam Warshawsky, formerly with RKO, has joined the publicity department, under the supervision of A. P. Waxman.

In London Tuesday Mark Ostrer announced a debenture issue of $2,500,000.

THIS "BABY" THEME NOT ON THE PROGRAM

It was no fault of the Hollywood producers that the "going to have a baby" theme had a prominent place in the performance at the Isis theatre, in Sidney, Mont., one recent Saturday night. With the turnstile moving swiftly, and the wife of manager F. W. Amsden busy at the box office, there was a sudden interruption. A young woman came hastily from the auditorium to the office, with the brief but important announcement that she was about to become a parent, and that a doctor was the need of the moment. The cashier, mother of a family of four, walked outside, hailed the local medic, assisted in the alighting of the stork, returned to her ticket selling. And the audience knew nothing of the incident.

Tellegen, Once a Glamorous Figure, Dies by Own Hand

Lou Tellegen, once a matinee idol, once one of the most glamorous names on the stage and silent motion picture screen, on Monday stood in the bathroom of the home of Mrs. John T. Cudahy, Los Angeles woman who had befriended him, and seven times plunged a blunt, ordinary scissors into his left side, eventually piercing his heart, a suicide at the age of 52, dying before a doctor could aid him.

Aside from the personality, the tempestuousness which in certain types of roles especially made Telegen's name a byword in theatre and motion picture for almost two decades, the two factors in his life which brought him most attention publicly were his association with the great Sarah Bernhardt, and his marriage to Geraldine Farrar, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Born in the south of Holland of a Dutch mother and a Greek father, he was named Isidor Louis Bernard van Dammeler.

His first New York theatre appearance was as the leading man in "Maria Rosa," opposite Dorothy Donnelly. From that moment he was truly a matinee idol, his popularity carrying through the war period and on into the early 1920's. The last 15 years of his life were spent between New York and Hollywood, as the screen soon claimed, and then the screen public acclaimed him.

Four times he was married, and three times divorced. In recent years, his fortune and his health had left him, and six years ago he was forced into bankruptcy. A minor part in "The Lady Refuses" about a year ago was his last appearance on the stage, and in Columbia's "Call to Arms," recently completed, he was making his talking film debut, and his last screen appearance, again in a minor role.

Elephants, Bombs In This Ball Game

What its promoters modestly called "The Ball Game of the Century" was played Sunday in Nyack, N. Y., the home of Squire and Lady Charles MacArthur and the Squire's running-mate, Ben Hecht. There were the Nyack Eagles, led by MacArthur and Hecht, and the 21 Hangovers from New York City, the team of the follow-up name deriving its title from the headquarters of a large majority of the membership, the old "21 Club" speakeasy, headed by John Carl Krindler and Charles Berns, otherwise Jack and Charlie, the 21's new proprietors. The final score? Well, the Eagles said it was 19-4; the Hangovers claimed it was 22-5, the "ump-teen" umpires said both were wrong, that the Eagles carried off honors, if any, by 12 to 7.

The game was preceded by a parade led by three elephants with gaily-clad mahouts, two uniformed bands and the two teams. The Eagles wore the uniforms of sailors, ranging from ordinary seamen to full-fledged admirals. The Hangovers took the field clad in gray pants, red hose and red and white jerseys, on the chests of which were embossed a brandy mug bearing the figure "21."

High winds and a freezing temperature did not dampen the ardor of players or spectators, but cold fingers and too warm stomachs were considered responsible for most of the errors, the Eagles being charged with 7 misplays, the Hangovers with a paltry 32. The wildness of the pitchers at times was partly explained; some of the baseballs exploded when hit or caught.

Home runs were celebrated by the firing of bombs, which, punctuating the loudspeaker announcements of the game play-by-play, the blaring of the two brass bands and the shouts from the cheering sections, gave a definite July 4th flavor to the contest, which was staged for Nyack's charities and resulted in a generous collection at the gate.

The Nyack Eagles team was composed of "Bugs" Baer, Billy Rose, Harold Ross, Charles Ellis, George Antheil, Jimmy Savo, Sal Savo, Ben Hecht, Paul Gallico, Lee Parcels, Charles MacArthur, Robert Sherwood, Arthur Koenig, Robert Weitman, John Beigano, Arthur Rosson, Robert Maxwell and James Thurber.

Schulberg Liens Filed

Federal income tax liens have been filed in Hollywood against B. P. Schulberg and Mrs. Adeline J. Schulberg, agent. Mr. Schulberg is charged with owing the government $19,910 on his 1933 earnings, and his wife with owing $24,240 for the same year.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

Stars of Hollywood are disposing of the pistols they carried for so many months in favor of vest pocket tear-gas guns, which look like fountain pens. The stars obtain permits from the police, but their excuse that they carry the stuff for protection against bandits and kidnapers is not convincing. They can use the tear gas on themselves when a relative, or an "old pal," or someone from the home town bobs up for a "touch" and a hard luck tale.

Blindfold an expert naturalist and set him down in any strange part of the world, and after he has had time to hear the birds and animals he can tell you approximately where he is.

Curator Lee Crandall of New York's Bronx Zoo took himself to Metro's "Treasure Island" the other evening in order to figure out the location of the island from the evidence of the birds and animals he would see on the screen.

Robert Louis Stevenson's novel gives the impression that the island was in the Spanish Main, but, according to Curator Crandall, not even Darwin could tell where the Metro version of Treasure Island might be located, for he observed a hyacinthine macaw from the interior of Brazil, pileated herons from eastern Peru and Guiana, a cassowary bird from Australia, rhesus monkeys from India, iguanas from the West Indies and other specimens that threw the location of the celluloid story clear across the globe, then picked it up and hurled it right back again.

So bothersome were the problems—budgetary and otherwise—attendant upon the filming of "The Captain Hates the Sea," that, half in fun and wholly in earnest, Harry Cohn asked the Production Code Administration in Hollywood to do him the personal favor of rejecting any new scripts sent to them by Columbia for approval and in which appears anything about the sea, water, steamers, boats, canoes and what-have-you. It's purely a case of "Cohn Hates the Sea."

Carl Laemmle's Universal company will bring to the motion picture screen the life story of "Diamond Jim," one of the most original, most splendid and most independent Americans of the gay decade of the '80's, when Broadway and spenders were spenders.

James Buchanan Brady acquired his moniker of "Diamond Jim" through the tremendous number of perfect diamonds which he owned and displayed so lavishly. He even had a bicycle made of gold and ornamented with diamonds as large as headlights. He gave one to Lillian Russell, then the reigning queen of stage beauty, to whom he made an offer of $1,000,000 in cash if she would marry him. Jim Brady was Broadway's best barometer of shows, attending some 2,500 first night performances.

Parker Morell, author of the story, came quite normally into his interest in "Diamond Jim" Brady. The Morell family has been in the jewelry business for some 400 years. Many of the diamonds which Jim Brady had owned passed through the hands of the firm to that glamorous personality who had a full set of jewelry for every day of the month.

John Wilde Alicoate, Film Daily publisher, urged members and guests attending last Thursday's AMPA luncheon in New York to stay after the meeting to witness slow motion pictures of the Paramount reorganization.

SOCIAL NOTES

London—Merle Oberon, British actress, announces that her widely-publicized engagement to Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, was broken because it might interfere with her motion picture career. "The engagement," she said, "was only to give me an opportunity to think over the idea of leaving the films."

London—Joseph M. Schenck will sail for home this week.

New York—Merle Oberon opened at the 55th Street Playhouse off Broadway, in a motion picture entitled "The Broken Melody."

Hollywood—B. P. Schulberg announced that a reconciliation had been effected with Mrs. Adelaide Schulberg.

Hollywood—B. P. Schulberg's next Paramount production starring Sylvia Sydney will be "Behold My Wife."

It was with bold inconsistency that Samuel Goldwyn spoke up the other day for the press and said that the new movement pointing toward color in motion pictures isn't worrying him because color isn't that important. The very next day he screened for the trade in New York Eddie Cantor's new "Kid Millions," which has a vivid color sequence on which Mr. Goldwyn spent some $200,000.

Pussy's Corner: Not many people know it, but under the recreation roof of the Radio City Music Hall theatre at Rockefeller Center, a young cat basks within the inner sanctums of the Music Hall powers. Her name is Midnight. She was born underneath the theatre's stage while it was still being constructed. Now she roams around unconcerned and uninterrupted while important conferences, cocktail parties and dinners and such go on. All her meals come up on a special tray from the cafeteria down stairs. A fastidious lady is Midnight, in whom perishes the thought of backfence acquaintance. In fact, she has never seen another cat; never has set foot on terra firma or even beheld a tree. Hers is the perfect life, living nestled in the cozy warmth of long-napped rugs set in the middle of Mr. Rockefeller's $250,000,000 city of stone and marble that towers in the sky.

We can now breathe easier. Forty-three and matronly Louella Parsons writes from California in her always-sollicitous motion picture column in William Hearst's newspapers that "Hollywood, so long pictured as a place of revelry, divorces and night life, is settling down to evenings of culture and brilliant discussions." In due time this will have its effect on production. We should not be surprised even a little to hear George Bernard Shaw and Einstein describe the action of a Saturday football game as narrators in the newsreels in place of Graham McNamee and Lowell Thomas. Nor to be told that Nat Levine's Mascot pictures company had done away with its "shoot 'em up" serial shorts and substituted ten chapters of "Hamlet," and that Sam had dispensed with his "Gorgeous Goldwyn Girls" for some six-reelers on psychopannychism, psychonomics, psychophysiology, psychodynamics and other psychs.

This line stood out in bold relief atop Walter Winchell's Broadway gossip column a few mornings back: "Columns Are Made by Fools Like Me."

A bit belated, perhaps, but nonetheless interesting is the information that the King Kong "giant" whose structure appeared to tower so high into the sky in the feature motion picture of the same name, actually stood only 17 inches tall. Trick photography, which at times necessitated four different exposures for the one scene, did the job, behind doors that were heavily guarded and securely locked to protect the secret.

Hollywood is the straw that broke California's half-back. Our movie colony on the west coast is now blamed for the reputed downfall on the gridiron of the University of Southern California's football team. The Daily Trojan, a student newspaper, charges that their big and bouncing heroes of the pigskin are a bunch of softies and have "gone Hollywood" and that they are "toys to henna-haired film beauties and to movie magnates." Blond Mae West and platinum-topped Jean Harlow should feel slighted.

HEARING AWAITED TO SETTLE CODE LEVIES

Independents Protest NRA's New Plan; Delay in Prosecutions Explained by Cummings

A public hearing to thrash out the question of code assessments on producers and distributors is expected to be called by Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth of the NRA as a result of the apparent inability of the industry to agree on what constitutes a fair levy.

Following the lead of W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram and independent member of the Code Authority, other independents have assailed the plan. The date on which the assessments were to have gone into effect had been set at October 30, but protests automatically canceled this deadline.

Many Complaints Received

Complaints have been received by the Administration from Sam Flax, Washington Monogram franchise holder; Hollywood Films Corporation, Boston, also a Monogram exchange; Gold Medal Film Exchange, Philadelphia; First Division Exchanges, Inc., New York, also a Monogram affiliate, and Security Pictures, New York.

In addition, complaints have been made by Majestic Pictures, I. W. Mandell, A. C. Bromberg Attractions, Monogram Pictures of Atlanta and Detroit, Premier Pictures of St. Louis.

Late Wednesday protests were made also by Majestic Film, Seattle; All-Star Features, San Francisco; Capital Film, Chicago; and Monogram of New York.

Many of these exchanges are affiliated with Monogram, but they also must pay separate assessments.

While the Code Authority made every effort to keep the burden on the independents as light as possible, the gist of protests is that applying the lower percentage to companies in the highest brackets places the heaviest burden on the companies least able to carry it.

Gold Medal Film Company assailed the schedule as a "modified sales tax."

NRA Defends Aims

On the other hand, it has been the contention of the Recovery Administration that the film code gives more to the "little fellow" than to his big competitor.

It is pointed out that the assessment schedule as it now stands calls for a contribution of but $18,000 from the independent, instead of the $30,000 first contemplated—which is only 10 per cent of the total levy.

Administration officials said their job was merely to see that a schedule satisfactory to all interests was worked out, but there was some criticism of the apparent inability of the various groups to get together, it being pointed out that the schedules as announced had been given the unanimous approval of the Code Authority's finance committee, including Edward Golden, alternate for Mr. Johnston.

Failure of the NRA to proceed aggressively in recent months against violators of codes has been due to an opinion by the Department of Justice, just made known, that penalties cannot be devised and imposed by executive or administrative orders of Government agencies.

In the opinion, Attorney General Cummings vigorously attacked the tendency of "New Deal" organization to develop penalties of their own.

Other code developments of the week were:

Hearing on the agency committee proposals was postponed from October 31 to November 1.

Contracts being used by distributors for 1934-35 product are not in violation of the code, the Code Authority legal committee ruled.

In many situations modifications of the stringent rules laid down against "Bank Nights" were being made by grievance boards.

At Kansas City, however, distributors were advised by the grievance board to stop film service to J. F. Rigney's Westport theatre for failure to discontinue "Bank Nights."

4 Indicted in Quiz on Operator Union

Three officials and counsel of the Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union of Brooklyn were indicted by the Kings county grand jury over the weekend on charges of conspiracy to defraud members of the union out of $50,000; of grand larceny in the sum of $200, and of one instance of coercion.

The four men held are Arthur Farkash, president of the union; Joseph Blatt, business manager; Ernest Mauro, treasurer, against whom the coercion charge is made, and Joseph Teperson, counsel. Farkash, Blatt and Teperson were each accused of conspiracy to defraud and grand larceny in the second degree. All pleaded not guilty and were released under bail of $1,500 for Mauro and $3,500 each for the other three.

The jury also handed up a presentment expressing the opinion that the union used criminals and racketeers in pressing its demands upon local theatres. The presentment said the union collected large sums of money from members without reasonable explanation and that after the collection there was violence at various theatres.

The charge of coercion against Mauro was based on complaint of Isaac Katz, owner of four motion picture theatres in Brooklyn, who alleged that between April 15 and Sept. 22, 1933, Mauro repeatedly threatened injury to his properties unless he employed members of the Empire State union.

The conspiracy charge against the other three alleged that they conspired to defraud the union members of $50,000 through the collection of $200 from each on representations that the money was to be used as a trust fund to guarantee service.

J. REMI CRASTO

Crasto, Native, To Head RKO Exploitation in India

J. Remi Crasto, for five years publicity manager of Globe Theatres, Ltd., Bombay, India, has been appointed exploitation manager for RKO Radio Pictures, Ltd., in India, with headquarters in Calcutta. He is said to be the first native Indian to hold that type of executive post.

Mr. Crasto is credited with several "scoops" as a suburban correspondent for the Times of India and the Evening News of India, notably interviews with Douglas Fairbanks and Arthur M. Loew. In his new post, he will edit the first exhibitors' journal in India, "Flash." He is credited as well with being the first exploiter in India to utilize an airplane in selling a picture, using a plane to distribute throwaways on "All Quiet on the Western Front." His more or less sensational street ballyhoo stunts in connection with the Regal and Capitol theatres, Bombay, popularized those houses, and won for him the commendation of the governor.

MPTOA Still Opposes ASCAP

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, not completely satisfied with the compromise agreement reached by the exhibitors' emergency committee in its recent opposition to the proposed music tax increases instituted by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, is prepared to go ahead with plans to support the United States Government in its suit against the Society. Allied States already has disapproved the compromise.

The Society on Wednesday filed an 80-page answer to the suit.

Another development last week came with the consideration by the board of aldermen of St. Louis of a proposed ordinance which would impose a $2,500 annual tax on persons or companies collecting royalties on copyrighted music, books or recorded music.

MPTOA ATTACKS RESEARCH COUNCIL FOR "WEASEL-WORDED" POLICIES

Counsel Warns Short's Campaign for Individual Sales Would Hand Over Outstanding Films to Lay Accounts

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America this week launched an open drive against the Motion Picture Research Council, its "weasel-worded policies," the "professional paid reformers" who control its destinies, and its ultimate objective of the promotion of widespread non-theatrical exhibitions in competition with the established motion picture theatre.

In a bulletin addressed to all MPTOA members, Edward G. Levy, general counsel of the MPTOA, warned theatre owners that the campaign of William Harrison Short's Council for federal legislation to force the sale of each picture separately, after it is released, to the highest bidder, would enable the non-theatrical account, using tax-free auditoriums built and equipped with public money and manned by volunteer workers, to acquire without any difficulty all outstanding box office attractions for occasional exhibitions and would deprive the established theatre, running continuously and supplying entertainment every day to the community, of its best drawing pictures.

"Unfortunately," said Mr. Levy, "this scheme is receiving the active support of certain professional exhibitor organizers without theatre investments of their own to protect. Responsible exhibitors should immediately repudiate such spokesmen and expose the sinister motives behind this scheme before it is too late."

Each Theatre a Shopping Nucleus

Speaking before the Better Films Council of New Haven last week, the MPTOA's general counsel said that each one of the 13,000 theatres currently operating in the nation is the nucleus of a trading area and, as the community's principal center of entertainment, the motion picture theatre draws crowds to the shopping centers every day.

"That damage to merchants is inevitable when anything goes wrong with the local theatre, and that merchants are quick to locate the trouble, has been demonstrated over and over again.

"And now, in the face of the known importance of the motion picture theatre to business, and in the face of the concerted effort being made by the President and the nation for national recovery, a movement has developed, under the guise of 'research' and a crusade against salacious movies, which menaces our 13,000 theatres and the trade area surrounding each one.

"I refer to the Motion Picture Research Council, headed by the Rev. Mr. William Harrison Short. This organization which, at least until recently, enjoyed the services of a firm of 'financial consultants' or professional fund-raisers, is now engaged in a campaign to raise $200,000 to further its program."

Mr. Levy told the Better Films Council that Dr. Short's agitation for non-theatrical exhibitions is unfair competition of the

PARKS DIRECTOR NEARLY PRODUCER

Director Arno N. Cammerer of the National Parks Service at Washington recently came uncomfortably close to being the unintentional executive-in-chief of a large scale motion picture production organization — but he found out about it.

It was planned that the boys at the several C.C.C. camps over the country were to have screen diversion in their spare time, but of course of a definitely select character. As those things occasionally happen in government operation, the job was turned over to a bureau chief in the service, who knew considerably more about "parking" than film technique, it developed. Projectors were purchased for camp installation, but the product available from Hollywood did not appear quite suitable to the bureau chief, and he decided to make his own, sound and all. Plans were made for studio and laboratory; recording equipment orders were passed out—generously; the whole due to cost more than $100,000.

Director Cammerer accidentally noted the arrival of strange equipment, made inquiries, discovered that "sounds" necessitating elaborate, expensive portable equipment were to be made in the parks. The sounds: bear grunts, bird calls, geysers, waterfalls. The bureau chief was not aware that "sounds" are not made so expensively for films. The director cancelled the contracts, threw the production plan into the discard—and left a flock of angry salesmen about Washington, who, with fat orders cancelled, threatened to go to the courts.

worst kind and that, in the business of providing entertainment, the theatre could not possibly compete with the school. The theatre must, he explained, pay taxes and must pay its employees according to the scale of wages and salaries fixed by the motion picture code. On the other hand, he said, the school or non-theatrical auditorium would have no taxes to pay, such assessments coming out of the taxpayers' pockets.

"Of the 13,000 theatres in the country there are none, I venture to state, which could successfully compete with commercial motion picture entertainment given in a tax-free auditorium, built with taxpayers' contributions, with employee service donated or paid for by the city and with the municipality paying all the costs of light, heat, power and upkeep."

Mr. Levy told the Better Films Council that the attack on the established motion picture theatre constitutes only a small part of Dr. Short's Research Council program, the remainder of it being based on the four years of research which culminated in the publishing of a volume called "Our Movie-Made Children." Mr. Levy said he did not care to comment on the scientific value of the book, but instead cited the remarks of Dr. Robert S. Woodworth, former head of the department of psychology at Columbia University:

"It is rather too bad that this popular writeup of the Payne Fund's research series 'Our Movie-Made Children' came out in advance of the scientific reports. This book is valueless from the scientific point of view and the reader cannot judge very well how faithfully the author has followed his authorities. It is perfectly easy to see that this book is written to make out a case against the movies, and not to give a fair and unprejudiced picture of the research findings. The author 'picks and chooses' in order to make his case as strong as possible, and he undoubtedly draws his conclusions in stronger terms than the investigators would have done.

"I have been on a large committee that was supposed to advise from time to time on the conduct of the researches. But it was distinctly understood that the committee was not to pass on the findings. This book of Forman's, in particular, was never submitted to us—at least to me—for approval."

Derided by Own Members

Mr. Levy told of an attack on the Research Council by Kate Ogelsbay, Little Theatre executive, and a member of Dr. Short's board, in respect to the Council's "findings," in which Miss Ogelsbay intimated that the writer, Henry James Forman, had "definite notions of the uses to which the book might be put, perhaps conceived before the survey was undertaken."

"Even its own constituency, it would seem, is tiring of the weasel-worded policies of the Motion Picture Research Council," Mr. Levy concluded. "Attacked by its own membership, with the validity of its 'scientific' findings derided by recognized experts and with its plans under fire from the very exhibitors whom it pretends to protect, the Council's plan to stimulate legislative activity should be scrutinized with care.

"Against movements honestly designed to raise the quality of motion picture entertainment there can be no legitimate objection. But it is necessary to distinguish them from the fund-raising activities of paid professional reformers whose aim is to cram their own notions down the throats of America. This country has had one dose of sumptuary legislation, which was enough."

In New York this week, Dr. Short refused to comment, except to say:

"All I know about it is what I have seen in the papers, and from that I would say that Levy is barking up the wrong tree."

The cities taken are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, and San Francisco. The average weekly gross from each of these cities during the entire year 1932 is taken as 100 per cent.

PARAMOUNT OPENS LIVERPOOL THEATRE

"Stag Syndicate" Maneuvers Blamed for Cancellations in Associated British Stock Issue

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Paramount hospitality and Paramount showmanship were both seen at their best in connection with the opening of the organization's new theatre at Liverpool, a striking addition to its "key city" circuit.

J. C. Graham, managing director of Paramount Film Service; A. Segal, financial associate of that company in the project; Al St. John, chief of the theatre department, and many other Paramount executives headed a large party of trade and press guests from London for the inaugural ceremony, which was performed by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool.

The building, which seats 2,670, was packed when, after a fanfare by six trumpeters, the curtain went up for the first time. After the municipal welcome, an extraordinarily full program was submitted, prefaced by an ingenious trailer in which Florence Desmond delivered Hollywood good wishes in the manner of well known Hollywood stars.

The highlights of the evening, apart from "Cleopatra," were a Francis A. Mangan presentation, "Mirrors of Delight," and an ingenious epilogue linking up the new theatre with the just completed municipal triumph, the Mersey Tunnel, by a setting representing the entrance to the Tunnel. Against this background Mr. Thomas C. Reddin, general manager of the theatre, introduced not only celebrities but also the staff. There followed a reception and dance at the Adelphi Hotel.

Designed by Frank T. Verity, F.R.I.B.A., and Samuel Beverley, F.R.I.B.A., who planned the Plaza and Carlton in London and the Paramount Theatres in Paris, Manchester, Newcastle and Leeds, the Liverpool Paramount is a notably spacious house with huge stage and admirable acoustic properties.

Film Shares Mystery

A most unusual series of circumstances attended the Associated British Pictures £2,500,000 debenture issue.

The stock, offered at 101 per cent, was universally regarded as an excellent investment, and over-subscription was not only expected, but actually announced in the form of a statement that lists had been closed at 11.30 on the morning of the offer.

There were then cancellations to the extent, it is said, of £1,000,000 and the final result was that the underwriters were left with from 25 to 27½ per cent of the issue.

The immediate cause of the change of mind in certain investors is assumed to have been the news of the assassination of the King of Jugo-Slavia and M. Barthou, which panicked most markets, but in city circles there has been some very outspoken comment on the incident as an illustration of the methods of a certain "stag syndicate."

This body subscribes largely to all promising new issues and takes a quick profit if the stock goes to a premium.

Color for "Radio Parade"

In the race among British producers to be first with big color effects, British International Pictures seems to have got ahead of its competitors. It plans to make a big spectacular scene for "Radio Parade of 1935" by means of the Spicer Dufay system, and it is likely that this will reach the public before other studio plans have reached the stage of practicability.

Karl Grune has begun shooting at Elstree on "Abdul Hamid," which promises to be B.I.P.'s biggest and costliest yet.

Production on "D'ye Ken John Peel" has been completed at Twickenham by Henry Edwards, who shot exterior hunting scenes with Winifred Shotter, John Garrick and Stanley Holloway.

Paul Robeson has started his scenes in "Bosambo," for London Films.

British & Dominions Shoots Scenes in Italy

A British & Dominions production unit was in Venice, Italy, last week after a week spent in the Dolomites, shooting scenes for "Escape Me Never," which will star Elisabeth Bergner and be released through United Artists. The Italian scenes were photographed by Sepp Allgeier, who functioned similarly for "The White Hell of Pitz Palu" and "The Blue Light." Dr. Paul Czinner is directing.

'CONTAINS GOOD FILM POSSIBILITIES'

That's the De Casseres Verdict on "A Sleeping Clergyman"; Three More New Plays Discussed

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

A SLEEPING CLERGYMAN

The Theatre Guild opened its seventeenth season with a play that has run nearly a year in London. It contains good picture possibilities, but from the rather too polite and sedate reaction of the audience to it I do not feel that this drama of heredity—a kind of "Cavalcade" of alcoholic tuberculosis—will repeat its overseas success here.

"A Sleeping Clergyman," by Jame Bridie, a Scotchman, has, nevertheless, some profoundly absorbing moments. It stretches from 1867 to about 1936 and is in two acts, nine scenes and a prologue before both acts.

For the common run of man the theme is somewhat repulsive and remote. Nor is it handled by Mr. Bridie, in spite of some brilliant dialogue and a beautiful and competent Guild production, in the best possible manner. Its machinery creaks and it gargles and sputters where it ought to speak out clearly. It should be compressed.

But in the hands of a competent scenarist there are here sufficient romance, action, drama, suspense and humor to make it an interesting screen product.

Open on a club in Glasgow in the current decade. A club member is relating to another member over the sherry a story of heredity. A clergyman is snoring over his evening paper (what he has to do with the play or the title is not apparent to these aging eyes and ears).

Back-flash to 1867. A cheap lodging-house in Glasgow. Charles Cameron, a young medico, is dying of drink, overwork and tuberculosis. But he has made tremendous discoveries in the new-fangled "bacteriology." "Bunk!", says his doctor, William Marshall.

Dr. Marshall's sister, Harriet, is Cameron's sweetheart. She is going to have a baby. There's a domestic quarrel between the two over legitimizing the baby. Harriet destroys Cameron's cultures—his life work. He dies. This scene is the high spot.

1885. Wilhelmina, daughter of Cameron and Harriet, is a romantic girl who seduces the hypocritical goody-goody secretary of her uncle, Dr. Marshall.

The second act ends in the murder of the secretary by Wilhelmina, who puts prussic acid in his sherry (in her uncle's office) while he is filling a prescription for his old mother. The motive is that the secretary will not give her up to another man whom she wishes to marry.

The uncle, William Marshall, turns the clock back to save his niece. The girl is acquitted, but subsequently commits suicide after giving birth to twins. (This latter is off-stage stuff—told over the sherry.)

The child of this second hereditary irregularity is a wild girl, Hope, a post-war product, who treats with ridicule her shady ancestry and her twin brother.

The final scenes are during "the great world-plague" (1936). Hope Cameron is old and is engaged in humanitarian work at Geneva. She is cynical about the necessity of saving the human race, but goes on wearily. Her twin-brother (by the murderous, suicidal mother) is now the talk of the world, for his serum has "saved the race."

The picture should, I think, play straight story-stuff, leaving out the theories.

SPRING FRESHET

Owen Davis rumbled into Broadway with another play, the second of the season by that mighty articulator of scenes and stitcher of dialogue.

There is no subject that Mr. Davis has not transformed into play-acting—except the NRA codes. It is whispered he is now working on that rather complicated and nertzy theme.

"Spring Freshet" is the name of Mr. Davis' latest opus (Lee Shubert producing).

And he has tackled the New England Soul, not exactly in the manner of Eugene O'Neill nor yet in the manner of Edith Wharton, but somehow—as is proper—in the kindly, not too serious manner of Davisonian ethics.

Wabbly is the word for this tale.

There is, of course, a picture imbedded in Mr. Davis' play, for it is easier to conceive of a legless Marlene than it is to conceive of Owen Davis without the sly intent to write a play without good, sound, old-fashioned picture angles.

It's the saga of the hard-fisted, hard-headed Levensellers, of old Ply. Rock breed. These Levensellers are, like their New England forbears, Bourbons: they never forget and they never learn and they don't keer a ding.

Isabel Levenseller (Esther Dale) is the Dictator of the clan. She arranges marriages and lays down all codes. She has even made out a will in which the Levensellers are "fixed" in a hundred-year plan.

She has just—as the first act unfolds—brought about the unwilling nuptials of two young people. Marry or lose the jack!

The dour bridegroom has seduced a village girl, who is about to produce another Bucksporter. His cousin, Wesley Levenseller, who lives in the house with his grandmother—the arch-dragon, Isabel—has taken the blame for the "sin." Owny Davis, Jr., is this lad.

And so we dawdle on in this slap-dash and often boresome piece of work to an ending that is neither logical nor good fresh fish. In the final exposé, however, there is a big picture situation.

But the grand hit of the performance was the old servant, Clementina Lynch, as played by Elizabeth Patterson. Clementina is full of wisdom, nerve and homely but deadly cracks at old lady Mussolini.

Miss Patterson's work brought cheers from an audience that otherwise was prone to cough and snore at Mr. Davis' poor execution of a good idea.

GREEN STICK

I went shopping for picture material down in Macdougall street.

Here is the Provincetown Playhouse, spawning-ground for Pulitzer Prize winners and the place where genius has, in past days, sprouted like overnight whiskers on grandma's chin-warts.

The grand old ex-stable has been sterile of late. All genius is now either in Hollywood or hooked up at swell Park avenue bars with rich Communistic patrons.

But the Provincetown broke tomb long enough to give Jay Doten also a chance to razz the "New England Soul" (they simply won't let up on your Uncle Zeke from Down East-aways!).

The Morning family of New Bedford. Old half-daft widow (smell the old New England complex—ha!) hitlers and goerings small family with an iron will that is the quintessence of Caligula, Cromwell, Huey Long and that picture director that I'm always wishing would fall all the way down a Griffith Park hill.

The crippled son was paralyzed when he fell from the mast of a ship owned by his poker-faced, God-fearin' father.

Then there's another widow—same old Plym. Rock stock.

But—lookie!—there cometh a perpendicular-walking niece with her young feller. She's been ter boarding-school. They are both Nietzschean—you know: dish-it-out-and-take-it stuff!

And do they make things hum? You bet! Tragedy, drama and conflict Stalk the Boards. And the boards creak a lot down there.

There is, I believe, some picture matter here. But it's très messy now.

DANCE WITH YOUR GODS

You can't stir the breast or goose-flesh the spine of even the boobiest of the Boy Scouts any longer with the old tom-toms—dickey-dickey-dick! dickey-dickey-dick!—pounded by a raft of Afro-Hollywood extras.

I was, therefore, not moved by Kenneth Perkins' voodoo drama of the deep South, "Dance with Your Gods" (Laurence Schwab producing). Eenie meenie-miny-mo! Fee-fi-fo-fum! O gooseberries!

These superstitions of a few atavistic Negroes down in Louisiana, if true, are of no importance seeing the kind of real Black Magic they are pulling in Europe by and among us lily-whites.

Here is the whole game of spells, abracadabra, incantations, witch doctors, curses, Moth Bouche, transplanting of souls, and everything except sound, real drama.

Nobody in the audience believed this thing. Both on screen and stage it all sounds like pulmotor experiments on a kind of thrill that has forever passed away: the bogey-man thrill.

(Paramount)
Comedy-Drama

While this picture is essentially light but hectic romantic drama, comedy is the predominating entertainment and showmanship quality. The story is told against a continually suggested and occasionally active grand opera, music background. In one instance, the choral rendition of excerpts from "Cavalleria Rusticana," a feature of the anti-climax, should prove a treat to music lovers.

As the picture strives to provide a diversity of entertainment for appeal to both class and mass patronage, the basic theme quite often is lost as various comedy interpolations are inserted. With much here to sell there is also a problem. Picking out the factors that are commercially valuable in different localities will require more than ordinary study and analysis. Actually the story, together with the atmospheric situations added, appears to be the most poignant interest creating feature.

Gerald falls in love with the temperamental opera star, Lisa. Married life—traipsing all over Europe, enduring his wife's tantrums at the interference of her coterie of press agents, maids, cooks and half-brother—proving not the glorious thing he had dreamed, reduction to the status of a dog-walker is the last straw. As Lisa embarks on a Scandinavian concert tour, Gerald returns to the States.

A cable informing her of Gerald's divorce intentions brings her to New York along with her entire harum scarum melange. Although Gerald and Flora think they have everything nicely fixed up, Lisa is too much in love to surrender easily. She invites the pair to her performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and the beauties of the fine music work queer magic on Gerald. Later, at supper, Lisa, a combination of imp and angel, with the assistance of the Doctor, Archimede, Bice and Farnum, plus a bit of hokum conniving, again hypnotizes Gerald and eradicates Flora.

Comedy appears to be the quality upon which to concentrate. However, the "Rusticana" number makes possible a legitimate bid for music lover support. While the picture is clean throughout and its moral value unquestioned, it is an adult attraction. Successful selling is more a matter of complete understanding of what is offered than a dependence upon name values or any particular feature.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Evelyn Prentice

(MGM-Cosmopolitan)
Drama

The real entertainment and showmanship wallop of this picture is confined to the last two reels. Up to that point, it is a formula sophisticated domestic drama. In building to its punch climax, the story, following the what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander idea, has a woman timidly paying her philandering husband back in kind. The groundwork being laid, the show moves into a murder case and courtroom trial, which from a standpoint of tense drama and unique twists is worth the necessary waiting.

The premise for what is to happen being established as John Prentice, successful criminal lawyer, realizes his error, his wife Evelyn apparently kills the man, Kennard, with whom she has carried on an affair. At the urging of his wife, Prentice takes the case of Judith Wilson, actually accused. The trial is going against him until no longer able to stand the district attorney's browbeating of the girl. Then Evelyn, interrupting the court, dramatically confesses that she is the killer.

Stunned by this amazing situation, Prentice, who has come into possession of the dead man's diary, questions his wife on circumstantial facts which seem to involve her completely. Then turning upon Judith Wilson, the girl he is defending, he becomes prosecutor and wrings from her the story of what actually happens. It is proved that his wife did fire a shot; also that Judith did kill the man who had been unfaithful to her. Judith's dramatic self-defense story, supplemented by Prentice's address to the jury, wins a verdict of not guilty, and husband and wife are reunited.

In this picture, the natural big selling arguments are the names of Myrna Loy and William Powell. Second to this asset is the opportunity it permits to try a new tack in interest creation. By informing patrons that even though they have to wait, they will sit in on a situation tense and packed with unusual drama, that will both surprise and thrill them, the way is opened for many good approach angles. Available also is that old stock idea of asking them just what they would do if suddenly they were called upon to defend their own husband or wife and then just hint enough that the way in which Powell does it will be other than they could have imagined.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

(DuWorld)
Drama

Filmed entirely in Ireland, in particular in Dublin and in a small village in the southern part of the country, this dramatic work from a British producer combines drama, romance and a semblance of comedy in rather effectively entertaining fashion. The dialogue is to a large extent in the idiom and accent of the country, but there is not the slightest difficulty in understanding the lines for the most part, the accent being rather nearer to the American than the British.

The picture is an adaptation by Brian Desmond Hurst of a novel, "Night Nurse," by J. Johnston Abrahams, and as such tells its story of romance and romantic complication in a setting, first of a Dublin hospital, then of a typhus-stricken village in the south of Ireland, where the dramatic involvement is worked out to a satisfactory conclusion.

The exhibitor in a community predominantly Irish in descent should have no difficulty in interesting his patrons. The fact that numbered among the cast are several members of the famous Abbey Players, in their first motion picture appearance, may be of value. The group has become synonymous with the best in the Irish theatre. There is little or no drawing power in names per se and title.

Lester Matthews, young and handsome resident doctor in a large Dublin hospital, is fearful that marriage would interfere with his career, and does not permit his attraction to Molly Lamont, a pretty nurse, to go further than an occasional mild flirtation, although she is in love with him. There comes to the hospital as a nurse Nancy Burne, playing the title role. Despite himself, he falls in love with her, she reciprocating his feeling. Eventually they become engaged. Miss Lamont is taken ill. Treating her in her room, Matthews is seen by Miss Burne and the matron in Miss Lamont's arms, and Matthews, following his own standards, declares himself engaged to Miss Lamont, although it is the last thing he wants.

He accepts a call to assist a village doctor in his fight against a typhus epidemic. When he is taken ill himself, and is in danger of death, Miss Lamont renounces her engagement, to send her rival to him, knowing he loves Miss Burne.

There is definite attraction in the authentic atmosphere of the small Irish village, with its antiquated carts, bagpipes and native folk dances and songs. The ready Irish wit, apparent occasionally in the dialogue, serves to brighten and enliven the adaptation.—AARONSON, New York.

Hell in the Heavens

(Fox)
War Comedy-Drama

Here is a war picture, a story of flying men, with all the thrills, action, romance and humor that one expects in such entertainment. Basically a story of men from all walks of life, who thrown into a roaring cauldron, are inspired to heroic deeds by fear, it has a keynote of real human interest. Additionally it is endowed with a brand of theatrical hokum that many times has proved its ability to win the masses.

While dramatic action that takes on the aspect of personal challenge is the predominating element, romantic love interest has not been ignored. That quality is developed by two persons, Conchita Montenegro, the only woman in the picture, and Warner Baxter. Though that is secondary, it is a substantial quality that may be thoroughly accented in selling the picture to create the necessary feminine interest.

Against the realistic atmosphere, there is drama in the romance involving Lieutenant Warner, Aimee and shavetail Hartley. The girl has affection for all the men, but her heart goes out to Warner, even though she always wanted to be dear to Hartley. There's drama to Pop Roget, a bold man, shot down many times and knowing the terror of close death. There is dramatic background to the comedy of Biggs, Davis and McGurk, who talk devil-may-care bravado to cover up their fear. Heroism characterizes the valor that sends De Laage up into the air to die before the Boche menace von Hagen's guns. It's touching drama as it pertains to Corporal Teddy, who dreams of being an air hero but is afraid to fly. There's a thrill to Warner's challenging aerial battle with von Hagen, when as guns jam, Warner drives his plane into that of his foe. There's a thrill to the toast which two brave men, enemies though they are, drink to each other.

"Hell in the Heavens" is not a big picture, but is acceptable as above the average, with many entertainment possibilities to be sold. In story and situation is ample opportunity for effective exploitation illustrating the show's thrilling color.—McCARTEY, Hollywood.

Are You A Mason?

(M. J. Kandel)
Comedy

Comedy in the English fashion, this British-produced film to a large extent contains that type of humor which on occasion has brought a reaction of somewhat limited appeal from the general American audience. There are also the typically English characteristics of speech.

The fact that the yarn has to do largely with a mixup into which a young married man gets himself as a result of his wife's insistence that he join the Masons offers an opportunity for selling copy which plays up the fraternal brother idea.

The cast, consisting wholly of British players, means nothing to the patronage in this country, the title and theme being the strongest selling points. There are several situations which hold a promise of laughs, revolving chiefly about the mother-in-law whose strong belief it is that membership in the Masons is the one manner by which a masculine member of the family may clear himself of anything he may have done previously.

The young man of wealth has been disporting himself in a manner befitting a man with ideas of play during the absence of his wife. When she is about to return he realizes he has forgotten to join the Masons, as urgently requested by his wife at the direction of her mother. His father-in-law is supposed to be some sort of high potentate in his local lodge. The young husband's mind is still more disturbed, after telling his wife he has joined, when he learns the in-laws are due to arrive at any moment.

From the time of their arrival the film is devoted chiefly to the manner in which he devises and re-devises schemes to evade being pinned down to anything definite relative to the Masons. He takes two friends into his confidence, one of them a suitor for the hand of his sister-in-law. It is early apparent that father-in-law is no more a Mason than he is, but has been using the subterfuge for many years to gain freedom at least one night each week. It has been mother-in-law's practice for many years to hold her husband in check by continuous reference to an escapade in the past with a French girl. Using a young actor friend, made up as a girl, to impersonate the "daughter" of the escapade, the young husband only succeeds in further complicating his own situation, until finally the situation is cleared as the sister-in-law's fiance, the only real Mason in the lot, comes to the rescue.—AARONSON, New York.

Distributed in the United States by M. J. Kandel. A Julius Hagen production, produced at Twickenham Studios, London. Directed by Henry Edwards. Musical director, W. L. Trytel. Running time, 85 minutes. Release date, Oct. 29, 1934.

Evensong

(Gaumont-British)
Musical Romance

From the Knoblock-Beverley Nichols play, this is a good example of the type of super-musical in which the vocal and instrumental features, a legitimate part of the plot, are drawn chiefly from the operatic classics. There is a definite appeal to the music-lover, for Evelyn Laye, starred, sings excellently and Conchita Supervia magnificently, with the mass general audience played to with a story which pictures the Cinderella-like transformation of a poor Irish girl into a world famous prima donna, her love-adventures and her tragic death after loss of voice and fame.

Its box-office classification is much the same as that of "One Night of Love," with the rather important difference of the tragic ending. Though not artistically necessary, this is certainly dramatically effective; Irela, the prima donna, aging and out-sung during a London gala performance of "La Boheme" by Baba, a young Spanish rival, falls dead while listening to a gramophone record of her own young voice, with which she is seeking to drown the triumphant tones of Baba, singing to an admiring crowd in the green room.

There is charm in the presentation of Irela's idyll with an Austrian archduke in Vienna, broken by the war, and there's piquancy of incident and humor, as well as high musical value, in the depiction of her triumphant course through Europe, from Paris to Rome, Venice, Monte Carlo, Budapest. Excellent acting by Carl Esmond and Evelyn Laye makes the love story, whimsical in its development from a rich man's pursuit with bouquets and jewels into genuine passion, a real audience asset. There is good character work from Fritz Kortner and splendid singing by Browning Mummery.

Maggie McNeill, an Irish girl with a fine natural voice is, in pre-war days, helped to Paris, and an adequate training, by George Murray, a musician. She abandons George for a career as Madame Irela.

In Vienna, a handsome young man throws a bouquet in which she discovers a necklace. In Venice, she consents to acknowledge him, Count Ehrinberg, as her lover, and at a command performance before the aged Emperor, Francis Joseph, Irela learns that her lover is really the Archduke Theodore.

Irela, singing to an audience of soldiers in France, again meets her first lover, George Murray. Later she finds him in a hospital for mental victims of the War. He does not recognize her or her songs.

The years pass. Irela is aging, but refuses to see that her voice is failing. She creates a terrible storm when Baba, young Spanish girl, is given equal prominence with her. In her dressing room, Irela once again receives Theodore, a widower, an outlaw. She dismisses him because she thinks he is inspired by pity for her failure and tries to compel her manager to consent to a farewell tour of South America. He tells her the truth.

Evelyn Laye (an American value) and Conchita Supervia, a new discovery in international opera, are the talking points in a musical sense. The climax offers obvious opportunities to ingenuity in showmanship.—ALLAN, London.

Loyalties

(Associated Talking Pictures)
Drama

The adaptation to the screen of this strongly dramatic stage play by the late John Galsworthy, produced in England by Associated Talking Pictures and distributed in this country by Har-old Auten, has maintained the dramatic vitality of the original play, but at the same time presents an unintentional obstacle to the selling of the picture in the regular run of American theatres. That problem revolves about the unusually pronounced King's English accent of virtually all the cast, at times, especially in the case of the feminine players, becoming almost unintelligible.

The exhibitor individually will have to be the judge of whether that condition will be a factor in his community. On the other hand, the Galsworthy origin of the film, in certain communities at least, should have a definitely strengthening influence. The play may be remembered as one of Galsworthy's most notable works.

In its exemplification of racial and social prejudices, its emphasizing of the importance to a certain social stratum of England of what is severely construed as the "sporting thing to do," the film deals in basic human relationships, and as such has a strong, wide appeal. The loyalties involved are of two varieties, on the one hand a loyalty to social caste and tradition, on the other to a sense of self-respect and to race. The result is the film's thematic conflict.

Selling points are the story's conflict and the Galsworthy authorship of the play from which it is taken, with mention of the one name in the English cast which may mean something to the average American film audience, that of Basil Rathbone, the pivotal character in the picture. In the conflict of which the film tells, there is naturally a considerable lack of rapid movement and action.

Rathbone, a wealthy young Jew, is made to feel very much a certain subtle ostracism at a house party of the clannish social set. In his room later he discovers the theft of a large sum of money from his wallet and insists on calling the police, a justifiable action, but considered by fellow guests and host as "not the thing to do." Then he plainly accuses another guest, Miles Mander, a "broke" clubman, of the theft. A bargain is struck, whereby it is proposed that if Rathbone will withdraw his charge, his entrance into an exclusive club will be arranged. He agrees.

When he is turned down anyway, he presses his action, and Mander, to save face, brings a libel action. When, during the trial, it is discovered he was the thief, his attorneys withdraw the case. Mander, pressed by a police warrant, commits suicide rather than face a jail term and disgrace, although having had his satisfaction for insult to self and race, Rathbone attempts to aid him to escape. Joan Wyndham, as Mander's young wife, bears the brunt of the wrongdoing of her husband.—AARONSON, New York.

The Green Pack

(British Lion)

Mystery Drama

Edgar Wallace's last story, and as ingenious in plot as most of his work, "The Green Pack" offers good mystery value, arising from the uncertainty as to which of three men has committed a murder. They have agreed to deal out a deck of cards with the understanding that the one drawing the ace of spades is to do the shooting.

This is the best angle of exploitation, but the general good level of the acting by a British cast is another point.

Martin Creet, a financier, puts down $10,000 to finance a gold prospecting expedition of three of his friends, Larry Deans, Mark Elliott and Tubby Storman. While they are in Africa he takes advantage of the fact that Larry's fiancée, Joan Thurston, has contracted gambling debts to force her to become his mistress.

The prospecting party finds a rich gold field. Creet, taking Joan and her father with him, goes to Africa and, at the port, reveals that he intends, by means of a legal trick, to seize the gold field instead of sharing with the others.

The three agree to kill him and deal the cards as described. Creet is found shot.

The card game is the big scene, but patrons may be assured of a very good performance by Hugh Miller as the scheming financier, with John Stuart and Aileen Marson as efficient leads.—ALLAN, London.

Krazy's Waterloo

(Columbia)

Excellent Fun

Rapidly shifting action, and lots of it—the secret of the cartoon—has been captured and put to its best use in this release of Charles Mintz's cartoon series. Ideas snap like fire-crackers with something new each half a minute. Krazy Napoleon summons his trusty army of three and goes to war. The giant Russian bugler summons his bugle corps from his beard. Bombs and cannonballs stop Krazy's infantry and the artillery. A pin deflates the third, the general, into a buck private and he also tries in vain to cross No Man's Land. Finally Krazy shoves off in his snubby motorboat for Helena. It's an A-1 comic.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Fixing the Stew

(RKO Radio)

Good Comedy

The fact that this is entertaining comedy is due almost entirely to the comic ability of Leon Erroll. That he is a perpetual inebriate might have the effect of counting against the subject, but it is amusing nevertheless. Erroll, a highly amusing drunk, is the victim of a nervous shock, prepared by his wife and mother-in-law to cure him of drinking. When his home and its occupants go entirely nutty, he is cured, but it is finally discovered that mother-in-law has replaced him as the family inebriate.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Two Alarm Fire

(Paramount)

Fair

This, although not quite up to the standard of previous Popeye the Sailor cartoons, is none the less lively and in the Popeye fashion amusing. We find Popeye and his traditional husky rival in charge of neighboring fire engines. When Popeye's girl is caught in a burning building, they go to the rescue. Popeye is bested at first, but a mouthful of his ever-present spinach does the trick.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Concert Kid

(Columbia)

Monotonous

Scrappy is impresario for the baby violinist in this number of the Charles Mintz series. The reel suffers from sameness, the animators sticking to an idea as if held by the gum that provides what little action the picture has. There is more audience fun in one minute of "Krazy's Waterloo" than in the seven minutes of "Concert Kid."—Running time, 7 minutes.

Keeping Time

(Paramount)

Interesting

In this number of the Grantland Rice Sports-lights series is pictured the major part that correct timing plays in the execution of various sports, as exemplified by individual champions. Among them are Fred Perry, tennis; Bill Terry, baseball; Paul Runyan, golf; George Spitz, high jumping; Bill Bothran, running. With Ted Husing's clean-cut explanatory dialogue, the subject appears lively, active and interesting.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Laughing with Medbury

in Malaysia

(Columbia)

Some Fresh Shots

Introduced into this Futter-produced travelogue is patter by John P. Medbury connecting up shots of the Malaysian fire department going into action, though the mobile hydrant, the elephant, pauses too long loading up in the river. A certain sameness of the gag monologue was noted, perhaps accounted for by the laugh-defying atmosphere of a projection room.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Spice of Life

(Columbia)

Jokes from the Press

Humor selected from the Literary Digest is the bulk of this Mentone series, and there's likely at least one bit of wit to appeal to the risibles of each patron. The introduction and closing remarks by Doc Rockwell do not accomplish their apparent objective of contrast; on the contrary, they slow up the picture at the start and take the audience away from the humor at the end.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Old Kentucky Hounds

(Paramount)

Fair

Where there may be audience interest in the performance of severely trained dog players, this subject may be found entertaining. It tells the story, with appropriate off-screen voices and a variety of canine performers, of the southern plantation owner, his daughter, and his trainer, and the romance that is nearly broken when dirty work at the races nearly costs the colonel the important race. But it is all straight in the end, the subject being fair as entertainment.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Flying Pigskins

(Columbia)

Ideal Seasonal

Splendidly pertinent to the gridiron season, now at its height, is this reel of the World of Sports series. The story by Jack Kofoed, Hearst writer on sports, is narrated skilfully and peppily by Fred Uttal, the while thrill plays from big games are screened after preliminaries showing the sport being played by children, women, the Japanese, and a rugby game in England in which each "eleven" includes the residents of an entire village.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Happy Pilgrims

(Universal)

Amusing

An animated cartoon burlesque on the old story of Miles Standish and John Alden, his pal, this is entertaining cartoon material. When tough Miles is too bashful to tell Priscilla he loves her he gets his buddy, John, to do it for him. John does it too well, and Miles brings his Indians for revenge. But their appetites are stronger than their anger, and all's well that ends well, except for the town crier.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Counsel on De Fence

(Columbia)

Slapstick

Harry Langdon clings to several of the familiar handles of silent day slapstick in this comedy. He gallops about in his underwear, he fells a cop with a paving brick. And yet the picture has its fresh moments, as well as a bit of story that is not of a mold. When Langdon's associate in court fails to interchange bottles and Langdon empties the bottle of poison down his throat, to convince the jury, he goes through a series of stomach-pumpings, only to have the prosecutor come around with another doctor to put him through the ordeal again.—Running time, 20 minutes.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

Hollywood Correspondent

Central Casting Bureau has just inaugurated its Advisory Council, consisting of 20 members drawn from church, civic, education and welfare associations.

At a luncheon in the board room of the Hays office here last week, Campbell McCulloch, manager of Central, explained that the organization, one of the largest employment agencies in the world, had many complicating problems to solve among the 8,000 registered for extra work in the films with but an average of 350 jobs a day handed out.

Central Casting expends more than $2,500,000 annually in pay checks for extras, no commission being exacted, and during the eight years of its existence a total of $20,000,000 has been paid out.

More than 4,000 complaints have been filed with Central Casting since the new "complaint" department was installed October 1. Of this number, 750 asked for personal interviews, 3,000 telephone complaints were made and 300 letters received, all expressing their individual claim for work.

According to Allan McDonald, director of the bureau, it will require four weeks to interview all the plaintiffs. Of the cases already closed, actors unable to get work in the extra ranks were found positions outside the picture business. Of this group, 35 jobs were permanent.

No one appealing to this department is refused assistance. Central Casting has at its disposal 160 agencies upon which it can call to give immediate attention to any emergency case.

Giannini Cites British Unity

"England, as an industrial nation, and England, as a government, is realizing the power of the screen."

It was Dr. A. H. Giannini, banker, speaking, on his return to Hollywood after two months in Europe.

"The British government is lending every aid to the picture industry there," he said.

"While her producers have made only a few films suitable for world market, optimism in the industry is high and theatres are doing big business.

"The one fly in the ointment with English producers is their dealings with middle men. One producer went to an insurance company that takes all manner of "risk" policies, and had them write one on the assumption of the gross a film would establish after it was produced.

"With this insurance policy, the producer went to his bank and secured his financing. Producer and banker in England must establish direct contact if stability is to be established and confidence maintained.

"In Italy, Mussolini, who always recognized the value of the screen in his own country, is now contemplating film production suitable for the world at large. Mussolini told me that he was particularly well impressed with the work of Frank Capra and Frank Borzage, both Italians.

"In my travels, I found that the public do not shop for their entertainment according to 'country of origin.' Audiences are only interested in entertainment values. That's why American films have maintained their supremacy. Other countries still want to teach and instruct."

Renting the Jools

According to the customary rental charge of 10 per cent of actual value, exacted from studios for props, Paramount should pay William Howard Hoefler $300,000 for the first week rental on his collection of jewelry brought here from New York for use in "The Gilded Lily," in which Claudette Colbert is the glittering shrine for the jewels.

It is not likely that such a sum will be paid the New York jeweler, as consideration. The figure in all probability will not reach one per cent of the appraised value. The jewels are being guarded by a detachment of special guards equipped with enough artillery to mow down an army.

Universal claims the scoop of the season by breaking forth with a feature production based on the experiments of Dr. Robert E. Cornish, who succeeded in bringing a "dead" dog back to life. Experiments have been going on for months at his laboratories in Berkeley, and during this time, Universal, with the aid of Dr. Eugene Frenke, has had cameras trained on the work without any other film company knowing anything about it. Coupled with the technical side of the experiments is an interesting story. It will be released soon, under the title "Life Returns."

two, Universal, Fox, Twentieth Century and Majestic one each.

Most important of the Fox trio starting is the Will Rogers picture, "The County Chairman," in which he will be supported by Evelyn Venable, Louise Dresser, Berton Churchill, Kent Taylor, Frank Melton, Stepin Fetchit, Robert McWade and Charles Middleton. The second is "Twenty-Four Hours," the cast of which features Mona Barrie, Gilbert Roland, John Halliday and Mischa Auer. A Spanish dialogued feature, "Insure Your Wife," presenting Raul Roulien, Conchita Montenegro, Barbara Leonard, Antonio Moreno and Louis Albern, completes the Fox schedule.

Paramount Begins on Three

In the Paramount group, the outstanding number appears to be "Caprice Espagnole" (tentative title), starring Marlene Dietrich with Joel McCrea, Lionel Atwill, Edward Everett Horton, Alison Skipworth, Don Alvarado and Edwin Maxwell. Started also was "The Gilded Lily," with Claudette Colbert in the leading role, the support including Fred MacMurray, Ray Milland, Ed Gargan and Forrester Harvey. To complete the trio, "Wings in the Dark" was put into work. In this, Myrna Loy is teamed with Gary Grant in the leads, and Roscoe Karns, Arthur Hohl and Russell Hopton are featured.

Columbia started Lee Tracy, Jimmy Durante, Sally Eilers, Fred Keating and Florence Rice in "Carnival," and at the same time put "Passport to Fame" before the cameras. Edward G. Robinson is starred, with Jean Arthur, Fred Keating, Etienne Girardot and Donald Meek also listed.

The newly starting Mascot feature, "The Marines Have Landed," will present William Haines, Esther Ralston and Conrad Nagel in the principal roles.

Warner Completes Two

A recapitulation of finished product shows Warner Brothers has completed shooting on "Sweet Adeline," a musical, the cast of which is headed by Irene Dunne and Donald Woods, with Ned Sparks, Hugh Herbert, Joseph Cawthorn, Winifred Shaw and Nydia Westman featured in the support. Also transferred to the cutting room was "Racing Luck," in which Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor, Roscoe Karns, Henry Kolker, Frankie Darro and Gavin Gordon will be seen.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer completed "Repeal," in which Carole Lombard, Chester Morris, Leo Carrillo, Sam Hardy, Zasu Pitts and Nat Pendleton interpret the Charles Francis Coe story. Fox finished "East River," in which Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe again are co-starred and Grace Bradley, Marjorie Rambeau, Ruth Peterson, Roger Imhof and Charles Bickford featured.

The contribution from Universal is "Night Life of the Gods," starring Alan Mowbray and Florine McKinney, with Irene Ware, Peggy Shannon and players representing many of the gods and goddesses of ancient mythology in support. Twentieth Century completed the first picture on its 1934-35 program, "The Mighty Barnum." Wallace Beery is starred, and the cast includes Adolphe Menjou, Janet Beecher and Rochelle Hudson.

Last of the seven finished pictures is Majestic's "The Perfect Clue," the cast of which is headed by David Manners, Skeets Gallagher, Dorthy Libaire and Betty Blythe.

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

THE LITTLE MINISTER

Radio

In theme, production credits and quality, per-sound and audience interesting possibilities, this story promises to parallel Radio's 'Little Women' a year ago. While there is no similarity in the story, it appears to have the same relative entertainment quality that made that classic one of the year's outstanding successes.

'The Little Minister' is an old and familiar story. Written by James M. Barrie, whose 'What Every Woman Knows' (MGM) will be released shortly, it has had a great American sale in book form. As a stage play, it is one of the vehicles by which Maude Adams is remembered. The screen play is by Sarah Y. Mason and Victor Heerman, who adapted 'Little Women.' Direction is by Richard Wallace.

Katharine Hepburn has the role of Babbie, the wily, artful little gypsy girl. John Beal, noted on the legitimate stage and seen on the screen in 'Another Language' and 'Hat, Coat and Glove,' plays the part of the Little Minister. While they are the story's central figures, the remainder of the supporting cast is composed of well-known screen names, among them Lumsden Hare, Alan Hale, Billy Watson, Andy Clyde, Donald Crisp, Leonard Carey, Barlowe Borland, Mary Gordon, Herbert Bunston, Ivan Simpson and Harry Barresford.

Located in Scotland, timed to the 1880's, 'The Little Minister' is a story of conflict and heroism—a fervent love versus a rigid and righteous conscience. Its tense drama is counterbalanced by unique romance and carries a comedy vein that in contrasting realism creates a naturalness readily understood and appreciated.

As in the case of 'Little Women', the producers have devoted months to research for authenticity and faithfulness in backgrounds, costumes and character. More than the usual time has been devoted to production. Undoubtedly the picture will be given the benefit of an extensive supporting campaign.

THE PERFECT CLUE

Majestic

As the title indicates, this is a dramatic mystery picture. Yet it is one in which other elements, particularly romantic love interest, play a lively part. But the idea which is readily read into the title and the manner in which the unique clue is woven into the story appear to be the outstanding exploitation assets.

The original story is by Lolet Ann Westman, adapted by Albert DeMond, scenarist on such pictures as 'The Sphinx,' 'Shadows of Sing Sing,' and 'Sensation Hunters.' Added dialogue is contributed by Ralph Ceder and Don Brown. Direction is by Robert Vignola, remembered for many silent day successes, several outstanding European-produced pictures and recently Monogram's 'Broken Dreams.'

David Manners and Dorothy Libaire, seen in 'Bondage' and recently in 'Jennie Gerhardt' and 'Picture Brides,' have the leads. Supporting players include Skeets Gallagher, Ralf Harolde, William P. Carleton, Betty Blythe, Charles H. Wilson, Robert Glecker and Pat O'Malley.

The modern yarn has the girl, Miss Libaire, leaving her father's home in rage, as she learns he is planning to marry again. About to elope,

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

'The Cutting Room' is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

she flees from her fiancé, is picked up in a taxi, driven by an ex-Sing Sing convict, Manners, to be whirled into a thrilling series of situation that involve murders, robberies, wrongful accusations, jail. By means of a bowling tenpin, the girl discovers a clue that clears Manners of suspicion and brings about a situation that not only permits her father to marry the woman of his choice, but finds her given the approval of her disappointed sweetheart in her marriage to Manners.

Packed with action and excitement, the title and theme content of the story make possible a line of interest creating and novel exploitation.

BACKFIELD

MGM

A seasonal and topical football yarn, this one indicates an entertainment and showmanship trend somewhat apart from the stereotyped. Original story and adaptation are by Byron Morgan, who wrote Laurel and Hardy's 'Sons of the Desert', and J. Robert Bren, who did 'Looking for Trouble.' Direction is by Russell Mack, who made 'The Spirit of Notre Dame.'

In the story, in which professional football is the villain, four boys whose interest in football playing was born when they were paroled to a playground, grow up and through high school and a couple of years on the varsity team prove a backfield comparable to the famous 'Four Horsemen.' With many scenes atmospheric of college life and romance intervening, the yarn reaches its climax when the star pig-skinner is made an offer to turn 'pro.' He is torn between college loyalty, love of the girl who grew up with him and the desire for big money. The coach learns about the deal and suspends the quartet. As they learn the lesson of life and that not all that glitters is gold, they dash into the big game and win it.

Robert Young and Betty Furness are the hero and heroine of the story. Supporting players include Leo Carrillo, in the comedy relief as campus tailor; Ted Healy, the 'pro' promoter; Stuart Erwin, Preston Foster, Robert Livingstone, Norman Phillips, William Tanan and Franklin Parker.

The fanfare of football, more intense than ever this year, is the peg upon which exploitation should be hung. The procedure is familiar, yet novelty in creation and application should be sought.

BACHELOR OF ARTS

Fox

Many things commercially valuable but not ordinarily found in straightaway production are available in this novel comedy romance story of modern college life. For a change this is a story of college boys and girls; there's no football game or athletic heroism, rather it's a cross section view of the thousands of girls and boys who are today's collegiate student body.

The story is by John Erskine, Columbia professor, noted humorist and author of many successful novels. His position gives him a natural insight into the things of which he writes. The screen play is by Lamar Trotti. Music and lyrics are by Richard Whiting and Sidney Clare. Louis King is the director and John Stone, successful director in the past, is the producer.

Told against the human interest true-to-life atmospheric background of college people today, 'Bachelor of Arts' is the comedy romance of a wealthy young boy with $300 a month spending money, and a poor girl, working her way through school.

Tom Brown and Anita Louise, the youthful sweethearts of 'Judge Priest', are the centers of romantic interest. Henry B. Walthall, outstanding in 'Judge Priest' and 'Viva Villa', is the kindly, understanding professor. In the role of his wife, Mae Marsh is teamed with Walthall for the first time since they were together in 'Birth of a Nation.' Arline Judge is the sophomore campus vamp who nearly upsets the romantic appellation. Stepin Fetchit, 'frat' janitor, is responsible for much of the comedy. Other players are Frank Albertson, currently in 'Enter Madame'; George Meeker, now in 'Broadway Bill' and 'Richest Girl in the World'; Frank Melton, currently being seen in 'The White Parade,' 'Handy Andy' and 'Judge Priest'; Berton Churchill and John Arledge.

Something entirely new in collegiate yarns appears to be the line to create popular interest, something which the present title hardly conveys.

THE WHITE COCKATOO

Warner

This story is melodramatic mystery, novelty woven out of an unusual situation, and carrying a light romantic touch. To build its color, the locale chosen is an ancient chateau, transformed into a hotel, on the bleak French coast. The production is adapted from a novel by Mignon G. Eberhardt, several of whose books have been best sellers. The screen play is by Ben Markson, who did 'The Case of the Howling Dog' and collaborated on 'Here Comes the Navy', and Lillie Hayward, an associate on the scenario of 'Registered Nurse' and also a collaborator with Markson on 'Big Hearted Herbert.' Direction is by Alan Crosland, maker of 'Midnight Alibi' and 'The Personality Kid.'

The personnel interpreting the story is headed by Jack Muir and Ricardo Cortez. Featured players included Gordon Westcott, Ruth Donnelly, Walter Kingsford, Minna Gombell and John Eldridge. Lesser roles are occupied by Armand Bordes, Bentley Hewlett, Addison Richards, Georges Renevan, Andre Cheron, and a silent day star, Pauline Garon.

The story is that of a girl who must share a large inheritance with an unseen brother who will be identified by presenting the second half of a paper which she holds. Various forces seek to kill her and thus get the money rightfully hers. Several murders are committed and the man who sought to befriend the terrorized victim finds himself accused. Amid much suspense packed excitement, Cortez unravels the mystery, unmasks the villains and the killer, and sets the stage for a romantic finale.

Showmanship that sells exciting, baffling mystery is the brand needed to popularize this production.

THE RIGHT TO LIVE

Warner

Drama with a potent heart appeal is the essence of this production. It's the story of two brothers and a woman. Modern in atmosphere and located in England, it is a yarn of conflict and duty. One man, seriously crippled, begs his brother to entertain his wife, to bring some pleasure into a drab life. The two fall in love, a situation which, when discovered by the first man, builds to tense suspense in which anything might happen. It is, however, climaxed by a logical though unusual finale.

The original story is by Somerset Maugham, whose recent Radio production 'Of Human Bondage,' proved widely popular. The screen play was done by Ralph Block, credited with 'Gambling Lady,' 'Massacre' and the forthcoming 'I Am a Thief.' Direction is by William Keighley, maker of 'Journal of Crime,' 'Doctor Monica,' and the current 'Big Hearted Herbert.'

Josephine Hutchinson, who made her screen debut in 'Happiness Ahead,' is the woman in the case. Colin Clive, recently in 'The Key' and 'One More River,' is her husband. George Brent, lately in 'Stamboul Quest' and 'Desirable,' is the brother with whom Miss Hutchinson falls in love. Supporting players include Peggy Wood, seen in 'Handy Andy'; the screen veterans Henrietta Crosman and C. Aubrey Smith, and the much younger Phyllis Coghlan and Leo Carroll, who was in 'Sadie McKee.'

Promising to be a distinctive woman's picture, pitched to a rather serious key and of a tempo characteristic of Maugham's works, it deals with a situation which often has proved its dramatic entertainment value. Therefore it calls for a type of showmanship accentuating its human interest qualities.

STRANGE WIVES

Universal

Domestic comedy, a brand of entertainment that many times has proved its entertainment and commercial value, is the element of this story. But it's radically different domestic comedy. 'Strange Wives' is the story of a young American who marries an exotic Russian girl and then has a horde of in-laws from beyond the Urals descend upon him. The problem is solved in hilarious style. Applying business principles, he marries them all off and gets rid of the menace to his domestic bliss in a way that many a man would like to do.

The story is adapted from Edith Wharton's 'Bread Upon the Waters,' which was serialized in Cosmopolitan. The screen play is by Gladys Unger and James Mulhouser. Richard Thorpe, recently credited with 'Secrets of the Chateau' and 'Cheating Cheaters,' is the director.

Roger Pryor, currently in 'Belle of the Nineties,' is the harassed hero. A newcomer, June Clayworth, who has played in many stage hits on the New York stage, occupies the role of the exotic Russian girl. Included in the cast are Esther Ralston, recently in 'Romance in the Rain'; Hugh O'Connell, seen in 'Gift of Gab'; Ralph Forbes, now in 'Barretts of Wimpole Street' and 'The Fountain'; Caesar Romero, Francis Sullivan and Valerie Hobson, two juveniles seen in 'Great Expectations'; Leslie Fenton, Ivan Lebedeff, Doris Lloyd, Claude Gillingwater, Harry Cordin and Greta Meyer.

Being an unusual concoction of entertainment both nonsensical farce and hectic action and dialogue, and taking the title tone as a cue, showmanship that convinces patrons of a laugh a minute is seen as the character of exploitation.

CALL TO ARMS

Columbia

This is a topical drama, dealing with the effects of the present day 'Red' communistic furore and the ways and means which an old Civil War veteran adapted to squelch it within his own family. The original story, screen play and direction are by Willard Mack, who also plays the lead role. Actor, author of 'Madame X,' 'Caught Short' and 'Reducing,' Mack also directed 'What Price Innocence' and 'Broadway to Hollywood.'

Supporting roles are occupied by Esther Ralston, Ben Lyon, Charles Sabin, Sheila Manners and Carlyle Moore, Jr. as Mack's children; William Bakewell, in love with Sheila Manners; William V. Mong and Claude Gillingwater as veteran buddies; Wera Engles as a communistic Joan d'Arc, and the late Lou Tellegen as a red agitator.

The comparatively recent San Francisco strike serving as an initial background, Mack goes to the Sawtelle Soldiers' Home when he learns that two of his boys have been bitten by the communistic bug. Tolerant of the boys' viewpoint, he attends a meeting only to break it up when he considers the talk contrary to the patriotic principles for which he had fought. Daughter Mary's happiness being his chief objective, now what his boys have proved disappointments, a strike in the factory in which Bakewell is employed sends the old veteran into action. Rallying his old buddies, breaking into the Home's arsenal, the boys in blue march again to round up the red ring-leaders and save Lyon and Sabin from an act of anarchism.

Local conditions, which the showmen on the spot are naturally more familiar with than anyone else, should dictate the manner in which this production is exploited.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR

Warner

To an unusual degree the success of the latest previous picture of the principals has an important significance in the showmanship potentialities of 'Devil Dogs of the Air.' Many of the persons associated with 'Here Comes the Navy' are engaged in the making of this. Its stars, James Cagney and Pat O'Brien, again are teamed, and Frank McHugh, the comedy relief, again is featured. The man who made

'Here Comes the Navy,' Lloyd Bacon, is directing. The original story is by John Monk Saunders, who, starting with 'Wings' and running down through 'Dawn Patrol,' the 'Eagle and the Hawk' and 'Ace of Aces,' has specialized in aerial thrill yarns. The screen play is by Earl Baldwin, a collaborator on 'Here Comes the Navy'; the adaptation by Malcolm Stewart Boylan, who was associated with 'Shipmates' and 'Hell Divers.' It is being photographed by Arthur Edeson, who was the cameraman on 'Here Comes the Navy.'

Having clicked once as a dominating unit, the mentioned personnel can be reasonably expected to do likewise again. While, as indicated by the title, the yarn is entirely different, the entertainment and showmanship atmosphere is similar. Cagney, a sensational flying circus stunter, joins the Marine Aviation Corps and comes under the command of his boyhood idol, O'Brien, who stands all of Cagney's cocky bragging and boasting until Cagney tries to cut in on his girl, Margaret Lindsay. That takes care of the romantic love interest angle. Thrill and sensationalism are left for the aerial stuff, which promises to be entirely novel in its hair-raising quality as well as comedy color. Included are the recent maneuvers of the Marine Flying Corps, in which hundreds of planes and battleships and thousands of fliers and sailors participate.

The smash showmanship of this is evident. Made in cooperation with the Navy Department, it can be expected that department will be willing to cooperate in exploitation.

THE GILDED LILY

Paramount

Two pictures in which Claudette Colbert starred should be kept in mind in publicizing this production. In many ways it combines many of the qualities of 'Torch Singer' and 'It Happened One Night.' The story, intriguing romance, is by Melville Baker and John Kirkland, who did 'Zoo in Budapest.' The screen play is by Claude Binyon, who did 'Ladies Should Listen,' 'Many Happy Returns,' and the dialogue on 'Shoot the Works.' Direction is by Welsey Ruggles, who recently made 'Bolero' and 'Shoot the Works.' Music and lyrics are by Arthur Johnston and Sam Coslow.

The story is that of a modern office girl, whose joys, pleasure and dreams are those of almost every stenographer. Loved by a young newspaper man, she in turn falls in love with an English noble traveling incognito. Even though he enjoys her Thursday night trips to Coney Island and popcorn eating, he soon jilts her. To alleviate her disappointment, the newspaper man, ballyhooing her as a girl who spurned nobility, builds her into a sensational and glamorous night club attraction. In England, the toast of London, she reverses the tables on the man who once jilted her to give her affection to the reporter who made her famous.

Two leading men, Ray Milland, seen in several recent Paramount features, and Fred MacMurray, stage and radio star, who will be seen in Radio's 'Portrait of Laura Bayles,' support Miss Colbert. The first is the nobleman. MacMurray is the newspaper man. Other players are Ed Gargan, Eddie Craven, James T. Quinn and Robert Dudley.

The Colbert vogue, now at its height because of 'It Happened One Night' and 'Cleopatra,' is a business creating asset not to be overlooked. Also there is the fact of her singing in 'Torch Singer.' There is besides the spirit of youthful zip and gayety, with all exploitation directed towards arousing the curiosity of the younger moderne contingent of theatre-goers.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

QUESTION NO. 246.—(A) Is it essential to the best kind of performance that motor-generators having no sub-base but coupled armature shafts, be set in perfect alignment, perfectly level, and that they be held immovable by securely fastened anchor bolts? Explain. (B) Is it advisable that the projectionist make the electrical connections when a new set is installed? Explain. (C) What oil should be used for motor-generator sets, and why? If it could not be obtained, what would you do? (D) What precaution must be taken in selecting a grease for ball bearing sets?

Answer to Question No. 240

Question No. 240 was: (A) With what would you clean a projector mechanism after a fire? (B) Centigrade temperature being zero, what would be the Fahrenheit reading? (C) What is the relative reflection power of the following: A mirror? White blotting paper? Ordinary foolscap paper? Black paper? Light pink paper? (D) A mirror and white blotting paper have about the same reflection power. Why are your eyes not dazzled when you hold a lamp in front of blotting paper, as they are when it is held in front of a mirror?

The following made good: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; D. Ferguson; H. Edwards; C. Oldham; J. T. Seiler; T. Van Vaulkenburg; J. Wentworth; M. Simms and O. L. Daris; S. Carberry; H. D. Schofield; D. C. Coates; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; P. H. Harrison; G. E. Doe; R. F. Hall; H. C. Lake; P. L. Lathrope; R. H. Patterson and L. H. Danville; H. Pitchkey and M. C. Mellinger; G. N. Bagley and L. D. Richardson; R. Suler and R. Wheeler; P. Lee; T. H. and J. N. Williams; P. Jackson and B. Diglah; T. L. Edwards; J. B. Langdon; D. L. Sinklow; G. Johnson and N. T. Kane; P. L. Ludlow and B. R. Manning; D. N. Anderson and H. May; C. D. Carmody; L. D. Templeton; D. R. Peters and D. Holler; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; O. Davis and T. Turk; L. F. Evans; D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner; B. L. Sarno and H. B. Roth; T. L. Daniels; D. U. Granger; N. Williams and R. S. Allen; G. Bagby; S. Peterson and D. R. Bainbridge; R. Ryker; D. H. Samuels and P. N. Farrell; H. Schontz and R. Richards; T. Kelley and C. Cummings; G. Wayne and D. Stellegos; P. L. Sanborn and S. L. Jones; D. R. Sackley and J. B. Thomas; C. Conforti and C. F. Davis; O. Thum and I. D. Ackerly; S. F. and W. Love; E. F. Griffin and C. Abrams; R. S. Conrad and L. Biello; B. L. Stephens; A. L. Hickey and T. L. Kenney; L. M. Hartman and D. O. Dorfel; J. M. Dillon; C. and J. Hawkins; K. Erwin, L. F. Erwin and E. J. Felton; B. H. Mathews; R. Leroy and T. L. Albert; L. Jones; L. and F.

(A) Our friend C. Oldham says: "After a film fire the mechanism should be removed from its supporting base and given a good scrubbing with peroxide of hydrogen, which will loosen the gummy substance adhering to the metal without damage to surfaces bearing on the film, which certainly would result if scraping were resorted to."

Brother Danielson says: "Many things may be used to remove the brown scum left by a film fire, such as ordinary water, carbon tetrachloride, peroxide of hydrogen, etc."

I don't know about the water. Never tried it out. Have you tried water, Danielson?

(B) Hundreds agreed that when the Centigrade reading is zero the Fahrenheit reading would be 32, which is eminently correct.

(C) Rau and Evans answer thus: "The following percentages of light will be reflected by the surfaces named: Mirror with silvered back, 82 to 88 per cent; white blotting paper, 82 per cent; ordinary foolscap paper, 70 per cent; black paper, 5 per cent; light pink paper, 36 per cent."

Concerning Section D, Rau and Evans say: "The dazzling effect of the lamp is due to the fact that the reflection is 'regular.' That is to say, the light is reflected back without being scattered or broken up. On the other hand, blotting paper reflects in every direction 'within sight' of the reflecting surface. It therefore is widely diffused or broken up, so that there is no dazzling effect. The rough surface scatters or diffuses the light rays."

Which is all very well and quite correct as far as it goes, but in only one answer, by a man new to our "school," do I find one very important factor even mentioned. However, to even matters up, he neglects to name regular reflection, though his answer of course infers it. John T. Seiler, away out on the California coast, says: "It is difficult to look at the reflection of a brilliant lamp flame. [I added the flame. Out of all the answers, correct and otherwise, only one man—H. T. Mathews, whose answer was incorrect as a whole, said: "You didn't say the lamp was lighted, and a lamp would not of itself dazzle the eyes."—F. H. R.] held in front of a mirror for the reason that its brilliancy is practically doubled. The mirror is receiving the rays that would be lost were the reflection surface absent, and is reflecting them back to the eyes in direct rays together with the rays coming directly from the flame. The image of the flame, insofar as has to do with these rays, is the same as it would be were the observer to view the flame from the opposite side. [Almost. Some loss in reflection, remember; also, the flame impurities absorb some.—F. H. R.]

"When white blotting paper is held in back of the lamp [flame] the observer sees a somewhat brighter illumination than would be the case were the paper absent, but not sufficient to add measurably to the dazzle effect, because the reflected rays are diffused, hence only a relatively small portion passes through the flame. Also, a small portion of the light may pass through the paper. [And be absorbed in its substance—F. H. R.], a thing that would not occur in a mirror, from which practically all the light is reflected." Not all, however. Some is absorbed by the glass.

MEET THE PASSENGERS ON THE CRAZIEST SHIP AFLOAT!

"It hits the bull's-eye!" —Motion Picture Daily

Every actor is either a star or feature player... laughs tip each other up... a sure-thing buy for your audience."

—Hollywood Reporter

"Best-seller — a grand picture! What a cast! They will eat it up. Cast certainly can be billed as all-star!"

—Film Curb

"THE CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA" successfully maintains the pace set by LADY FOR A DAY, IT HAPPENED ONE

TO LITTLE FELLOWS IN THE HEAT BELTS

You can get Chrysler-made air-conditioning equipment installed—making your little theatres more comfortable and more profitable—just as quickly as the big fellows can get it in their palaces.

If you are a good business risk and an honorable business man and showman you can have this splendid and efficient Chrysler equipment for a reasonable down payment and the balance we will carry in weekly payments over a one- or two-year period.

This balance will be carried at more moderate rates than you have ever had made available by a great credit company. We are proud to have their assistance. They want the business of thousands of small theatre operators of good standing.

Installation of your order will not have to wait behind some bigger or more powerful operator. The installation of your job will call for the employment of your home town contractors and labor; materials wherever possible will be bought in your town.

Only those placing orders ahead of you will get installations ahead of you. Your prompt action now will determine your installation date.

51 STORIES AND PLAYS BOUGHT IN OCTOBER

25 Original Scripts and 20 Books Provide Screen Material in Month, Only Six Stage Dramas

The stage drama last month showed less strength as a source of material for the production of motion pictures, contributing to idea-hungry Hollywood the mere handful of six plots during October to the 25 and 20 obtained, respectively, from original scripts and from books.

Receding somewhat from the busy story-buying activities of September, when 75 manuscripts were bought, six of the independent companies and seven large producer-distributors acquired, in October, 51 story ideas with which to round out their 1934-35 schedules of feature releases to exhibitors.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Warner Brothers Pictures each made eight story purchases last month for future production. Paramount and Radio bought six stories and plays, and Columbia five. Fox, Liberty and Monogram negotiated four each.

October's purchases of 25 originals, 20 books and novels and six plays compared with 28 originals, 40 books and novels and seven plays acquired in September. Story deals consummated in October were as follows:

Leonard Gets Grimm's Post

Charles A. Leonard this week succeeded Ben H. Grimm at Universal Pictures as advertising assistant to P. D. Cochrane. Mr. Leonard has had considerable advertising experience with motion picture theatres, as well as with producing and distributing companies.

Several years ago he started his motion picture career as advertising head of the Strand theatre in New York under Joe Plunkett and has handled theatres for Balaban & Katz in Chicago, United Artists on the Coast, and RKO.

Mr. Grimm last week resigned from Universal to become a member in the RKO advertising department, of which S. Barrett McCormick is the director.

Carl Groz has returned to Universal from Fox as art director, a post he held with Universal before going to Fox.

RCA Net in Nine Months $2,177,770

Radio Corporation of America and subsidiaries, including RKO, reported last week net profit for the nine months ended September 30 of $2,177,770.78, which compares with a loss last year for the same period of $1,793,370.55.

Profit for the third quarter of the present year amounted to $406,189.97, which compared with loss for the equivalent period last year of $525,158.87. The surplus at the end of the quarter was $11,446,861.41.

Consolidated Net Equal to $187,841

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., this week reported a consolidated net income of $187,841 for the quarter ended September 30, after depreciation and federal taxes. The net compares with $320,782 for the previous quarter.

For the nine months ended September 30, net income was $824,404, equal to 43 cents per share on the common stock, which compares with a net of $716,478, or 22 cents per share on the common stock, for the equivalent period in 1933.

Dizzy and Daffy in Short

The phenomenally pitching brothers of the World's Series winning St. Louis Cardinals, Jerome and Paul Dean, better known as Dizzy and Daffy, respectively, have signed to appear in a Vitaphone short subject, "Dizzy and Daffy," with Roscoe Ates and Shemp Howard.

Trans Lux Near School Protested

The potential educational value of the newsreel this week was decried by the New York State Board of Education in an action to prevent Trans Lux Movies Corporation from erecting a news theatre adjacent to Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn.

In a petition to New York City License Commissioner Paul Moss, the Board asked that the theatre permit issued in 1926 to Trans Lux be revoked on the grounds that a theatre in such a neighborhood would provide a distracting element to students.

Mr. Moss said he will take no immediate action. "After all," he said, "there is a $200,000 investment on the part of Trans Lux to be considered."

Fleischer Claims Third Dimension

"Discovery of a process which, he claims, brings practical third dimension economically to the motion picture screen, was announced Wednesday by Max Fleischer, pioneer film cartoonist," said a statement released by Paramount Wednesday. "Although he has been perfecting his device the past two years Mr. Fleischer remained silent until after he had tested it out in parts of various of his cartoons released through Paramount during the last few months."

There are samples of the process in the colored cartoons "Poor Cinderella" and "Little Dutch Mill," which the company now is releasing.

"The illusory effect, however, can be used in feature pictures to even greater advantage than in cartoons," Mr. Fleischer was quoted as saying. He estimated his method will not increase production budgets over 15 per cent.

"The Fleischer process embraces a huge machine, weighing over a ton, and composed of 500 working parts," said Paramount. Patents were applied for some time ago.

Warner Stockholders Meet in Wilmington

Warner Bros. stockholders will have their annual meeting in Wilmington, Del., December 10, when five directors are to be elected for a term of two years. Only stockholders of record November 2, 1934, will be permitted to vote.

On December 18, the directors will meet in New York to vote on officers, at which time Harry M. Warner is to be re-elected president. Mr. Warner Tuesday was elected a director of the New York Motion Picture Club.

Warner Club Holds Dance

The New York Warner Club held its annual Hallowe'en dance at the Hotel Commodore Tuesday night. Several hundred home office and exchange employees and friends attended.

Rex Premium Formed

The Rex Premium Corporation has been formed with offices in New York City, with plans to operate in the greater city.

TOBIS TONBILD VOTES 5 PER CENT DIVIDEND

Foreign Patent Licenses Reacquired from Warner Bros.; Net One-Third of a Year Ago

By J. K. RUTENBERG

Berlin Correspondent

The general meeting of the Tobis Tonbild-Syndikat A. G. determined upon payment of a 5 per cent dividend for the year 1933-34 ending June 30, 1934. The year before a dividend of 6 per cent was declared. The international Tobis-Syndikat A. G. was represented with 3,644,800 reichsmarks at the meeting, followed by the Commerz Bank with 492,500 reichsmarks.

Bank capital is involved in film financing to a large degree and the experiences have been reported very satisfactory.

Monopoly on Recording

Apart from some important producing and distributing companies, Tobis is by far the most influential and potent German film enterprise in so far as it unites recording, producing and distributing branches, studios, technical staffs and printing and developing plants. Moreover, most important patents on printing, developing, recording, re-recording and reproduction are in the hands of Tobis A. G. or Klangfilm G. m. b. H., which has a patent exchange agreement with Tobis.

Practically no other recording system is admitted in Germany and this monopoly on recording forms the strength of Tobis. Quite a few independent German film producers are using the Tobis plants for their recording work and are distributing their output through the big Tobis distributing subsidiaries.

International Organization

Tobis is more than a German enterprise: it is an international organization with headquarters in Amsterdam. (Internationale Tobis Maatschappij.)

Seven important organizations govern England, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Paris, Spain and Portugal.

In London, Tobis is represented by Tobis Great Britain and Tobis Film Distribution, Ltd., in Austria by Tobis-Sascha Filmindustrie A. G., in Spain by Cinematografía Española Americana S. A., in France by Films Sonores Tobis and Compagnie Française Tobis, in Portugal by Tobis Portuguesa. In Germany, however, Tobis is linked with the German industry by so many channels that there is practically no film company in Germany with no connection with the Tobis. The principal company is Tobis Tonbild-Syndikat A. G. as the patent holding company, then Tobis Industrie G. m. b. H., Tobis Studio G. m. b. H., Tobis Melofilm G. m. b. H., Cinema Film A. G. (leading German film exporter), Rota Film A. G. (which has taken over the affairs of the former German Universal Film A. G.), Europa Film Verleih A. G. (one of the most influential film distributors in Germany), and the Neues Deutsches Lichtspielsyndikat Verleih G. m. b. H. (production and distribution).

In this way Tobis is the regulator of the German film industry, controlling production from the patent, recording and studio side, controlling distribution by some of the most influential companies. German film export is mainly done by Cinema Film A. G. and the Tobis subsidiaries in England, France and elsewhere.

Considerable interest arose when it was announced officially that Tobis had concluded a long-term contract with Curzon Cinemas, Ltd., in England to show films of the various subsidiaries in Europe.

The business year just ended reveals a net profit of 269,000 reichsmarks, compared with 890,000 reichsmarks the year before. A 5 per cent dividend was distributed and an amount of 25,000 reichsmarks will be carried forward.

Davidson Majestic Advertising Chief

Dave Davidson has been appointed advertising and publicity director for Majestic Pictures Corporation. The appointment was made last week by E. H. Goldstein, vice-president.

Mr. Davidson formerly was with the Kinsky Theatres in Detroit, and was a member of the staff of Balaban and Katz in Chicago.

Fox Metropolitan Group Meets with Operators

In an effort to complete a plan of reorganization for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses within the next three weeks, representatives of the bondholders' committee met in New York with Skouras and Randforce, operators of the houses, to negotiate changes in the operating contracts of the two.

It is understood the principal subject was the approval by Skouras and Randforce of a cancellation clause for insertion in their present contracts, which would permit sale of the circuit after a specified time following reorganization.

A new Hayden, Stone & Co. offer still is considered a distinct possibility.

Valentine Is Guest at Weekly AMPA Session

Lewis J. Valentine, police commissioner of New York City, was the honor guest at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York last Thursday. John W. Alicoate was toastmaster. Among the other guests were Bert Lytell, Raquel Torres, Carl Milliken, Major Edward Bowes, Lois Moran, Harry Hershfield. Guests scheduled for this week's meeting include Nick Lukas, Constance Collier, Dizzy and Daffy Dean.

J. C. JENKINS--His COLYUM

Ord, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We came over here, a distance of 80 miles, to see Mr. Bemond, who operates the theatre. We saw him in Omaha recently and he told us his subscription to the HERALD had run out and he wouldn't let us renew it there; said we had to come over to Ord to get it. We came over here and found that he had gone out billing his show around to other towns and wouldn't be back until about 5 o'clock. We weren't going to drive 80 miles after dark, so we came home, but he sent us his check just the same.

If it should happen to be wet when you go over to Ord you better take an airplane. Ord is surrounded by the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, although the Rockies themselves are something like 500 miles away.

There is an old saying that "what goes up must come down," but we have learned that there is a lot of Jersey cow about that, for we went up six hills and came down one, and we haven't come down the other five hills yet. Around Ord is where they raise such wonderful popcorn. The town has a reputation of being the popcorn center of the whole state, although the Ord theatre has a lot to do with the town's popularity. Anyhow, everything is all right now. Bemond's subscription is renewed and he is happy, and so are we.

A Word for Jean Harlow

The other night we saw "The Girl from Missouri," with Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Fanchot Tone and Lewis Stone. Some critics might say that this picture was hardly up to the Harlow standard because of the absence of sex situations and suggestive scenes, but we would like to pat Miss Harlow on the back for giving us a real insight into her personal ideas of clean entertainment. This one is just "breezy" enough to be delightful, and yet it isn't nasty, and here is what we are going to say to Miss Harlow, and we hope somebody out in Hollywood will call her attention to it.

Say, Jean, did you ever realize that, too often, the public shies away from a theatre where you are playing in a picture because they are afraid of seeing some of the scenes you have so often appeared in? Well they do. Not that they think you desire to play in these scenes, but that some director has the notion that such scenes are what the public wants, but listen, Miss Harlow, if you will back away from playing in any scene that you wouldn't appear in in your own home, you will endear yourself to the public and be the biggest drawing card on the American screen today. This is putting it pretty strong, Miss Harlow, but we have to speak our personal views, and that's just what we think about it, regardless of the entire universe.

It won't be necessary to say that Lionel Barrymore, Fanchot Tone and Lewis Stone played splendidly, everybody knows that already, but we would like to know just who it was that acted as your chaperone in this picture. There's a girl that is 100 per cent plus and we wish she would act as our chaperone and would invite us over to her house to spend the evening some time. We wish also that somebody in Hollywood call her attention to this but keep it quiet from Mildred Early and Jeannette Meehan in our Hollywood office. What we wanted to say, before we got sidetracked, was that "The Girl from Missouri" is a splendid picture, but like everybody and everything, it has some faults, but nothing to kick about.

Yesterday we were going down the street (in the company of the sheriff) and we heard a fellow singing—

*You've had your way
Now we must pay,
Who's sorry, who's sorry now?*

*We just can't figure out what that fellow had in his mind, whether he thought he was plowing up cotton or wheat or killing
5,000,000 pigs.*

Several years ago, when the Populist party swept this country like a pestilence, they elected to the legislature a fellow from our county who introduced a bill to appropriate $5,000 for him to make rain. He tried it but it didn't rain. This legislator came from Bazille township, and in one of our weaker moments we wrote some poetry, one verse of which ran something like this:

*Along in July, when the weather is dry
And the drouth parches forest and plain,
The Pope of Bazille
Will proceed to raise hell
Until someone brings up a big rain.*

We don't know as we would have mentioned the matter at all only that we have so many "rain makers" down in Congress who have lain down on the job this summer that we simply had to call your attention to it.

Where is Vona, Colorado? We have recently received a letter from Vona from Fred Flanagan. Fred operates a theatre there and he says it is the smallest town on the map having a theatre. We presume it is, since we don't know where it is located. Fred not only runs a theatre but he is a rancher also. Not only that, but he writes poetry when not chasing cattle, and sets his poetry to music in his idle moments. He sent us one of his songs entitled "He'll Organize," and if this one is a sample of what he can do in poetry and music he'd better sell his theatre and ranch and devote his time to writing music.

Fred seems doubtful that prosperity has returned. He says he has 150 cattle on his ranch and will have to pay 98 cents a bushel for corn and $20.00 a ton for hay to carry them through the winter. Fred says that one man out of ten has corn and hay to sell and he presumes that prosperity has hit that man, but that the other nine will be looking through the wire fence watching their cattle starve during the cold winter. He says he is one of the nine, but good gosh, Fred, who says we are not all right as long as Uncle Sam can borrow money on his credit? But after that, then what? Thanks, Fred, for your letter. This is to answer same.

Cynic and Stoic

The other day the teacher said to the children, "Now, children, I am going to give you two words and we will see who will tell us what these words stand for first. The words are Cynic and Stoic." Little Izzy Cohen held up his hand and the teacher said, "All right, Izzy, you tell the class what they mean," and Izzy got up and said, "Vell, teacher, a cynic is vot mamma washes the dishes in and a stoic is the boid what brings mamma the babies." Doggone it, that's the way it goes, you can't stump these Irish.

We understand that there are a lot of people who belong to the NRA's, the AAA's, the CCC's and a dozen or fifteen other bureaus, but there is one bureau that is larger than all the rest combined, and that's the PAY bureau. Everybody in the United States belongs to this bureau, but it seems that there are not very many who know that they are members in good standing, but they will.

North Platte, Nebraska, is to be congratulated. M. E. Berkheimer is there now operating the Paramount theatre; not but what Dave Davis, the operator who was there, is all right, but you know, "they can't keep a good man down," and Dave has been sent a little higher up and has gone to Rapid City, South Dakota, which is on the outer edge of the grasshopper district. Berkheimer says we promised to come and see him when he was at Las Vegas, New Mexico, some time ago, but we don't remember it, although we probably did. Anyhow, we are glad he is in North Platte, for that brings him about 400 miles nearer Neligh, and when anyone gets within 400 miles of Neligh, Nebraska, he begins to feel right at home.

Thanks for your letter, M. E., and we hope to see you some time provided they don't plow up all of our cotton and kill all of our hogs while we are down to the Elkhorn catching a mess of bullheads for the kids, although we haven't any kids.

John Halliday is due in New York from Warner studio at Burbank to star in Crosby Gaipe's stage production of "Old Love," comedy by Samson Raphaelson, opening on Broadway in mid-December.

Salary Claim Canceled

The circuit court of Saginaw County, Michigan, recently reversing a decision of the lower court, canceled a salary claim of $61.75 brought against the De Luxe theatre, Saginaw, by Peter Walton.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AMONG THE MISSING: Richard Cromwell, Billie Seward—A good program.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

CORNERED: Buck Jones—Good western. I've never run a poor Buck Jones western and he has a following here so I consider him a good bet when I can get anything that he makes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur—Better than average program offering, which pleased. We used it on a Saturday midnight surprise show with good results.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

GIRL IN DANGER: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—A normal Saturday night audience indorsed this action picture. Played Oct. 20.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE: Tim McCoy—The Beau Brummel from the pasture tries it again. Why don't he rent another horse. He isn't a bad cowboy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

KING OF WILD HORSES: Rex the Wonder Horse, William Janney—This is a very good western picture that will please all western fans. The main character is a horse, but he plays his part much better than many actors play theirs. This is full of action, thrills, and should do a good business, especially where westerns are wanted. Although it is a little old, we played one day to a very good business and pleased all who saw it. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Oct. 20.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LONE RIDER, THE (Re-Issue): Buck Jones—These re-issued Jones' westerns were head and shoulders above the average when they were first released, and even today they are better than many. The technique has changed less in the western than in any other type of picture, consequently their age is not too noticeable. Business above normal. Running time, 58½ minutes. Played Oct. 19-20.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones—Buck Jones is a good bet for me and I like his westerns. So what?—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MCKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—A good action picture for your Saturday nights. Did a nice business against night baseball game and as usual Buck satisfied with plenty of fast action. Played Oct. 13.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

NINTH GUEST, THE: Donald Cook, Genevieve Tobin—Parts of this got the horse-laugh by our audience. Several ladies liked the suspense. A good mystery play.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. General patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—Good for that Owl Show on Saturday night. Enough mystery to keep them wondering.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—A wonderful picture. I call it a 100 per cent musical production. Singing great, acting fine by both stars and whole cast. We did not do a profitable business on the picture as it was over the heads of our patrons, but those that we did get in were more than satisfied, and a number came back the second night. Played Oct. 14-15.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SHADOWS OF SING SING: Mary Brian, Bruce Cabot—Old but fair.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. General patronage.

SOCIAL REGISTER: Colleen Moore, Alexander Kirkland—I rejected this picture once, but picked it up later, after having viewed it. It is nothing but a very small picture, has not much draw, and is only fair from the audience standpoint. However, by playing up the presence of such people as Robert Benchley, Ramona, Captain Henry, Mrs. Paul Whiteman, who do bits in the action, I managed to get it by on a double bill. Business above average. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 19-20.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

comments on, good or bad. Personally, I didn't like it at all. Poor business two days. Played Oct. 22-23.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Small town patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy—This gave general satisfaction to normal Saturday night business. Played Oct. 13.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Doris Kenyon, Robert Young—A great entertainment story. Big. Acting by stars wonderful. You have got to see this feature to appreciate it. You play it and all will be satisfied.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

First National

BRITISH AGENT: Leslie Howard, Kay Francis—Didn't consider this as big as they would have you believe. However, it pleased those who came. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Oct. 8.—Boon and Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. C. Small town patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE, THE: Warren William, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—A new Philo Vance but that didn't make any difference. We did not use any extra advertising and the picture pulled them in, just with Monthly Calendar publicity and they all went out well satisfied.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor—This is good entertainment, but not as good as the last two pictures of Robinson. It is a mystery drama with a continuous comedy twist. The entire cast play their parts wonderfully, but the story is rather weak. The trailer sold this picture for us and will do the same for any other exhibitor. Warner's trailers always sell their pictures. Played one day to good business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson—This picture pleased but didn't draw so well. I consider this actor one of the best but I just can't sell him to my patrons.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Just like old times; they even hissed the villain. Too much can't be said for the little player. However, I resent Fox loaning Shirley to Paramount all the time. So far she has been in just as many pictures for Paramount as she has for Fox. Next year I am going to have a clear understanding as to who these box-office stars are going to work for and then I am going to buy from the company that uses them. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Oct. 5-6.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: James Dunn, Claire Trevor, Shirley Temple—Of course, Shirley Temple pleases. Gross not up to average, however. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Oct. 14-16.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—What a draw this little girl has turned out to be and what a capable little actress. She just gets them and they clamor for a chance to lay their cash on the counter. We did a very good business with this picture and didn't have to spend a lot of time and money on advertising. She draws them in.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: "Pat" Paterson, John Boles, Spencer Tracy—It would take a lot of Life Buoy Soap to help the B. O. on this one. Just one scene, "Waiting at the Gate for Katy." Several walkouts and a bare profit. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Sept. 14-15.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—This one kept them away despite a heavy campaign. Eleven out of the 12 reels were too much in zero suspense and action. The 12th reel was all right. It seems to me as if Harold has all played out and doesn't know. First "Movie Crazy" and now "The Cat's Paw" should be a warning to the wise. Drew about 2 postage stamps above film rental. Running time, 100 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Satisfactory. He does not climb any fire escapes or hang over any edge of a sixty-story building in this one. The story was popularized in the Saturday Evening Post and that helped some. They did not catch all the clever material that was in the story and the dialogue was a little flat for that reason.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—One of the best of the Chan stories. Played Oct. 20.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Missouri. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—About the usual Chan picture. My patrons like them and this one satisfied. Better than average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Oklahoma. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—One of the best Chan pictures. Several came in the second night to see it again. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Oct. 19-20.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE: Warner Oland—My patrons like these and they turn out better than average for a Chan picture, so I'm satisfied. I can't pan a picture that does any decent kind of business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—Another of Zane Grey's epics of the West, a very good picture. Sure packed them in on this one. Running time, 7 reels. Played Oct. 19-20.—A. F. Affelt, Isoco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER: Nice Western that will satisfy the action patrons. Beautiful. Played Oct. 9-10.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—A very pleasing western that satisfied ninety-five per cent of my patrons. I note that Liberty only gave this picture one and one-half stars. If the Liberty critic were operating a small town picture show he would certainly have to revise his system of credits. It would give me much pleasure to trade 60 per cent of his three star pictures for productions as good as "The Dude Ranger." Running time, 65 minutes. Played Oct. 11-13.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans—Fair picture. Think Baxter should have better stories. This story closely resembles "Arrowsmith" and the box office results were about the same. Poor. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 3-4.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

LOVE TIME: Nils Asther, "Pat" Paterson—Good picture. Dandy opera music and a very good cast. Failed to draw. Running time, 8 reels. Played Oct. 17-18.—A. F. Affelt, Isoco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—Locale—in and out of Vienna. A few pleasing sequences. "Pat" Paterson good, Nils Asther no different than usual. The picture pleased but did not draw any extra business. Running time, 70 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y.

HEN THEY WA

NT TO KNOW SOMETHING

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson. Nils Asther—A sweet picture that will please most any audience. Some clever comedy, sweet music and nice romance. It's as clean as a hound's tooth. Played Oct. 17-18.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. General patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson—Here is a beautiful picture that will please if you can get them in. Many patrons told me it was the best picture they had ever seen. The musical recording is superb. People stopped me on the streets for three days to tell me how much they liked it. Business built up here from word of mouth advertising. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 11-13.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien, Mary Brian—Some liked it; some didn't. I'd say a run of the mill program picture. Producers started out to make a program, and that's all they got. Made a profit, however. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Sept. 28-29.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—There is nothing wrong with any of the Rogers pictures. However, I have never made a dime on one of them, because I have never been able to show one before another was released. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Oct. 12-13.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—All Rogers' pictures are clean, good and entertaining. Box office okay. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Oct. 7-9.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Alice Faye, Helen Twelvetrees—A very good picture that failed to get business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 3-4.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Alice Faye—I guess my people don't read enough because they didn't know who this autobiography described. They watched the action, recognized the gangsters, because each one had a pistol, but marched out with that woebegone look.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—Satisfactory entertainment, clean comedy romance. Personally didn't think it as good as some of the previous Gaynor films, but the customers liked it. Played Oct. 18-19.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—A very pleasing picture that drew well and satisfied. Fox pictures are clicking this year in this theatre. Up to date we have booked in 17 of the 1934-35 product and have not found a single one that we would care to cancel on our ten per cent privilege. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Oct. 7-9.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—The first picture in months which had our audience in a Frenchy and general uproar. It did business and satisfied nearly 100 per cent. If the producers could only see the light (and the box-office) we would see more pictures that actually entertained. Give this one your best playing time.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye, Mitchell and Durant—Just a program picture but what a program picture. My patrons are still telling me it is the best I have had. Made a nice little profit on week-end. Bigger crowd the second night. As long as program pictures are in a class with this one, I can't kick. Played Sept. 7-8.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—A picture which has plenty of everything that goes to produce an all-around good picture. Plenty of action, romance, comedy and whatnot. One of the best program pictures we have had from Fox this year.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—Good entertainment and clean as a hound's tooth. Not a big picture, but a pleasing one. We played it mid-week to a better than average business, and it pleased generally.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—Very good with a lot of comedy that pleased a very good crowd on a bargain night.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Woods, Ralph Morgan—Pleased about 30 per cent I believe. However, we played it on a double bill and got by. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Oct. 19-20.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees—Some

FOUR MORE JOIN CONTRIBUTOR ARMY

Four new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" are the following:

M. R. Harrington, resident manager, Avalon theatre, Clatskanie, Ore.

Harold Haubein, Cozy theatre, Lockwood, Mo.

Albert Hefferan, The Owl theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mrs. Clyde Pace, Pace theatre, Gordon, Neb.

Week by week the army of contributors enrolls its additional voluntary recruits.

liked it; some didn't. This star draws good here because there are relatives hereabouts.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Shirley Temple—It didn't please 5 per cent of my audience. With the exception of the scene with Shirley Temple in it. Would have been a good picture but Warner Baxter slowed the tempo at regular intervals. Below average program fare in dollars and cents at my box-office. Running time, 90 minutes.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Zasu Pitts—Just a program. Sound not so good. Just another that I had to use to finish the season with. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Sept. 21-22.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—A really great picture on the order of "The House of Rothschild." No good for small town. Did not do average business on this one with extra advertising. Running time, 101 minutes. Played Oct. 7-9.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Franchot Tone—This amounts to a biography of a southern family that goes down the years through the war. Of its type it is all right but the title militated against it for the picture did not hardly gross the rental. Then Franchot Tone, contrary to what a lot of producers think about him, is not the draw at this house as some of the other male stars.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Franchot Tone, Madeleine Carroll—Fair. Too long and drawn out. Not a special by any means. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Oct. 14-16.—M. W. Mattheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: James Dunn, Alice Faye, Mitchell and Durant—This is the first Texas showing of this picture, I believe. Has the same cast as "She Learned About Sailors" with the exception of James Dunn taking the place of Lew Ayres. It is a little better than just a program picture though it is not a special. It is a new angle on Hollywood Movie School racket. There are four musical numbers that are very good and with it goes a story. I believe it will get by with the average audience and I wouldn't be afraid to recommend it to the public. Mitchell and Durant do some nice work together without getting silly. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Oct. 17-18.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

Majestic

BROKEN LIVES (Formerly "Unknown Blonde"): Edward Arnold—Had this picture been properly handled would have been good, but poorly put together. "Unknown Blonde" did not mean anything at the box office. Think "Broken Lives" a much better title. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Oct. 5-6.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—Without a doubt one of the finest acted movies ever on anyone's screen. It's just too bad that small towns don't have enough customers that will attend a show of this class. The whole cast is perfect. The picture will please and the patrons that appreciate fine acting will rave about it. Played Oct. 11-12.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer—This is a class picture. Some patrons raved about it and some walked out on it. Wonderful acting and a great picture but not for small town. Business average.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Oklahoma. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Good picture. Good business, a family picture that everyone liked. Running time, 8 reels. Played Oct. 14-15-16.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—Good picture. Packed with comedy, action and thrills. Fans were well pleased with this one. Very good business. Running time, 7 reels. Played Oct. 12-13.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Lewis Stone, Patsy Kelly—They like Harlow in this town and whether it was loyalty or curiosity (for this picture has received plenty of publicity in the decency campaign) I don't know. But it drew away above average for us and pleased accordingly. While there are a few rough spots in it yet, they are rather subordinated, so that it is not offensive. Patsy Kelly nearly stole the show from the stars, but Harlow does some fine work, as does the rest of the cast. Business very good.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—A very good picture, drew good business, and my patrons were well pleased because they saw a sexy picture that didn't offend with a lot of dirty wise-cracks. Played Oct. 15-16.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery—A good picture, especially for small towns. Pleased my patrons and business better than average.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez—I really had some patrons who liked parts of this. It's not too hot, but there are parts that you can watch without much effort. Don't promise much and they won't be disappointed.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Rugles, Una Merkel—One of the fastest, funniest features that I have ever run. The repeaters on this picture made a crowd and when they come back to see a picture twice it must have that old appeal.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone—Just another program picture that didn't get over very well. Business below average.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—A fair program offering that didn't elicit much praise or comment against. Myrna Loy is quite a little actress and her later pictures have been clicking here.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger—It's a grand production, especially for the youngsters. The appeal to adults will naturally be limited, but those who were, in their younger days, thrilled by this tale of wild adventure, will find the film a faithful portrayal of the Stevenson classic. Cast is fine, photography superb and the whole production clean. Drew the kids, but not so the adults. Pleased a good 90 per cent and business was just fair.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—A wonderful picture that did a very good business against all kinds of opposition. We put out a variety of advertising aids and contacted the schools and they are willing to help because this is one classic the school kids have to study. Boost it and help the community. Every knocker will tell you how good parts of it pleased him. Ain't that funny?—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Monogram

BEGGARS IN ERMINE: Lionel Atwill—Here's heaping a few more praises on Monogram. A well made Steel Corporation with Mr. Atwill playing the part of a hero in excellent acting. Everyone who saw "Beggars in Ermine" praised it. The scenes in the meeting room of the steel mills were something to marvel at. Good old Mono, keep up your work. The exhibs will stand by you. Running time, 72 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

GALLOPING ROMEO: Bob Steele—A satisfying western from Monogram. Business okay. Running time, 52 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

picture problem for the small town. Patrons came to see a picturization of the book "A Girl of the Limberlost" and that is what they saw. Excellent acting, splendid direction and perfect recording. Not having played any Monogram pictures I was naturally somewhat worried about the recording. Worry on this score was useless inasmuch as we have had no better recording in our theatre during the past six months. And draw—why, they came for twenty miles around. And every patron who came the first day seemed to delight in sending friends and relatives the following two days. Monogram is certainly a coming concern. Up to this year the exhibitors never thought of it; but today I don't know a small town exhibitor around here that has not signed with them. If they can make many pictures like this one, contracts next year won't be difficult to get. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Oct. 21-23.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—Ray placed in a very good action picture from Monogram. Give Mono a boost and you'll be replacing your majors with Mono's product. This picture pleased. Sound and light not perfect. Monogram could improve here quite a bit and not do their product any harm. Running time, 61 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

KING KELLY OF THE U. S. A.: Guy Robertson, Irene Ware—The exchange told me this was a good comedy. My customers told me it was not. And I'm inclined to believe them, for they were sincere enough to get up and walk out in the middle of it. I didn't see the picture, because after getting the comments on the first show, I hid in the office for the remainder of the run and trembled every time someone knocked on my office door. Business first day, below normal; second day, close to the vanishing point. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Oct. 17-18.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

KING KELLY OF THE U. S. A.: Guy Robertson, Irene Ware—Disappointing. Not well done and sound only fair. Too much repetition of the same song. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Oct. 13.—M. W. Matthecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

MONTE CARLO NIGHTS: Mary Brian, John Darrow—Played this on a double feature bill and this picture gave fine satisfaction. Good story, well acted, fine photography. It will average up with any company's product.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Paramount

GREAT FLIRTATION, THE: Elissa Landi, Adolphe Menjou—Just can't say anything good for this one and feel right. Landi and Menjou have a French accent that is terrible. Played two days to no business. Played Oct. 15-16.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley, Patricia Ellis—Our patrons were divided on the merits of this feature. Business was the smallest in years. Played Oct. 17-18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, So-dus, N. Y. Family patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields, Judith Allen—We tried to cancel this and couldn't. So played it late on a bargain night. There was plenty of comedy relief to offset the no-plot story. So our not too critical audience seemed well pleased. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 13-14.—D. B. White, Ritz Theatre, Fernandina, Fla. General patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—Played on double feature with "Shoot the Works." A usually good Fields picture and very well liked. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Oct. 12-13.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie, Dorothy Dell—Just a fair program picture. Roscoe Karns saved the show. Played on double bill. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Oct. 12-13.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

RKO

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—These two always draw. And did this one please. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 11.—Boom and Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey, Dorothy Lee—Not a bit funny, and in my estimation a poor and pitiful pair. Some dirty wisecracks that my patrons liked and said they did. My patrons do not want any Legion of Decency, nor do they want anyone to tell them what they shouldn't see. Clean pictures are not going to help my business any. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Oct. 10-11.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—These boys always get some laughs but they don't draw enough to brag about. We had the poorest

Saturday on this that we have had this year and they want preferred playing time on this pair. I guess they realize that they need it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Sidney Blackmer, Sydney Fox—A combination of "Tarzan" and Frank Buck's "Wild Cargo" set to music, directed by someone direct from the nut house, as must have been the one responsible for the scenario. I have seen a lot of picture that a mess was made of what they had to work with but none that was scrambled up as bad as this one and the same producers made "Flying Down to Rio." You will be lucky if they don't ask for their money back on this one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, Ned Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—Just what excuse you can offer your patrons for running this one, I don't know. And just what excuse RKO has for releasing this classic piece of asininity, I still don't know. They had an idea all right, but it got sidetracked some place along the line and they are probably still looking for it. Audience reaction, absolutely nil. Business, the same.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

FINISHING SCHOOL: Ginger Rogers, Bruce Cabot, Frances Dee—Played on a double bill and it pleased. Running time, 73 minutes. Played October 5-6.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE: Ricardo Cortez—Good entertainment, good acting, appealing story and enjoyed by all who saw it. Fair business, two days. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 17-18.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Small town patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—Here is a picture that is different from the usual run of pictures. It is a dramatic love story and will please the average movie fan. It is a story of a father's love and sacrifice for his child. It is good entertainment for the whole family. The entire cast perform splendidly. If you must play this, one day is enough. Played one day to good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 17.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—Beautifully and sincerely done. But the theme is out of step with the trend of the moral tone of today's pictures. Appealed to the feminine patrons and generally pleased, but business was poor.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD: Fay Wray, Joel McCrea, Miriam Hopkins—My patrons are not so hot for Miriam Hopkins, but Fay Wray and Joel McCrea are always welcome. The picture didn't make any money, though I personally liked the picture, and I would say that it is decidedly above the program class, though it is not big. I had opposition both nights and don't know just what it would have done without opposition. Running time, 79 minutes. Played October 19-20.—Chas. S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Tex. General patronage.

STINGAREE: Richard Dix, Irene Dunne—Very wonderful show. Had many very fine comments on this. Can't see why some exhibitors pan this. Running time, 76 minutes. Played September 27.—Boom and Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. C. Small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—This one fooled us. It is really a dandy picture and the musical background is wonderful. Irene Dunne can certainly sing. Fair crowd, but they were pleased. Running time, 76 minutes. Played October 10-11.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—A splendid picture. Good story, great singing and acting. Gave good satisfaction to all. Played October 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summer-ville, Wm. Gaxton, Bruce Cabot—Good for a few laughs, but this one won't help this once popular team very much. It's only fair and pleased just about that much. With a careful selection of short subjects, you can give your patrons a passable show. We did an average business.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, Buster Crabbe, Edna May Oliver—Just a program picture and pulled a very poor Sunday gross. The laughs are few and far between and all the characters talk so much you are glad when the last fade-out arrives. Another fine example of why exhibitors must resort to double bills. If you play it singly, bolster it up well with selected shorts.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

time, 83 minutes. Played September 16-18.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M. Small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Powerful drama. The story follows very closely the book as I read it many years ago. Great care is apparent in choosing the cast and the greatest of them all is Robert Donat as the Count of Monte Cristo. Fine looking and great actor. There is no doubt that he will be heard from in the future. I have never seen a cast that so thoroughly lived their parts. Every one perfect. Good direction. Now they can make "The Three Musketeers" after this one as a trial balloon has been sent up. That picture would do business if as much care was taken of the story as this one shows they did. Landi has a good part and when she has something that gives her a chance, can put a role over, but Fox almost killed her off.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss, Loretta Young, Boris Karloff, Robert Young, C. Aubrey Smith, Helen Westley—The first Arliss picture to play this town, and I am glad we were able to introduce him in this really fine production. Pleased a good 90 per cent of our patrons, which was a surprise as I was afraid it was just a little too high class. But it drew well on a four-day run and brought people into the theatre who had not been here for ages. While it is a truly great picture, still it is doubtful for general small town success, that it really should enjoy. One of those things you are glad to offer your patrons.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Karen Morley, Tom Keene—This picture is the answer to the small town exhibitors' prayer. Consider it a fine production in every way and we received many favorable comments on it. The players are not well known and it needs extra advertising to draw them in. That's where I made my mistake: it didn't get the patronage it deserved. Running time, 74 minutes. Played October 14-15-16.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M. Small town patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford—Very good picture, beautiful scenes, but did not have the drawing power. Lost money. If one could get a good campaign on, it might go over. All liked it who saw it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 19-20.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

SORRELL AND SON: H. B. Warner—The best English film we have had. Nice piece of acting by Warner. No good at the box office. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 14-15.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

Universal

AFFAIRS OF A GENTLEMAN: Paul Lukas—When "Papa Laemmle" makes a picture it stays made, that is, he puts it on the market regardless. The films Universal has given us this year are outstandingly outlandish. And this Lukas vehicle is no exception. Lukas is killed and, oh lord, revived in the first reel. The balance of the picture is devoted to Lukas' love making, to no less than half a dozen women. Business out of sight.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—One dandy little comedy picture. Nothing big, but it certainly got plenty of laughs from our patrons. They even stopped to say how much they enjoyed it, so there you are.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

GLAMOUR: Paul Lukas, Constance Cummings, Another of Universal's family successes for the 1933-34 season, sarcastically speaking. It's too bad that checkers are not lent on these pictures. The poor checker player would have to borrow money from the local welfare organization to pay his way back home. Here's hoping Universal will wake up in time to get into action for the 34-35 season. Running time, 74 minutes.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

I GIVE MY LOVE: Wynne Gibson, Paul Lukas—An average drama with less than average drawing power. The situations have been done time and again before, so there is nothing outstanding about the film in any respect. Business below average. Running time, 67 minutes. Played October 17-18.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

I GIVE MY LOVE: Wynne Gibson, Paul Lukas—A splendid program picture. We have had none better here for a long time. The acting was extra good by both of the stars, and all the cast. It did not draw business, but it did give great satisfaction to them that was to see it. Played October 18-19.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullivan, Douglass Montgomery—Universal sold this to us a special. It's a special, all right. It is the most special kind of whining, sobbing and belly-aching type of picture that we were ever forced to play. I have never been able to find out why pictures like this should be sold as entertainment. It might go over very well in a big town, but up here in the sticks it's just one more to add to Universal's growing list as a dud.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullivan, Douglass Montgomery—Another over-exploited picture that failed to come up to advance notice. Moped along for 88 minutes and our patrons were bored stiff. Margaret Sullivan gave a very fine performance and there were moments when you about decided that something might happen and save the picture from being a flop, but you soon gave up the idea. Business very poor and the men walked out for a smoke and failed to return, but the ladies stuck it out.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Mary Carlisle, Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes—Just a so-so entertainment. O. K. for action days or bargain days. Played October 13.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard, Frank Lawton—This sort of picture may mean something some places, but not in small towns. We had several walk-outs on this and had to awaken one customer to let him know the show was over. Needless to say, the picture didn't draw very well, although business was average for midweek. Running time, 88 minutes. Played September 26-27.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Heather Angel, Roger Pryor—Our audience liked this attraction, but for some unaccountable reason the attendance was small. Played October 10-11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Not so good as some westerns, but it got by on a double bill. Running time, 64 minutes. Played October 5-6. A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Warner

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Swell little comedy that will please your customers. Good for any dates. Played October 14-15.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG: Warren William, Mary Astor—Splendid. Well done, well liked and a fine mystery drama. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 10-11.—M. W. Matthecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Played to a good house. This is a good musical with catch tunes. Several told us the musical scenes were too long. Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 17-18.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

DAMES: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell—I thought this was a plenty good musical picture, and while they seem to be on the down grade, this picture did more business than many of the so-called specials, and while the patrons claim that they are tired of them, they come to see and hear. Play it and boost it; you can't go wrong.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—Good little comedy on the slapstick order. Played October 7-8.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—A number of laughs and good entertainment that is different from the general run. Played on a double bill, so had no comment either way. We just don't allow it and kid 'em out of it on account of their bargain.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Very excellent. Pleased all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 24.—Boom and Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—A very good picture that drew very good business for three days. We put out plenty of advertising on the Navy and didn't regret it. We have a number of recruits who have written home about being in the picture and that didn't hurt business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—One of the best all-around entertainments we have had in some time. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction. Not a dull moment. Good comedy, funny and clean and all said a great show. Certainly wonderful background, the Navy. More of this kind needed to wake the people up. They want to laugh. Played October 21-22.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

HE WAS HER MAN: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—A poor Cagney-Blondell and our patrons told us so. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 30-October 2.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOUSEWIFE: George Brent, Bette Davis—This is a very good picture that pleased all of my patrons. It is a comedy drama with the old triangle twist. It is the story of a housewife who turns out to be the brains of the family. This is good entertainment and will please the average theatre-goer. The excellent supporting cast adds much to the entertainment and the trailer will sell the picture. Played one day to good business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played October 19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell, Pat O'Brien—Pleased my patrons. It seemed to have the right mixture that patrons crave.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

JIMMY, THE GENT: James Cagney—Pleased the Cagney fans. An action comedy of the typical Cagney type. Played October 16-17.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods—Lots of fun. Not too hot or too sexy because of the comedy and we did average business, so can't kick. Comments were favorable, so didn't regret running this picture.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SMARTY: Joan Blondell, Warren William—A very good comedy with a good cast doing some good acting.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

SMARTY: Joan Blondell, Warren William—Ran it on a double bill, so there were no squawks.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

UPPERWORLD: Warren William, Ginger Rogers, Mary Astor—A very good picture which is very true to life. Warren William, Ginger Rogers and Mary Astor do splendid work.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BACK TO THE SOIL: Sidney and Murray—Fair comedy, quite a few laughs in this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S COVERED WAGON: Mickey McGuire—Good kid comedy that the adults will laugh at.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S MEDICINE MAN: Mickey McGuire—The kids went crazy over this one and the grownups got a lot of laughs. Running time, two reels.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M. Small town patronage.

Educational

AN OLD GYPSY CUSTOM: Andy Clyde—I never did think this guy was funny and this two-reeler will substantiate my claims.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CANYON OF ROMANCE: Romantic Journeys—Beautiful, colored short with poor recording. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

DIVORCE SWEETS: Tom Howard Comedies—Guess it must have had a laugh or two because some came out smiling.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

EXPECTANT FATHER, THE: Star Comedy Specials.—If Grandpa Jenkins thinks these pictures where they're "Going to have a baby" should be junked he ought to see this one. They had more kids in this than an orphan home inherits every Christmas.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FANNIE IN THE LION'S DEN: Very fine, liked by all, both children and adults. Recording good. Running time, six minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

GIMME MY QUARTERBACK: Baby Burlesks—These cute kids please my audience. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Coronet Comedies—A really good comedy which we need so badly. Buster West brought plenty of laughs with his dame in the contest. Running time, 19 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Coronet Comedies—A good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes. M. W. Matthecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

I SURRENDER, DEAR: Bing Crosby—Old and it shows its age.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

KING'S DAUGHTER, THE: Terry-Toon—Good musical cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LAST STRAW, THE: Terry-Toons—Just an average cartoon. In fact, barely an average. Running time, six minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MAD HOUSE, A: Terry-Toon—We do not like cartoons that scare youngsters. Running time, six minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MERRILY YOURS: Frolics of Youth—Just two more reels of tragedy; with the wrong label.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MELODY: Formerly "Them Thar Hills." A good short of mountain music. A nice short for the Saturday customers.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT, THE: Terry-Toons—Nice music and good animation. Running time, six minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

POP'S PAL: Mermaid Comedies—A laugh or two, now and then.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY: Musical Comedies—A dandy comedy. Just what the public likes. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. W. Matthecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

SUPER SNOOPER, THE: Andy Clyde—Two more reels that got about that many laughs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TRIMMED IN FURS: Mermaid Comedies—Very funny slapstick and that's what my patrons crave. They want to laugh and they get a laugh out of the action quicker than they do from the wisecracking dialogue. This has a lot of funny action, just like a funny paper.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

ANSWERING THE RIOT CALL: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Plenty of action in these Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

EXTRAVAGANT WIFE, THE: Movie Tintype Series—Very poor. Not one bit entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

FORTUNATE ISLES: Magic Carpet Series—Good short. Very interesting and educational. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MAN'S MANIA FOR SPEED: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—This is a very interesting one-reeler showing many scenes from newsreels, pertaining to speed in the old days and now. This is a different type of entertainment and we hope there will be many more as good as this one. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WITH THE NAVIES OF THE WORLD: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Very interesting reel. Some stayed to see it again. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

BALLAD OF PADUCAH JAIL: Irvin S. Cobb—Perhaps we are wrong, but we still say that Mr. Cobb should devote his time to writing. Very unfunny attempt at comedy.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BRITISH GUIANA: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Yes, sir. He's done it again. Took another trip.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CARETAKER'S DAUGHTER: All-Star Comedies—This slapstick offering had a lot of laughs. I mean it had so many more than the tragedies that we have been running. It's a funny comedy and will please.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DUKE FOR A DAY, A: Musical Comedies—Just two more reels that can be salvaged for the nitrate.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FOUR PARTS: Charley Chase—Very good with trick photography and sound. Charley is all four brothers and he gets a lot of laughs. He even plays all the instruments in his orchestra. Run it. It's good.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN OF POLISH: Shaw and Lee—Nice little nutty fun with a couple of good musical numbers. The gal that sings "I'm Feeling High" is plenty good. She should not be kept from the public.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GOING BYE-BYE: Laurel and Hardy—Very, very funny. There was one big howl about the middle of the first reel to the end. And it was an enjoyable howl. I like to hear them laugh—at comedies.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES, NO. 6: Pete Smith—O. K. Novelty short.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

I'LL BE SINGING YOU: Todd-Kelly—This one kept them laughing from start to finish. Consider it the best comedy this team has made. Running time, 19 minutes.—Russell Allen, Allen's Theatre, Farmington, N. M. Small town patronage.

SOUP AND FISH: Todd-Kelly—These girls are usually good for some laughs. This is no exception and rates a playdate.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPEAKING OF RELATIONS: Irvin S. Cobb—Our suggestion would be that Mr. Cobb devote his time to writing.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHAT PRICE JAZZ: Musical Revues—Every time I date in a two-reeler I get one of these, if I have a date available, and I think they are poor.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

TUNE UP AND SING: Screen Song—This is one reel of good entertainment featuring Lanny Ross singing two popular selections and a very good cartoon comedy in connection. This type of short always pleases our patrons and we hope there are many more of these. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

UNDERNEATH THE BROADWAY MOON: Headliners—One of the best one-reel shorts we have run. Jones' music very popular. Running time, 11 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

WILD ELEPHINKS: Popeye, the Sailor—Good cartoon enjoyed by both old and young.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

RKO

DUMBBELL LETTERS, NO. 1: A new type of subject, and one that audiences go for in a big way. From the opening moment until the last flicker there isn't a letdown. Running time, five minutes.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

EVERYBODY LIKES MUSIC: All star musical—This is only fair entertainment of the slapstick variety. Donald Novis sings two selections and they are about the only part worth mentioning. The orchestra does very well, but the story is terrible and did not please our audience. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOW'S CROPS?: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—Not much to this cartoon. Running time, 7½ minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

ODOR IN THE COURT: Clark & McCullough Series—My audiences generally consider these two comics only fair, but they laughed all the way through this one. I think a large part of its effectiveness was due to the fact that it was preceded by a Dumbbell Letter, which set them in the mood to laugh. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 21: Several times we have complained about Pathe News. Now we will reverse and state their News is improving. It's taking on new snap and interest.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PATHE NEWS 23: Pathe News is becoming more interesting. Thank goodness they have lost the "man on the street."—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MICKEY'S GALA PREMIERE: Mickey Mouse—Unusually good Mickey Mouse. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

PUPPY LOVE: Mickey Mouse—Average Mickey Mouse. Running time, eight minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Universal

GOING PLACES, NO. 1: Lowell Thomas—A very good issue of this series. The Venetian glass episode with which it starts is extremely interesting, and my audience was held breathless. The scenes of the "Russian Riviera," closing with scenes of native African dancing. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES: Cartune Classics—If this color cartoon is any indication of what Universal will bring forth this year in the series, I am amply satisfied in having paid the advance rental. This subject is excellent, color clear, animation and drawing above criticism, music and plot fine. Running time, nine minutes.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

WILLIAM TELL: Oswald Cartoons—A good Oswald cartoon. Music splendid. Running time, one reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

ALL SEALED UP: Ben Blue—Disappointing. A few laughs. Hope the series improves (Big V Comedies). Running time, 19 minutes.—M. W. Matthecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

BUDDY'S CIRCUS: Looney Tunes—This is a very good cartoon comedy of the circus days. Buddy at his best with all of the circus acts make this one reel of good entertainment. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BUDDY, THE WOODSMAN: Looney Tunes—Just another cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BUDDY'S TROLLEY TROUBLES: Looney Tunes—A good cartoon. Most of Vitaphone's shorts are O. K. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CAMERA SPEAKS: Pepper Pot—Here's the nearest nothing that we ever screened. We didn't show it and are going to ask for our money back.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CANNIBAL ISLANDS: Musical World Journeys, E. M. Newman—Some more traveling that nobody cared much about.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES FLOSSIE: Big V Comedies—A few laughs but a lot of dirt.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

I SCREAM: Gus Shy—This is a very good two-reel comedy that will please all patrons. It is of the slapstick variety with plenty of laughs and comedy situations. This is much better than the average two-reeler. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NOT TONIGHT, JOSEPHINE: Frank McHugh, Kitty Kelly—The coloring in this short was the best I have seen. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 21 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

OH, SAILOR, BEHAVE: El Brendel—This is two reels of good slapstick comedy and will keep your patrons laughing from start to finish. Brendel as a Swedish Prince is very amusing and pleased my patrons very much. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PETTIN' IN THE PARK: Merrie Melodies—Good. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SAMOAN MEMORIES: Musical World Journeys, E. M. Newman—Another trip with the talking reporter who thinks he's funny.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

No. 83—ART DEPARTMENTS AND THE FILM CODE

QUESTION—Please advise if there is in existence a code covering that branch of the theatre known as art departments. This should come under the heading of display artists employed by the exhibitor. This work consists of designing, creating and originating advertising displays (large and small) for theatre fronts, lobbies, foyers, cards, banners, electrical animated displays, scenic effects for orchestra pits, stage sets for vaudeville units—in other words, a complete art service for the exhibitor.

The writer works six days per week, on an average of 50 hours per week, with a salary of approximately $30 per week, handling art service for a group of theatres.

I am informed that the sign painters' code calls for a 40-hour week at the rate of $1.25 per hour.

Am I protected by this code and what procedure must be taken to secure the difference in salary since the code became effective? To become a member of the sign painters' union would mean immediate discharge from the company.—FLORIDA.

ANSWER—The motion picture code does not specifically provide for sign painters or display artists or art department workers as such. It does provide for a 40-hour maximum working schedule weekly for virtually all theatre employees and this would apply to such art workers.

However, Clause Section 6 (a), Part 1, Article IV, does say that "skilled mechanics and artisans who are directly and regularly employed by exhibitors shall receive not less than the minimum wage and work no longer than the maximum number of hours per week which were in force as of August 23, 1933," but in no event shall the maximum hours exceed 40 weekly.

If the art worker is unable to come to an understanding with the exhibitor employer as to the establishment of a 40-hour maximum working schedule, or as to what constituted the maximum hours or minimum wages as of August 23, 1933, then the employee has the right to present his case to the Regional Labor Board or the NRA Code Compliance Board in his territory. The address of either board may be obtained from the National Recovery Administration at Washington, D. C. Either board would inform the employee as to his rights. In any event either one of the boards is vested with the power to decide whether the worker is entitled to receive any back salary.

With regards the inquiring art worker's statement that to become a member of the sign painters' union would mean immediate discharge from the company, the motion picture code offers him protection against such discharge, in Section 1 (b), Article III, which says: "No employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment . . . to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing," and if he is interfered with in this connection the employee can bring his complaint to either the Regional Labor Board or to the local Code Compliance Board, referred to in the paragraph next above.

No. 84—"DIAMOND BALL" COMPETITION AFFECTING THEATRES

QUESTION—We have a very peculiar situation here in our city, in which they are playing almost nightly "Diamond Ball," from 7 o'clock to 11:30, at the city park, and to which there is no admission charged.

Please advise us the name and address of the proper person to address in regard to this matter.—FLORIDA.

ANSWER—The motion picture code cannot control the nightly "Diamond Ball" competition which is played in the city park and to which there is no admission charged.

We do not know whether this situation would come under the Outdoor Amusement Code—which has no relation whatsoever with the motion picture code—and it is suggested, therefore, that the matter be placed before Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA Division Administrator, who is in charge of all amusement codes and to whom a letter may be addressed at the National Recovery Administration in Washington, D. C.

No. 85—REPLACING NON-UNION HELP WITH UNION WORKERS

QUESTION—If I were employed in a theatre for four consecutive years, could I be discharged without cause and be replaced by a union worker if the house signed up with the union?—NEW JERSEY.

ANSWER—The motion picture code does not prevent an exhibitor from discharging his non-union projectionist (as in the case referred to above) and substituting in his place a union projectionist. However, the code does say that no employee shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union. The code does prevent an exhibitor from interfering with his employee's participation in a union, but it does not protect the employee in a case where the exhibitor substitutes in his place a union operator.

Theatres Must Carry Liability

Of interest to several hundred New York City exhibitors was the decision made this week by License Commissioner Moss, who held that theatres which do not carry liability insurance cannot escape responsibility for injuries to patrons.

The judgment, which was obtained by a Joseph Rockstein of Brooklyn, involved Minsky's theatre in that borough. Mr. Rockstein had fallen into a hole inside the theatre and Commissioner Moss directed the theatre to pay $324 damages.

United Air Lines Cuts Coast to Coast Schedule

General Airlines has replaced its Fokker tri-motored planes with new Douglas transports between Los Angeles and Salt Lake, connecting there with United Air Lines Boeings to Chicago and New York. The new United Air Lines schedule is two hours faster to Chicago and two and three-quarter hours faster to New York. The Railway Express Agency reports a domestic increase in air shipments of 113 per cent in nine months of 1934 over 1933.

Renew Recording License

Chesterfield and Invincible have renewed their Photophone sound recording license with RCA Victor for recording with the high fidelity system. Mentone has begun a series of two-reel subjects at the Biograph studios in New York.

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Faralla, Friedlander First Division Executives

Dario Faralla has been named treasurer of First Division and Henry Reiner appointed short subject sales manager in charge of the "Musical Moods" series in the Metropolitan area and out-of-town circuit houses. Meyer Gruber and Israel Landau were similarly appointed in the Boston and Louisville exchanges, respectively.

Al Friedlander, assistant to Harry H. Thomas, president of First Division, and in charge of advertising and publicity, has been elected a vice-president of the company. He has been associated with First Division for 14 years.

P. K. Thomajan, formerly associated with Paramount and Harold Lloyd, has joined First Division as assistant to Mr. Friedlander, handling special publicity and advertising on the "Musical Moods" and "Hei Tiki."

David J. Selznick has been named short subject branch manager in Pittsburgh, in charge of the "Musical Moods" shorts series, and Basil Brady will be similarly in charge in Buffalo. It is expected the company will open an exchange in Chicago. M. C. Howard is in charge of the new office in Atlanta.

Denver Managers Organize, Demand Freedom of Action

Managers of theatres in the Denver metropolitan area, at a luncheon last week, condemned the practice of blanket laws to apply to any and all situations, and demanded of the Code Authority that they be permitted to exercise local autonomy over matters affecting the Denver area.

The managers organized Denver Theatre Managers, Inc., and filed incorporation papers. Meetings will be held at the Brown Palace hotel once a month. At their first meeting they voted to permit each theatre to have two giveaways each month. Officers of the organization are: president, Rick Ricketson; vice-president, H. A. Goodridge; treasurer, Frank Culp, and secretary and counsel, Emmett Thurmon. Directors are Mr. Ricketson, Mr. Goodridge, B. J. Hynes, B. D. Cockrill, A. P. Archer, Buzz Briggs and N. W. Kerr.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

AGAIN EXPLOITATION PROVES ITSELF

Regard, if you will, ladies and gentlemen, the chart above, a reproduction of the one published in the news section of last week's issue. It is based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses in three West Coast cities over an eleven-weeks period, and what does it disclose?

That the reason for the startling $66\frac{2}{3}$ per cent increase in grosses on "Circus Clown" over the previous week's attraction at the Los Angeles Downtown Theatre was due "to a personality test campaign put on by the Warnerites in connection with the production".

Thus again is proof offered to the skeptical and indifferent that vigorous exploitation pays its way handsomely. And while agreed that Joe E. Brown has a sufficient following to insure the financial success of his pictures without the benefits of bally, there is but little argument against the fact that to the exploitation campaign on the Los Angeles engagement goes much of the credit for the skyrocketing grosses.

It can be said that the average exhibitor is more the man of business rather than showman. Therefore, the highest financial peak in the above charting conveys a box office message he should have little difficulty in understanding.

Bill Levey makes another point against the star system in his article on a following page by stating that patrons shy away from those attractions receiving the fatal four stars. Evidently the gag works this way—the higher rating a picture receives, the more customers pass up the box office.

THE IMPORTANT SHORT

Though long deferred, the general trend toward better selection and merchandising of the short subject becomes pronounced as leading circuits pay much more attention to the proper spotting of these important screen units.

Recently reported by Fred Ayer are the activities in this direction of the Hoblitzelle circuit where, supervised by General Manager O'Donnell and directed by Mrs. Besa Short, functions efficiently a department to screen and accurately review shorts for the information of all the circuit managers. Paramount, RKO, Loew, Fox and Warner bookers are also displaying equal solicitude.

Managers who have to do with their theatre bookings and are inclined to spot one- and two-reelers "catch-as-catch-can" might adopt with profit the more searching methods now in vogue. It is more than a theory that the short product surrounding a feature can make or break the entire show.

HOW'S YOUR WARDROBE?

Orders issued by the home office of a certain circuit that managers were not to spend any money at-all at-all on exploitation did not deter one showman who contributed his highly prized fur-lined overcoat as the principal part of the costume for a street bally.

Should this trend not be discouraged, we may soon expect a situation where managers will not be employed unless their wardrobes in every respect are fully up to what the well-dressed man is expected to have on hand for all sorts of stunts.

Imagine, if you will, the sad predicament of the showman with a wife and family who has been incontinently fired for not being able to furnish at a moment's notice his high hat or dancing pumps when the occasion requires.

Gentlemen, something must be done.

The business of lifting the hat to the advertising chieftains of Radio City Music Hall is now in order for that very excellent newspaper advertising campaign on "The Pursuit of Happiness" in the New York press.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Many Endorsements Secured on "Wiggs"

Manager M. F. Morrison, Strand, Dover, N. H., forwards the first campaign on "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," putting one on strong enough to necessitate a holdover, he reports.

Special previews were held for Boy and Girl Scout leaders, heads of civic organizations, women's clubs and civic officials which returned helpful endorsements, advising both parents and children to attend the showing. Exceptional also was Morrison's success in persuading his local press to run the review of the picture on the day before opening. Letters were sent to all members of prominent women's clubs calling attention to Pauline Lord's first screen appearance. College and high school professors were likewise contacted.

"Mrs. Wiggs" barrels were planted in numerous grocery stores, copy requesting bundles or packages to be dropped to help some needy family, in addition to plug for the picture. Heralds and programs were distributed for full coverage from house to house, at football games, hotels, restaurants and parked automobiles and at schools.

Besides more than the usual newspaper breaks, Morrison was also able to plant the "home spun philosophy" one column press book mats a week ahead.

60,000 Letters Plug "Green Gable" Advance

For a buildup of "Anne of Green Gables" now in production, under the signature of Ned E. Depinet, Leon J. Bamberger is sending out a total of 60,000 letters to Better Film committees, clergymen, educators, heads of colleges, high schools, etc. Copy gives national release date and general description of the picture, incorporating approval of National Council of Teachers of English, other well known names and organizations.

It is suggested that theatremen expecting to play the picture endeavor to ascertain to whom these letters have been addressed locally for more intensive cooperation on the advance campaign when show is dated.

QUAKER OATS DATE EXTENDED

Terry Turner announces that due to the delay in the general release of the picture, the Quaker Oats-Six Day Bike Rider exploitation contest has been extended to December 15th. Entries are to be sent to Mr. Turner whose address is Quaker Oats, Box 1083, Chicago, Ill.

Campaigns intended for the Quaker Oats prizes are also eligible for the Quigley Awards providing managers attach instructions to this effect.

Atmospheric Lobby For "Merry Widow"

An elaborate Hollywood opening at the New York Astor topped the advance campaign on "The Merry Widow," of more than passing interest being the radio broadcast from the lobby handled by Major Bowes of "Amateur Night" and the "Capitol Family" broadcast fame who introduced the many screen, theatre and society celebrities attending the premiere.

In the spirit of the period of the picture, the lobby decorations were distinguished by chandeliers which were more or less exact copies of the old-fashioned gas-light fixtures, the rest of the display carrying out with heavy silk draperies the continental luxury suggested by the picture.

Costumes from Jeannette MacDonald's wardrobe were featured in style windows of leading women's shops and also effective was the full display (see photo) in the prominently located Southern Pacific Fifth Ave. offices. Not a small part of the advance interest was credited to the quite commendable newspaper advertising campaign.

Many other interesting exploitations are suggested by Billy Ferguson in the press book such as ballroom tieup to fit in with the rising popularity of the waltz. National Coca-Cola tieup is also reported with ads in various magazines showing the stars doing the famous dance.

For "We Live Again" at the Radio City Music Hall, Hazel Flynn and Jim MacFarland in conjunction with United Artists' exploitation staff promoted a series of tieups with R. H. Macy in which that store went strong for the Russian influence of the picture in various departments.

Newspaper ads feature dresses, hats, scarfs, furs, coats, pajamas, boots and costume jewelry, many of these carrying photos of the star and of course full theatre credits. Window displays and department exhibits are also tied in in the merchandizing plan.

"Merry Widow" Fifth Avenue Window

Promotes Window For Dance Number

Evidently they're dancing "The Continental" all over Bridgeport, Conn., and the surrounding area these days, judging by the unique method of instruction in the new dance featured in "The Gay Divorcee," made possible by Manager Ed Lynch of the Cameo Theatre, who worked the smart gag of having a couple do the number four times daily in the window (see photo) of one of the leading local department stores.

The bally was put on at 11 a.m., one, three and five p.m., Ed forwarding other photos showing traffic effectually tied up in front of the store. Entire background of window was devoted to theatre credits and large panel showing Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in various positions of the dance.

The stunt has all the earmarks of a natural and psychologically is more effective than the same idea previously exploited in theatre lobby or mezzanine. It no doubt will be adapted in other spots for the same gratifying results.

Warnerites Meet Star With DuBarry Coach

The soothing California climate has not taken the snap out of Ed Selzer's speed to judge from the recent stunt put over by the Warner Brothers' studio publicity director in conjunction with Warner exploiteer, Harry Maizlich.

When Dolores Del Rio returned to Hollywood via airplane from her visit to Mexico, she was met at the airport by an ornate golden stage coach of the DuBarry period. The bally was wheeled right up to the plane and the contrast between the two modes of transportation of course excited newspaper curiosity, good breaks resulting.

Evens Ties In Card Finish To Campaign

With the sensational finish made by the St. Louis Cardinals, it was to be expected that the showmen in that city would guide their exploitation to tie in with the widespread excitement. Manager Harold W. "Chick" Evens was fortunate enough to schedule a date on "Death on the Diamond" right in the midst of the champion's stretch drive.

On the opening night, Evens arranged a theatre party with the baseball men as guests, and as they arrived each was introduced as part of the broadcast from the lobby. The nature of the picture itself and the fact that many of the scenes were staged at Sportsman's Park, the home of the Cardinals, with thousands of locals in the stands, were responsible for the very enthusiastic welcome given the date.

Sport editors also helped out, stories being landed on these pages in addition to publicity in the regular picture section. The stunt clicked well and takes its place with Frank Larson's recent World Series' wager as a slant that can be adapted otherwise.

FIVE DAYS MORE TO DEADLINE

There is still time to send in that campaign for the October Quigley Award. As previously announced, the deadline is midnight of Thursday, November 8th, by which time entries must be at Committee Headquarters.

John D. Clark, Fox Film Corp.; H. D. Buckley, United Artists Corp. and Robert M. Gillham, Paramount Pictures will act as the October judges, and their decision will be published in issue of November 17th.

Book Tieup Features "British Agent" Date

A very thorough tieup with the publishers of the book from which the picture was made distinguished Charlie Curran's campaign on "British Agent" at the New York Strand. The Warner Theatre publicity head secured more than the usual display cooperation by promoting the entire window (see photo) in the publisher's leading New York retail store and, in addition, obtained synopses of the story containing photos of the cast and some of the dialogue. The binding and makeup simulated the original copies of the book, these being distributed at the theatre and the store. Also furthering the idea was an effectively designed float plugging the date and also the book, which during its travels was parked from time to time at the book store.

Announced as a "first time" was another full window display in the local offices of the Canadian Pacific Lines, and tieups were also made with Fifth Ave. Arnold Constable store featuring the Kay Francis' gowns, the background given over to a large portrait of that star. To advertise this, the store stuffed all outgoing packages with specially printed heralds and featured the styles in three column full newspaper ads, which included cuts of Kay Francis and theatre credits.

Drug Chain Sponsors Lykes' "Lip Mark" Gag

Well executed was Jack Lykes' smart tieup on "Kiss and Makeup" at the Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, in which drug chain with 48 stores put on a "lip mark" contest. Chain supplied entry blanks with space for impression of lips of girls who competed for the cash and ticket prizes given to those whose lip marks most nearly resembled in size and shape those of Genevieve Tobin.

Special winner displays on this were carried in all stores (see photo), larger spots plugging the idea with makeup demonstrators. Chain also took large newspaper ads. Other cosmetic tieups were made and Jack further promoted candy kisses from the local McCroory's in imprinted glassine bags with "Here's a kiss for you" copy, which were distributed by girls in bellhop costumes on streets.

On "Sophie Lang," Jack worked the identification stunt by having girl appear at downtown store at certain hours, and mention in advertising, cash prizes given daily by the store to those who identified her. Maloney Makes Football Tieups on "Gentleman"

Football, both amateur and professional, being a favored interest in Providence, Manager H. H. Maloney of the State Theatre tied his date on "Last Gentleman" to an important local college contest by arranging theatre parties for the visiting and home teams and hooking the event up tighter by placing announcements on bulletin boards at local college. Score cards with theatre imprint were distributed at the college stadium and also spots where professional games were held.

The "Can you keep a secret" cards were planted in all sections of the town, circulars stuffed in all packages at big market and sound truck was also employed in the downtown district and at the football stadia.

SOME FOOTBALL SUGGESTIONS

*Brush Up On Dependable Ideas
To Tie in Local Pigskin Interest;
Gridiron Slants Can Aid Grosses*

The current football season distinguished at this writing by the number of upsets in all sections of the country presents perhaps more opportunities for exploitation than usual for theatremen utilizing this angle for publicity. Now that the preliminary games are out of the way, managers are concentrating on coming local games of more than passing interest to the sport lovers in their communities. To assist in tying these to theatres, the following are suggested which have been used in the past and have proven of value at the box office:

The Free Show Wager

This newest angle is credited to Frank Larson, of the Paramount, Idaho Falls, Idaho, who used it successfully on this and last year's World Series, a full account of which is carried in last week's issue. Although the gag was used on baseball, it was suggested that the same idea be adapted to the football season. Perhaps the most effective slant was the generous amount of free publicity Larson secured daily in the sport pages of his local papers, and for this reason the idea is especially recommended, although it was put over to secure complete coverage from all classes of patronage.

The Old Reliable Rally

An old-timer that has proven its worth season in and season out and still retains its potency is the football rally put across on the eve of possibly the most important home game of the local team.

The procedure is to arrange a sale of student tickets at a discount based on a guaranteed number of admissions which might run from three to 500 or more, these tickets to be handled exclusively by the student committee and not sold at the box office. For smoother handling, a special section should be roped off and students allowed in a body at a certain set time. In connection, college flags and decorations of both teams should be borrowed and hung inside and out the theatre, and in making up the schedule, time should be allowed for some sort of a stage program in which students, players and coaches can participate.

Held at night, the old-time torchlight parade from the college grounds to the theatre led by the university band is another angle not to be slighted, and where practical this bally should be routed through the main streets and included should be theatre banners for a closer hookin.

When the parade reaches the theatre, a concert by the band is suggested for a crowd-stopper, after which the delegation should enter the theatre at one time, the house staff being spotted to ensure speed and facility in seating.

The stage program might include pep talks by coaches and players, band concert, organized cheering and singing of college songs for which slide should be obtained in advance, music to be played by house orchestra, organist or college band as the case may be.

In connection with this stunt, it is wise to arrange for some extra police and ushers to restrain the more irrepressible among the students. A few rehearsals with the house staff are also in order.

Only a few weeks ago, Ted Gamble utilized the rally as part of his buildup on "Six Day Bike Rider" at the Broadway, Portland, Ore., by inviting the students of both Washington and Oregon universities to put on a stage program prior to the Oregon-Washington game. Papers went for it and the house was packed with many turnaways.

Manager Maloney, State, Providence, R.I., put on a similar party just recently on "Last Gentleman," having as guests both teams scheduled to play an important game locally. He also distributed imprinted score cards at the game and put the idea over quite successfully.

Lobby Displays

For a week-to-week stunt, scores of local games and others of nation-wide importance could be posted in the lobby. For out-of-town games, flashes as the scores come in over the wire could be arranged with sport editors of local papers. College decorations, photos of popular players, coaches, action shots of spectacular scoring plays, etc., might be used as further decoration. Announcement of scores from the stage, over house P. A. system and on the screen are other acceptable methods, as is broadcasting in mezzanine and lounges.

Other Sport Page Ideas

Extraordinary interest is being created this season on guessing scores and results of games, and quite a number of theatremen are tying into this slant by offering guest tickets to those guessing correctly the winners of certain games and nearest scores. This makes for a natural sport page tieup, and where this is not practical it is being put over with heralds distributed at the theatre and other spots.

Revived also is the football rules lecture wherein local coaches and students of football explain the various formations and more technical rulings from the stage of the theatre or to interested groups in the mezzanine. Last year some cases were noted where groups of players were drafted to make these descriptions more graphic.

Other Exploitation

Free programs distributed at game are again being called upon this year. A more popular form is the four page folder, front page devoted to announcement of game and place, inside pages to team lineups and score card with theatre attraction at bottom. Back page is sold for merchants' ads for enough to pay entire cost of printing.

Imprinted cardboard megaphones, balloons, sound trucks at stadium are among other dependable slants, and of course very important is the showing of motion pictures of important games. Invariably this is a good grosser and in many cases cost has been split up among interested merchants to make the idea possible where a theatre cannot stand entire cost alone.—A-MIKE.

Toups Puts On Teaser "Wimpole" Street Bally

For street bally on "Barretts," Rodney Toups, manager, and Moise Block, publicity, Loew's State, New Orleans, dug up an ancient bicycle and had appropriately dressed couple ride around town. No signs were attached, but when questioned replied they were "The Barretts of Wimpole Street."

Notices placed on bulletin boards of all women's clubs and dramatic schools. Radio broadcast featured old fashioned songs and cinema shop tieup was effected with leading department store.

Some Election and Armistice Day Ideas

Showmen who are thinking ahead now give plenty of thought to the various ways of stimulating November and December business. Many campaigns to profit from observance of local election days are in work as are also programs for Armistice Day. The following ideas are suggested for immediate preparation:

Election Day Slants

The ever reliable slant of announcing returns from the stage or over the house p. a. system will still serve in many spots and where this is not practical the idea is being arranged in the mezzanine where the radio will be called upon. Either way, it should be considered, and where used, mention made in advertising.

Members in various spots have invited candidates of both parties to make short talks or take bows from the stage the day before. This slant has possibilities if it is handled in a non-partisan fashion and when it does not take up too much time.

Where pictures lend themselves to this treatment for windows and tacking the regulation "vote for" election card is also in line, using cuts of stars with name, picture and dates underneath. Star stills, cuts or mats should be available at exchanges.

Armistice Day Observance

American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and G. A. R. local posts will no doubt observe this day, and managers can tie in with one or all to run special stage presentations and Armistice shorts, with trailers crediting the organizations. House and lobby should be decorated with flags, trophies, photos, etc., borrowed from the local posts, and if there is a street parade, rest room facilities might be offered as a good will gesture. Information booth in lobby for out of town visitors has also been used. Special show should be advertised, especially to those who seek further entertainment after the parade.

Some Recent Reports on "Here Comes the Navy"

R. E. England, manager and Charles L. Alley, assistant, at the Virginian Theatre, Charleston, West Va., stencilled sidewalks in business and residential sections, placed special cards in leading hotels and bus terminals and had spot announcements over radio four days before with playlet by artists from station, day preceding.

Roses were distributed to ladies opening day, "sailors delight" sundaes were featured at drug stores and marines in bannered truck ended up at theatre where they performed special drill, after which they were guests of the management.

In Ridgeway, Pa.

Where John C. Fisher, Strand Theatre ran a newspaper contest in which passes were given to those who could supply the correct answer to a series of six photos run in the paper of current events with which the Navy had been connected. Newsboys paraded to theatre, carrying banners, to witness picture and girls worked telephone campaign calling rural districts, this slant being employed profitably on the bigger dates.

"FOUR STARS" HURT GROSSES

*States Long Island Round Tabler
Who Maintains Present System of Star Rating Turns Business Away*

by WILLIAM LEVEY

Manager, Suffolk, Riverhead, N. Y.

A four star hit!

Recently I placed this adjective on my marquee. The picture was "The House of Rothschild." Did the picture do business? Of course it did! But it did not do business because of the fact that it was rated as a four star hit. It did business because every Tom, Dick and Harry who had seen the picture went out and spoke about it and told every other Tom, Dick and Harry to see it.

The harm that the star rating system is causing the box office cannot be over-estimated. Two stars, three stars, four stars; after all, if four stars means that it is a great picture, and Mr. and Mrs. Theatregoer get to believe in the "stars" what will become of the pictures which will be unfortunate to receive only a minor portion of the star rating system? We all of us in show business know that a good many pictures are really good pictures, regardless of whether the picture has any stars or not; many independent made pictures have been very kind to the box office, even though Liberty or the News gave them one or no stars.

Plays to All Classes

Situated as I am here in Riverhead, we cater to the extremes in picture tastes. We have on one hand the natives, farmers mostly, laborers and office workers. On our left flank we have the elite, the cream of society, from the Hamptons. It is a common sight to see a "Rolls" pull up to the theatre and the swank step on the curb, walk into the theatre, while "James" drives off to wait until the end of the show. Directly follows Mr. and Mrs. Farmer and their brood of five or six fresh from the potato fields coming to spend a quiet Saturday evening at the movies after a hard day's work digging the lowly potato. What does star rating mean to these people, one from the soil, the other from Park Avenue? Who reads Liberty magazine? The average citizen, the toiler, the middle class, not Park Avenue. Therefore, it is this patronage that should be protected from the silly star rating system. To the high-brow trade, the four stars given by any publication mean little, if anything.

Four-Star Rating Hurts

Only a short time ago, I was showing a picture which had been given two and a half stars by the News. Some of our better element coming into the lobby of the theatre (noticing a display on the picture and the advertising bearing the fact the picture had been given two and one-half stars), remarked, "Two and a half stars—I want to see that picture. It must be good, only two and a half stars. If it had four stars, I'd keep away."

Star rating system is bad dope for the box office.

The audience is the sole judge of any picture, not any single magazine or newspaper. Just because the Liberty gives a picture stars does not mean that it is a good picture. We have had plenty of flops here with four star ratings. And also plenty of money-getters from pictures without any stars from any publication.

What this industry needs most is not any star rating system. It needs more than anything else the support of Hollywood to give the exhibitor good pictures. This will enable the manager of a theatre to tell his patrons that he has a good picture and his patrons will believe him. A manager's endorsement of a picture should mean that the picture will meet with every expectation of being a really fine picture and this will carry far more weight and bring more dollars to the box office than all the stars any periodical can bestow upon it. . . .

Food Stores Cooperate On "Our Daily Bread"

Directly pointed to tie-ins with food stores was part of Manager L. A. Lafevre's campaign on "Our Daily Bread" at the Lyric, Minneapolis, A. & P. Chain putting out heralds, one side carrying selling copy and scene stills from the picture and on the reverse ads on grocery specials. Along the same idea, windows were secured in bakery stores and many independent food shops carried window strips.

Favorable results were reported from a radio dramatization put on with leading station and in the nature of a premiere was the opening night wherein floodlights, red carpets, loud speakers, etc. were utilized.

Solomon's Free Transportation Idea

Talent Quest Features Sig's "Dames" Campaign

A "local girl makes good" tie-in to a bathing beauty revue to give Newark girls a possible opportunity in Warner pictures was potent in Sig Solomon's very commendable campaign on "Dames" at the Regent in that New Jersey spot. Through Mort Blumenstock's office, Sig discovered that one of the girls appearing in the picture had originated in nearby Orange and used this for a peg on which to hang his contest idea and to break publicity in the local papers.

Winner, who was chosen by audience applause, also received expensive wrist watch and the 12 selected girls were given bathing suits, all prizes promoted by Sig. Winner's photo and measurements were forwarded to Bus Berkeley, Warner dance director.

Solomon successfully attempted a Hollywood opening, decorating and lighting his lobby in appropriate fashion, the proceedings in charge of local master of ceremonies who invited patrons to speak over a "mike" attached to marquee horns. Comely chorus girls added further color.

Further favorable reaction was obtained from hookup with Pontiac dealer who for theatre plug supplied new car and driver each evening during run which was used to transport, free of charge, patrons from nearby suburbs. Sig advertised this to the extent that the stunt went over so well the motor men had as many as three and four cars running at one time, each car (see photo) carrying invitation copy.

You have a right to boast about your NOVEMBER program from FOX!

YOU can tell your townsfolk that you've never shown finer entertainment . . . and they'll agree enthusiastically. You can swap stories with fellow-exhibitors about peak November grosses . . . and have the facts to back you.

For this latest crop of FOX releases measures right up with those great first-quarter hits!

A fellow showman you all admire presents a star all America loves!

GEORGE M. COHAN, America's First Actor, in "GAMBLING" with Wynne Gibson, Dorothy Burgess. A Harold B. Franklin Production. Directed by Rowland V. Lee.

A role as great as his "Cisco Kid" . . . with twice the driving drama!

Absorbing story of student nurses . . . the girls everybody wonders about, nobody knows!

"THE WHITE PARADE" with LORETTA YOUNG and JOHN BOLES. A Jesse L. Lasky production. Directed by Irving Cummings.

"THE FIRST WORLD WAR." Secret Films from Nations' Archives. Edited by Laurence Stallings. Produced by Truman Talley. (In association with Simon & Schuster).

An exploitation natural to fill your town with college cheer!

"BACHELOR OF ARTS" with TOM BROWN, ANITA LOUISE, Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Arline Judge and STEPIN FETCHIT. Produced by John Stone. Directed by Louis King. From John Erskine's novel.

The clink of its grosses will be music to your ears!

"MUSIC IN THE AIR" (Music by Jerome Kern. Lyrics and libretto by Oscar Hammerstein, 2nd). With GLORIA SWANSON and JOHN BOLES . . . DOUGLASS MONTGOMERY, June Lang. An Erich Pommer production. Directed by Joe May.

And when November's over you'll have plenty of money for Christmas presents . . .

THE REAL BOSSES

ADDRESSING the workers of General Motors, Mr. Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of the corporation, has written a letter remarking: "We have got to make products which the public will buy and we can do it only by all working together with the same idea in mind. The buyers of our products are the real bosses. . . . We must satisfy them or lose our jobs."

That's perhaps a bit obvious, but it seems that it has to be said in many industries over and over again. Everything important has to be said over and over again.

Also, to say it again, it is quite as true of the motion picture as it is of motor cars—probably truer.

ENGINEERS are supposed to be dusty fellows of facts and slide rules and tabulations. So just fancy the thrill of discovering, in an article for the next issue of Better Theatres, that Mr. J. T. Knight, Jr., engineer in charge of maintenance for Paramount Publix, says: "Motion Pictures have definitely established themselves as the means of distributing the greatest amount of pleasure to the greatest number, at the lowest unit cost, of any method or medium of creative expression in the history of the world. If motion pictures cost twice as much the world could not do without them. . . ."

STEPHEN DECATUR'S PAPER

WITH its usual genius for misunderstanding The Chicago Tribune last week presented a page one cartoon plaint by the venerable Mr. John T. McCutcheon, wanting to know why Chicago "never gets the first run movies until long after they appear in most other American cities?" The answer is that Chicago does get them, but that the Loop is "first run" and the neighborhood houses are subsequent runs, even in glorious Chicago. Mr. McCutcheon and the Tribune have been misled by scattering returns from a few outlying precincts.

THE Administration is proud of the fact that part of its reconstruction program looks ahead 120 years—the time it will take the walnut trees in the reforestation projects to mature. Even Washington will agree the answer is nuts.

NO AMATEURS

IN a statistical moment the other day we sent for the employment records of the Motion Picture Herald's editorial staff and engaged in some profound tabulations and calculations. When we emerged and verified the results with a comptometer we found that the average editorial worker on this journal is 40.1 years old and has had 15.7 years experience in the world of the motion picture. The longest term of service to Motion Picture Herald and publications merged therein is twenty-seven years, and the newest member of the staff has been on the job for two years, with some years of the stage and studio behind him.

ALL TIED-UP

WHILE it is true that "The Silver Streak" by RKO Radio Pictures is not one of its most pretentious addresses to the box office, it is none-the-less a scheduled dramatic release. And that, to those who can remember the days of "sponsored pictures" and the hostility of the screen to what they represented, causes one to raise at least one eyebrow at the publicity element of this train picture project. The Burlington streamlined Zephyr is the star of the piece and has been the focus of railroad publicity from the RKO ranch all through the late summer. Now the Burlington is to put the train in service November 20 in sequel to the release of the picture, according to RKO publicity copy labeled "Trade News 11334." In addition, to add, one may suppose, to the aromas of the event there is a Camel cigarette "tie-up," promoting train-cigarette-picture.

No one can properly decry endeavours for the promotional support of motion pictures. But if pictures are to be made around publicity campaigns they are likely to prove of the same quality as other products which consist entirely of selling points.

The box office can be served only by production which shoots first at a good story and thinks about how to tell the world it is good afterwards. When tie-ups start at the camera they are likely to show on the screen.

RAW MATERIAL

THE market price of the chemical components of the human body, iron, carbon, hydrogen, calcium, etc., averages about 70 cents. At a Massachusetts Institute of Technology dance last week the girls were subjected to electroanalysis meters as a basis for the admission prices paid by their escorts. The girls assayed from 55 to 85 cents. Maybe they run that way in Cambridge—in Hollywood they rate higher.

FILM COUNCILS

When the National Council of Women, in Canada, recently passed a sweeping resolution noting the influence of the motion picture and urging character-developing films, the Whig-Standard, Kingston, Ontario newspaper, was moved to editorialize: "... films cannot be produced down to the level of the child mind. . . . The majority of films are for adults, and . . . are good. . . . The trouble is often not with the pictures, but with the parents. . . ." Also a letter to the paper from the local Council of Women of Kingston commended manager E. O. Smithies of the Capitol for his children's matinees, interpreted as an answer to such resolutions. . . .

LUBITSCH ART

Andrew R. Kelley, speaking out in the Washington Times, says: "Director Ernst Lubitsch is among those who complain that the new production code hobbles art. I began to take this seriously until I read further and discovered he had the same conception of art as Mr. Earl Carroll. This is the kind of art that Minsky burlesque parades in strip numbers and that is shown in its highest form on French post-cards."

ELECTION DAY

In its usual annual effort to cut into the strong radio competition which is offered film houses over the country on Election Day when returns are broadcast throughout the evening, theatres this week offered returns from their stages, the largest single group being in New York where 90 local houses, in a tieup with the Hearst New York American, announced the swing of the public voice. . . .

STAGE UNITS

Soundly successful appears the switch by Edward M. Fay, wellknown Providence circuit head, from old-style vaudeville to modified musical comedy stage presentations as an adjunct to feature pictures. Regular bookings are expected to follow the initial experimentation. . . .

NOT "ROXY"

Meeting to reach a final decision, a first mortgage bondholders' committee for the Roxy theatre in New York last week determined that Samuel Lionel (Roxy) Rothafel was not their choice to return to the theatre as its operating chief. . . .

RECOVERY AID

With Maurice F. Barr in charge of distribution, New Orleans exhibitors in large numbers are cooperating in the exhibition of a three-minute trailer supporting the recent statement of President Roosevelt that the aid of the nation's local community chests is indispensable to the recovery program. . . .

NUDITY AND JAIL

Of little avail was the old standby plea of attorneys of "artistic and educational" when the Seattle censor board in its first prosecution in many a year hailed into court Spencer Fox, manager of the Star, charging him with showing allegedly obscene films. The sentence: $100 fine, 30 days in jail, the jail sentence suspended on his promise to discontinue the showings. Two one-reelers was the cause, one "art" poses of a nude girl, the other depicting a Hawaiian "strip-tease" dancer. . . .

AN RKO ASSISTANT

To South America to develop RKO's Brazilian and Argentinian business shortly will go Ben J. Cammack, former Warner St. Louis manager recently appointed assistant to Phil Reisman, vice-president of RKO Export. James Winn succeeds Mr. Cammack in St. Louis, Hall Walsh remaining as assistant. . . .

LANGUAGE LESSONS

Adding a new note to its educationally-sponsored selected features, the Fine Arts theatre in Boston offers free lessons in modern languages following the performance on certain nights of the week. In connection with the showing of "The Blue Light," lessons in German were presented, with future similar instruction appropriate to the film planned. . . .

TAX BATTLE

A descent en masse on the state legislature, demanding repeal of the 10 per cent amusement tax (plus a 2 per cent sales tax) is the plan of the MPTO of Mississippi. Meeting in Jackson last week in semi-annual session, the organization heard president Ed Kuykendall of the MPTOA, principal speaker. Retaining their offices are: R. X. Williams, Jr., president; J. E. Alford, first vice-president; J. A. West, second vice-president; W. E. Elkin, secretary-treasurer. . . .

LOST OPPORTUNITY

Forced by ill health and physician's orders to six months of recuperation in Tahitian seclusion, Ann Harding thus loses her opportunity to be the first actress to star in a full length feature done in the new Technicolor process, Walter Wanger's production of "Peacock Feather" for Paramount release. . . .

SUPREME COURT HALTS FOX—TRI-ERGON ATTACK

U. S. Bench Grants Review of Patent Case in Response to Petition Charging Fox with Attempt to Coerce Industry

The United States Supreme Court at Washington—highest tribunal in the land—figuratively administered to William Fox last Monday afternoon a stinging slap after it had been informed that he was using his position in the matter of the Tri-Ergon sound patents to "coerce substantially the entire motion picture industry."

Reconsidering its refusal of October 8th to review lower court decisions upholding the validity of two Tri-Ergon patents, the Supreme Court granted the industry a rehearing for a review of the claims, thus bringing to an abrupt halt Mr. Fox's widely-publicized legal attack against the industry, and, thereby, considerably weakening his present so-called "dominant" position through which he hopes to collect royalties by the bushful on the "flywheel" mechanism in sound equipment and on the "double printing" process in production.

Acting with dramatic suddenness, on behalf of virtually all companies, Paramount Publix Corporation petitioned the court at Washington over the week-end to again consider the validity of the Tri-Ergon patents as a result of the wholesale filing by Mr. Fox of infringement suits against some 20 important producers and laboratories. These suits, it is felt, had the immediate effect of threatening to interfere with the entire industry in its business of producing and exhibiting motion picture entertainment for the public.

Paramount Wins Point

Paramount and Electrical Research Products, Inc., won an important point over American Tri-Ergon in federal court in Brooklyn when Judge Marcus B. Campbell ruled that certain provisions in the interlocutory decree submitted by Tri-Ergon to put into effect the court's original findings of a year ago in the double print patent infringement case would work undue hardship on Paramount and eliminated the provisions from the decree.

Charles Neave, of counsel for Erpi, which is defending Paramount, had argued that the interlocutory decree prepared by Tri-Ergon for Judge Campbell's signature might, if approved, result in an injunction "against the products of the patented process" which, Mr. Neave said, might restrain Paramount from distributing films made with the double print process, rather than merely enjoining Paramount from further use of the patented process held to be infringed.

Mr. Fox is now right back where he started from four weeks ago. His former position can be restored only by a formal decision from the Supreme Court affirming that of the courts below.

No date was set by the Supreme Court

ALL QUIET ALONG THE FOX FRONT

Silence prevailed over the William Fox Tri-Ergon camp in New York this week after the United States supreme court agreed to investigate the validity of the Tri-Ergon patents. The Fox machinery, which had been grinding out lawsuits by the carload against motion picture companies, came to a sudden halt. There was nothing to be said by any one of the brilliant array of Fox legal representatives. "The situation speaks for itself," declared a spokesman for Kenyon and Kenyon, of Fox counsel. "There is nothing that we can add."

Nor was Mr. Fox heard describing—as has been his habit of late—to old cronies seated around the luncheon table at the New York Picture Club on Broadway, his plans for opening 16 branch offices in strategic locations to serve as collection agencies for Tri-Ergon royalties.

Instead, he was on the receiver's end of a wire that emanated from the office of a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio executive at Culver City, which said: "Hope you didn't spend the money you didn't get."

for hearing oral arguments in the review, which may yet upset the validity of the Fox claims. The hearing will probably not be held for a month or two, with another two months elapsing before a decision is likely. Mr. Fox, therefore, cannot proceed with his damage and injunction suits against the individual companies until mid-January, at least.

Of considerable importance in connection with the new development is the fact that they Supreme Court has never declared that the patents are valid, or that they are being infringed, or that Mr. Fox is their rightful owner, which point is being disputed by Fox Film in another court. By its former action the court merely refused to review the lower courts because it felt there was not sufficient reason for a review.

The review will be made both on the "flywheel" and "double printing" patents. The federal court for the eastern district of New York originally ruled that the printing process for which Fox claimed patents, in a suit against Paramount, was not patentable because "the patentees made no contribution to the art of photography." But the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed this finding on the ground that the process developed by the three German inventors—Hans Vogt, Joseph Massolle and Jo Engl—"marked an important advance in the art." Paramount, in asking a Supreme Court review, maintained that the Appellate Court had "disregarded the findings of fact made by the trial judge."

The basis of the industry's defense is that the patents covered methods well known in the industry that do not constitute patentable inventions.

Filing a petition at the same time with Paramount for a review of an action involving the "flywheel" were Wilmer and Vincent and Altoona Publix Theatres, both of which lost the original decision and an appeal, heard in federal district court in Pennsylvania.

Since the refusal of the Supreme Court last month to review the case, it was set forth in Paramount's petition, Mr. Fox has filed suits charging infringement and asking for injunctions and damages, against: Amer-Anglo, Cinelab, Columbia, Consolidated Film, Du-Art Laboratories, Filmfab, First Division, H. E. R. Laboratories, Loew's, Malcolm Laboratories, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Monogram, Producers' Laboratories, Reliance, Talking Picture Epics, Twentieth Century, Universal and Warners. Suits had previously been filed against RKO, Electrical Research Products and Radio Corporation (Photophone).

It was charged in the Paramount petition this week that William Fox was seeking, through American Tri-Ergon, to dominate the business of talking motion pictures. It has been said that he is seeking $100,000,000 damages for alleged infringement, with which to stage a "come back" in the industry.

On a showing to the Supreme Court of the great importance of the controversy and the potential effect of its economic and social significance, the court granted the hearing.

Another Device Substituted

Unless the patents are set aside the alleged offenders—virtually the entire industry—must either pay for past usage of the processes involved or else engage in a long and complicated fight in the courts.

A decision of the Pennsylvania court, handed down last week in the disposition of the Wilmer and Vincent and Altoona Publix case, makes it necessary to change reproducing machines in theatres so as to take them out of the field covered by the patents, or else meet license terms imposed by Tri-Ergon. However, RCA has already started to substitute another device for the "flywheel," and it is generally understood that Erpi is prepared to do likewise.

The Pennsylvania court has already appointed a special master to work with Tri-Ergon and the defendants in preparing an accounting of profits to serve as a basis for computing damages.

Meanwhile, none of the principals in Mr. Fox's impressive and expensive array of legal talent were available to discuss the new Supreme Court development.

Paramount, in its petition, admitted that, "There is no conflict of decisions as between different circuits (courts) on the question of the validity of this patent, but," the company contended, "events have occurred since the denial of the writ (last month by the Supreme Court) which clearly take the case outside the general rule requiring a conflict of decisions as a prerequisite to the grant of a writ of certiorari in the ordinary patent case."

Holds Actions in Abeyance

"Since the denial of the writ of certiorari the overwhelming majority of motion picture producers have been sued in the second circuit, where the courts are committed on the validity of the patent, and the respondent (Fox) can thus achieve its purpose without extending litigation beyond the second circuit," the Paramount petition declared. "Therefore, the court should not dispose of this petition upon the mere ground of lack of a conflict of decision."

The new action of the Supreme Court ordering a rehearing does not automatically suspend the various court actions against the producers and laboratories, but it does hold them in abeyance until a final decision is made by the Supreme Court. The reversal of a refusal to review the case by the Supreme Court is very rare in the history of that court. The last time such a reversal was made occurred in 1928 in the case of Olmstead vs. U. S. in connection with wire tapping. The petition at that time was based on the fact that wide questions of public policy were involved.

Charge Ruling Used for Coercion

"In the usual course of patent litigation the opportunity exists and is exercised of having suits brought and determined in several circuits involving the same or substantially the same issues," Paramount's petition explained. "But the instant decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the second circuit is not the mere beginning of patent litigation which will extend into the several circuits. By reason of peculiar circumstances the respondent is in a position to confine this litigation to the second circuit."

"A decree of infringement in the second circuit against any infringer will bind it not only in that circuit but throughout the whole United States and will permit the patent owner, in further proceedings in the second circuit, to have accounting for infringements occurring anywhere in the United States," said the petition.

The decision, it was charged, is "being used to coerce substantially the entire industry."

It was argued by the petitioner, Paramount, that there is, despite the Supreme Court's original finding, basis for consideration of the case on its merits and that the Circuit Court reached an erroneous conclusion on the question of invention.

"The making of separate negatives of sound and picture to permit the desirable separate development of each negative according to its needs followed by separate printing on separate positive films was old," it was said. "The question was presented whether it required invention to print the separately developed negatives side by side on the same positive film. The District Court held invention was not required, basing its decision upon a finding of fact, supported by the testimony of witnesses who appeared before it that those skilled in the art of photography already knew that separately developed negatives could be printed side by side on the same positive film."

"The Circuit Court of Appeals did not dispute this finding of fact, but held that invention was involved nevertheless. In reaching this conclusion, the Circuit Court of Appeals gave controlling weight to testimony showing widespread adoption of the patented process by the talking picture industry and other evidences of commercial success. So, to decide the question of invention is to decide that the evidence of commercial success outweighs the direct testimony of witnesses familiar with the available knowledge of the art," declared the Paramount petition.

On the eve of the granting of a rehearing by the Supreme Court, Judge John P. Nields, in district court at Wilmington, Del., set November 16 as the date for a hearing on the motions of Tri-Ergon for temporary restraining orders against Warner Brothers, Loew's and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to enjoin them from using disputed Tri-Ergon patents, until settlement of the patent infringement filed against the defendants at Wilmington on October 23. It is assumed, however, that this development will be postponed until after the Supreme Court acts at Washington.

Pathe Producer-Financing Awaits Court Decision

Until the New York courts grant permission for recapitalization of Pathe Exchange, Inc., there will be no new producer-financing contracts negotiated, it was said in Los Angeles this week by Arthur B. Poole, Pathe vice-president, on the eve of his departure for New York. Mr. Poole spent 10 days in Hollywood establishing an office to represent Pathe interests at the RKO Pathe studios. John Jasper is in charge.

Pathe, anticipating an early decision by the courts, is seeking to enlarge its eastern laboratory production and is reviewing many proposals from leading independents, Mr. Poole said.

Cleveland Variety Club Holds Its First Banquet

More than 700 attended the first annual banquet and ball of the Cleveland Variety Club, held last Saturday in the Statler hotel in that city. President Frank Drew and the directors greeted the guests wearing their red "barker" coats and top hats. More than 40 acts were presented. The waiters wore slickers and rain hats with the fish course, and wild west costumes with the meat course. Nat Holt, RKO division manager, was general chairman. Nat Wolf, Warner zone manager, was in charge of the floor show.

CHAPLIN SOLILOQUY: "TALK OR NOT TALK"

Charlie Chaplin, who once toyed with the idea of publicly soliloquizing Hamlet's "To Be or Not To Be," and considered Napoleon for a screen role, is now actually in the throes of Hamlet's indecision. Each day, in conference with himself, Charlie asks Chaplin, "To talk or not to talk, that is the question. Whether 'twere better to leave my tramp untrammelled by word or speech, or let him be dumb—silent—'tis still a question."

New York Union Hires Pickets Outside Ranks

It was revealed last week that pickets employed by the Allied Motion Picture Operators Union in New York have been recruited from outside the ranks of the union, hired at $2 and $2.50 per day from employment agencies. The revelation was made at a hearing before Robert Marsh, acting as referee. Sol Fine, business agent for Allied, noted the method of picket employment under questioning.

The $25,000 claim made against Loew's State in New Orleans by the local musicians' union for alleged breach of contract is to be referred to the National Compliance Board at Washington, with a possibility of the case going to court if Loew's loses. In Milwaukee a dispute between the local union and the Park theatre was settled by the local labor committee. The Cashiers', Ushers' and Doormen's union there has called a strike against the Riverside theatre, operated by E. J. Weisfeldt. The Windsor, Canton, O., has sought a restraining order against the activities of the IATSE, charging the union seeks to interfere with theatre operation.

Creditor Session Called

A special meeting of the creditors of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, New York, has been called for November 13, at the office of Irwin Kurtz, referee, at which a compromise offer from William I. Rosenfeld in relation to a claim held by the trustee will be discussed.

Universal Sued

Trimble De Roode has filed suit against Universal asking an injunction, an accounting and damages in connection with the company's use of an animated word process claimed to have been invented by Mr. De Roode. It is understood other suits are to follow.

Finance Plan Approved

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe last week in New York approved a plan of refinancing a $400,000 mortgage on the Capitol, a Paramount theatre in Worcester, Mass. The plan avoids a foreclosure on the house.

Paramount Sues Theatre

Paramount Distributing Company has filed suit in common pleas court, Sandusky, Ohio, against Howard Carter, operating the Liberty, Vermilion, Ohio, seeking judgment for $900 for failure to play or pay for Paramount product per contract.

German Tri-Ergon Inventors— Their Lives and Litigations

Being the first and exclusive story of three men whose genius brought them only a broken friendship

By JOACHIM K. RUTENBERG

Berlin Correspondent

The story of the Tri-Ergon sound patents does not begin with William Fox. There is another, more dramatic and more important chapter. But it lacks the glamour and embraces none of the fantasy that was recently attached by American newspapers to their presentation on page one of "William Fox—the

Hans Vogt

'Hero' of Tri-Ergon."

Victory in two preliminary court skirmishes with the motion picture industry in this country may have brought to William Fox fanciful dreams of receiving millions in royalties for the use of Tri-Ergon's "flywheel" and double printing processes, but to the inventors—Hans Vogt, Joseph Massolle and Jo Engl—the devices brought nothing more than a bare existence during their development, and virtually nothing afterward. So pronounced was the failure of these three young German inventors to realize commercially on their labors that their disappointment caused them to dissolve a long friendship and association. And today they work alone.

The Three Inventors

The prelude to the Tri-Ergon drama opens on the last decade of the last century:

Hans Vogt, a professional engineer now residing at Garystrasse 10, Berlin-Dahlem in Germany, was born shortly after the end of the summer of 1890, on September 25, in the old town of Wurlitz in Oberfranken, Bavaria. At 6 he was hustled off to a grade school, from which he was graduated in 1905. Immediately thereafter he served an apprenticeship with a German locksmith.

In the years 1908 and 1909 young Vogt worked his mechanical mind overtime in various German machine shops, the while he burned the proverbial midnight oil advancing his knowledge of technical things and their solutions. In 1910, when he was but 20, Hans invented a tricky toy for which he was given a patent.

About this time the thing to do—under compulsion—was to serve a term in the military and he selected the navy, serving for three years as a telegraphist. On off hours he read technical books and some of the classics almost constantly.

One of his marked characteristics, which became noticeable long before he reached maturity, was a fondness for active participation in the Fatherland's movement for juvenile development.

Early in 1913 Hans Vogt was mustered out of the German Navy and he immediately sought a position to further his scientific leaning. A large German machine plant engaged him in an unimportant technical capacity and he worked there industriously until the World War began in mid-1914. Meanwhile he married Gisela Schwarz.

His work in the airship division of the navy during the war, developing important communication devices, won him a commission.

A glimpse at his private living quarters both in the navy and in his home in Berlin indicated that young Vogt had an early realization of the possibilities of the talking film. As early as 1912 he could be found pattering around sound-film technics.

One month to the day following the Armistice in November of 1918, Hans Vogt was at work on his theories concerning the talking picture. With him were Joseph Massolle, his companion during the War, and Jo Engl, a young and aspiring scientist who had hailed from Vogt's native Bavaria.

Several developments were completed by the summer of 1923, and the trio then spent the next three years in unsuccessful attempts to commercialize them. Always they were dogged by financial shortcomings and stockholders' dissatisfaction.

In 1926 Mr. Vogt set out on his own to engage in independent technical research in his own little laboratory in Berlin. In recent years he has, in addition, served as technical advisor to the Allgemeine Elektrizitäts Gesellschaft interests in Berlin and also to the large Klangfilm sound equipment factory.

His principal concern these days is the condenser, the loud speaker and the use of iron throughout for high-frequency coils. Such coils are now built with an iron core around which copper wires are wound.

A natural interest in the sciences and in the advancement of the talking picture has kept pace down through the years with his studies of a philosophical and sociological nature.

Joseph Massolle, the second Tri-Ergonite, was born on a windy morning in 1889, some 18 months earlier than the birth of Hans Vogt. The town of Bielefeld, in Westfalia, Germany, was his birthplace.

Young Massolle had already made noticeable progress as a student scientist when he enlisted for service in the World War in 1918. Shortly after his enlistment he met Hans Vogt and there subsequently developed a sturdy friendship.

Mr. Massolle likewise was assigned by the navy to work on the development of wireless telegraphy, several phases of which he was accredited with perfecting. There was much of Massolle and Vogt effort in the wireless stations erected along the German border and coastline to guide the courses of the German dirigibles on their way to bombing expeditions over England, France and Belgium.

Upon the termination of hostilities, Joseph Massolle struck out with Vogt and Engl on the talking picture development. The three worked together until 1925, when Massolle joined Tobis Film in Berlin in a technical capacity. He is still with Tobis.

Dr. Jo Engl was named Joseph when he was born on August 8th, 1893, in Munich. He expressed an early preference in school for physics and for a study of natural sciences, which subjects he pursued through the University of Gottingen and the University of Berlin. Some of his first advanced instruction was given him by Professor Roentgen, who discovered the X-ray. In 1916 young Engl got his doctor's degree at Gottingen.

At about this time Jo Engl started to work on the construction of cathode ray valves and on Roentgen valves. He conducted explorations into the discharge of electrical energy, which he made in the great German factories of Siemens and Halske. Mr. Engl did not participate in the World War, but at its end he met Vogt and Massolle and proceeded with them to work on various sound processes.

Engl Confers with Fox

When the tri-cornered partnership was dissolved in 1925, Dr. Engl opened a private technical laboratory in Berlin to continue his work on natural science, at Bismarckstrasse 97, Charlottenburg-Berlin. Since 1927 he has been, in addition, lecturing at the University of Berlin on the technical problems of the motion picture, specializing on sub-standard film. Several trips have been made by Dr. Engl to New York to confer with William Fox on Tri-Ergon matters.

German scientists today place the development of the German sound system in three divisions.

(1) The inventions of Ernst Ruhmer in 1901 in connection with the principle of photographic sound recording on film tracks.

(2) The invention of the amplifying valve by Robert von Lieben (1905), bringing inertialess control of electric currents.

(3) The work of Hans Vogt, Joseph Massolle and Dr. Jo Engl from 1918 to 1925.

Vogt, Engl and Massolle started their work in the winter of 1918-19, when they opened a private "Laboratory for Kinematograph" at Babelsberger 49, Berlin-Wilmersdorf, where for three years they labored behind locked doors on fundamental sound experiments. Their small savings were soon exhausted and the financial aid of friends was enlisted, the inventors and stockholders forming Tri-Ergon, A.G. The economic situation in Germany was daily becoming more acute and it was with considerable difficulty that they managed working models.

In the first three years 170 patent specifications were filed by the trio with the Deutsches Reichs-Patent Office, which subsequently granted patents to 150 of the various devices and processes. The most important of these devices, numbering 30, were then patented in virtually all important foreign countries, including the United States. They ranged from a "gamma-ray" patent to a "flywheel," and from a resistance amplifier to a "double printing" sound process. The rights to all of them were held by the original German Tri-Ergon company.

After the first experiments, a demonstration of a Tri-Ergon sound system was staged in the Laboratory Kopenickerstrasse, Berlin, in March, 1921, and, on September 17, 1922, the first showing of sound films made by Tri-Ergon devices was held before a large gathering of motion picture technicians and production people, in the German Alhambra Cinema. Some weeks later, on October 19th, Hans Vogt reported on the results of the demonstrations before the German Kinematograph Society. Dr. Johannes Rolle further explained the demonstrations in an article in Kinotechnik, Volume 23, 1922.

Meanwhile the Tri-Ergon stockholders got to worrying about their investments in the research and development of the various devices and they sold out in 1923 to M. Curti, a Swiss lawyer, who paid 1,000,000 Swiss francs for the whole works. (This sum, at the present rate of exchange, represents about $330,000.)

To the three inventors went some $82,000 of the sale price and this they were compelled to use at once to satisfy debts which had accumulated during their four years of research.

Set Out on Their Own

The motion picture industry in Germany refused to take seriously the plans presented by the trio for furthering sound motion pictures, and so, backed by limited capital advanced by M. Curti, they set out to produce talking pictures on their own.

They rented space in a dentist's house on Bulow Street in Berlin, where the acoustic conditions were fairly satisfactory, and proceeded to build a recording room, reproduction room and a combination wardrobe and dressing room. There were nearly 50 persons on the staff, and so far as is known they were paid little or nothing, working on promises of a future.

On September 23, 1923, after weeks of tedious production, which never exceeded 150 feet a day, the first reproduction of the new Vogt-Massolle-Engl Tri-Ergon sound film was reproduced, in the old Schubert Saal. This film was roadshowed some time later in the Marmorhaus, Berlin, and in other places, including Switzerland.

The first money began to trickle in and the company started to show some gains. But the commercial and financial advisers of Tri-Ergon appeared to have exercised poor judgment in conducting the business affairs of the development and the Swiss lawyer Curti was bought out by three Swiss financial groups: Hugo Heberlein, Heuser Staub, both large textile manufacturers, and an unnamed Swiss bank. These three groups, through their acquisition of the whole of Swiss Tri-Ergon, A.G., obtained control of the 150 patent rights of the three inventors. They still hold them.

Wearied of the difficulties which plagued them, and disconsolate over the lack of financial success, the three inventors separated in 1925, Dr. Engl engaging privately as a researchist, Mr. Massolle taking an advisory post with Tobis

LOOK, SEE, HEAR IN ONE PROCESS

A wire recorder on which, it is said, can be recorded the vibration of both light and sound waves, is being subjected to experimental tests at the Paramount studios in Hollywood. The new process, which the inventors believe will have a vital bearing on the future of radio, phonograph and film recording, is said to make use of the principle of arrested magnetism.

Despite the fact that the inventors maintain it can record light as well as sound at the present stage of experimentation only sound is being recorded with complete success, the inventors say.

Clay Woodmansee is credited with designing the wire recorder machine.

Film in Germany and Vogt pursuing in his own laboratory the solution of other sound problems.

At about this time, in 1925, the important Ufa-Film interests in Germany acquired a license for the German patent rights from the Swiss Tri-Ergon headquarters at St. Gallen, Switzerland, and produced, unfortunately for the immediate future of Tri-Ergon, a German language talker entitled, "The Girl with the Matches" (Das Mädchen mit den Schwefelhölzern). The film was such a disappointment that it was almost immediately withdrawn from distribution and Ufa thence regarded the sound film as valueless. Accordingly, the company annulled its contracts with Tri-Ergon. The result was that on February 1, 1926, all Tri-Ergon experiments came to a standstill.

The next year, W. T. Case, a wealthy scientific experimenter, and a collaborator of Dr. Lee de Forest, then connected with the William Fox motion picture interests in New York, having stumbled across the Tri-Ergon patents while engaged in some sound research, influenced Mr. Fox to make a bid for the United States rights. These previously had been offered to the American "electrics" by the Tri-Ergon holding company of Switzerland. Mr. Fox, while still president of Fox Film, made the purchase for 200,000 Swiss francs (about $66,000 at the present rate of exchange). The story of how Mr. Fox took the patent rights with him when he sold his interests in his film companies has already been told.

Meanwhile, in Europe, an "outsider" named Bruckman acquired the Tri-Ergon rights for Germany, founding the Tobis sound company. There followed legal skirmishes between Tobis and Klangfilm, founded in Germany by Siemens, and eventually agreements were drawn giving sound production rights in Germany to Tobis and the rights to manufacture sound systems to Klangfilm.

When, in September, 1928, most of the German sound film patents were combined under the Tobis banner, the German rights to Tri-Ergon were taken over by Tobis as a patent holding company, cooperating with Klangfilm in the matter of recording and reproducing.

There exists in Germany at this time a legal situation over the status of the Tri-Ergon patents that is comparable to the controversy now raging in the American courts. The Supreme Court of Germany (Deutsches Reichsgericht) on December 22, will decide a bitterly contested action involving the "flywheel" and the "double printing" patents, between Ufa-Afifa-Schonger and Tobis, which, as the plaintiff, is in much the same position as William Fox.

The five principal patents held by Tri-Ergon on applications granted originally to Vogt, Massolle and Engl by the Deutsches Reichs-Patent Offices, Berlin, are:

Deutsches Reichs-Patent No. 368,367, filed June 3rd, 1919, on a recording glow lamp invented by Hans Vogt in collaboration with Joseph Massolle and Dr. Jo Engl.

Deutsches Reichs-Patent No. 368,383, filed April 15th, 1921, on a double printing process invented by Hans Vogt in collaboration with Joseph Massolle and Dr. Jo Engl.

Deutsches Reichs-Patent No. 387,058, filed May 23rd, 1920, on a fly-wheel device invented by Hans Vogt in collaboration with Joseph Massolle and Dr. Jo Engl.

Deutsches Reichs-Patent No. 387,059, filed July 26th, 1919, on a resistance amplifier invented by Joseph Massolle in collaboration with Hans Vogt and Dr. Jo Engl.

Deutsches Reichs-Patent No. 389,598, filed June 6th, 1922, on a gamma ray process invented by Dr. Jo Engl in collaboration with Hans Vogt and Joseph Massolle.

Deutsches Reichs-Patent No. 417,967, filed March 4th, 1919, on a photoelectric cell invented by Hans Vogt in collaboration with Joseph Massolle and Dr. Jo Engl.

The specific claims set forth in the original German patent applications for the flywheel and the double printing process—both of which are involved at the moment in the American litigation launched by William Fox against all producers, distributors and film laboratories were:

FLYWHEEL—Equipment for phonographs for the steady drive of the linear phonogram track, especially intended for the purposes of the sound film, whereby in the interest of a constant and adjustable average speed at the spot of control the phonogram track is coupled with a rotating flywheel; (b) a method whereby a speed controller and speedometer are used; (c) a method whereby two rotary systems control the phonogram track; (d) a method whereby the film feed sprockets of the rotary systems possess different circumferential speed; (e) a method whereby a friction coupling is used between the phonogram track and the rotary system.

DOUBLE PRINTING—A method for the making of positive films which contain pictures and photographically recorded sound, whereby the negatives are developed separately; (b) a method whereby the recording of the sound and the photography of the picture is done on the same film which is separated afterwards; (c) a method whereby the negatives are lengthwise combined with each other after the treatment.

Meanwhile the fight for royalties proceeds merrily in the courts of both countries, with the inventors looking in from the outside.

Laemmle, Jr., Says "U" May Not Produce Abroad

Carl Laemmle, Jr., arriving in New York Tuesday from Hollywood, said Universal has made no definite plans to produce pictures either in England or elsewhere in Europe. Mr. Laemmle will sail November 23. "Nothing is definite and we may not even produce in England," he said.

Accompanying the Universal production chief were Harry Zehner, his assistant; Polan Banks, author, and Archie Gottler, song writer.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

AWARDS SALES TROPHY. Clayton Sheehan, general foreign manager for Fox, with cup won by Fox organization in Chile. The award will be made annually to the Fox Latin American branch with the best sales record.

VISITING IN EAST. H. M. Warner, head of Warner Brothers, and Mrs. Warner as they greeted their daughter, Mrs. Mervyn LeRoy, and Mr. LeRoy, Warner director, on their arrival in New York from the Coast.

CAST. Jean Arthur, Columbia contract player, who has been assigned the feminine lead in "Passport to Fame."

INSPECTING. (Left) Jules Levy, RKO sales chief, as he embarked on nationwide tour of the RKO branches.

ROSITAS BOTH. (Right) Rosita Moreno, a Fox player, welcoming a Spanish compatriot, Rosita Diaz (left), whom Fox recently signed.

TO AID REINHARDT. Erick Wolfgang Korngold, Viennese composer, reaches New York, accompanied by Mrs. Korngold, en route to Hollywood to assist Max Reinhardt in Warner filming of "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

SIGNED ANEW. Heather Angel, whom Universal has given a new contract, with her first role thereunder in "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," Charles Dickens classic.

HAS LEAD. Gloria Stuart, who will be seen in the principal feminine role, opposite Dick Powell, in Warners' "Gold Diggers of 1935."

RECEIVES FILM AWARD. Ned E. Depinet, head of RKO Distributing Corporation, accepting 1933 Photoplay Magazine medal from Miss Kathryn Dougherty, editor of the publication. The award was made for "Little Women."

TRIBUTE TO STAR. Anna Sten with W. G. Van Schmus, her host at a dinner given by the director of Radio City Music Hall in her honor preceding opening of her latest Goldwyn-United Artists picture, "We Live Again." A. L. Scott (right), president of Rockefeller Center, was also a guest.

THEIR ACHIEVEMENT. Is "The White Parade," Fox release which opens at the New York Paramount this week. Pictured together on the occasion of an initial showing in Los Angeles are the producer, Jesse L. Lasky, and Loretta Young, who stars in the role of a hospital nurse.

2,000 in 20 FAN CLUBS JOIN FORCES TO STOP FALSE STORIES ON STARS

New Units in the Small Towns Would Aid Exhibitors With News of Pictures and War on Numerous Gossip Columns

A concerted drive to curb the spurious distortion of facts by many of Hollywood's gossip columnists and fan magazine writers was launched in New York this week when some 2,000 young men and women representing more than 20 so-called "fan clubs" combined their numerical strength in the Fan Club Federation—an organization which promises to extend its activities to every key territory in the country in its campaign to get at "the real truth about Hollywood."

Of interest to many exhibitors is the fact that the Federation's first move is to be a nationwide membership drive in small cities and towns where fan clubs are not at present established. It is the Federation's intention to give widespread publicity through inter-organization channels to pictures in which favorite stars may be playing, it being the Federation's contention that this may in a large measure stimulate real interest among potential members as to the ultimate possibilities of such a nationwide organization. The resultant benefit to the exhibitor, especially in the small town where such publicity will not be so difficult to put before the public eye, is obvious.

Primarily, however, the purpose of organization by the Federation of individual fan clubs into one national body is to bring to an end what its sponsors consider the gross misrepresentation of Hollywood personalities, carried on for years, often without the knowledge or consent of the principals involved until too late, under the guise of gossipy news and the excuse that "this is what the fans want."

Unfavorable Publicity Fatal

"This is distinctly not what the majority of fans want," said Miss Gwen Troughton, Federation president, this week. "Such publicity as has been accorded stars and feature players through the medium of the fan magazines and the gossip columns for many years has brought about the absolute downfall of all too many players and has halted abruptly, if only temporarily, the careers of dozens of them."

"In many instances it was discovered that writers had invented utterly untrue and, often, libelous concoctions about certain stars," she said. "In more cases than it is possible to calculate stars have been and are still being misquoted and in a great many cases statements are made in stories which the player involved never sees or hears of until he reads it in print."

The fans of the country are, therefore, up in arms against misrepresentation, she said.

It will be the function of the Federation, acting for all of its member fan club units, to protest directly to studio publicity departments whenever a story appears in a fan magazine or daily gossip column which is considered unfair to any star or about which there may be some element of doubt. At the present time, Miss Troughton indicated, protests are being made directly to the star himself.

"Apparently, however, the stars are able to bring little influence to bear on their publicity departments," Miss Troughton said.

The fan club is not a new type of organization on the motion picture horizon. News of their activities has been reported regularly in the very magazines against which they are now about to launch protests. Never before, however, have they organized, possibly because of the lack of interest displayed by film companies themselves in their purpose and functions.

Most producing companies have felt for some time that the average fan club represented not a true cross section of public opinion but merely an excuse for the same type of intimate gossip about the stars as is purveyed to the public by the fan magazines. Added to this is the fact that some of the companies have publicly expressed themselves as being completely out of sympathy with fan clubs as an institution, it being the consensus that stars were obligated to considerable expense in the matter of financial upkeep of the clubs in question.

No Financial Calls on Stars

This, it now seems, is a mistaken idea. No fan club which to date has merged into the national Federation, Miss Troughton said, has ever made a request for financial assistance from a star, "nor will we allow any club joining us in the future to pursue such a policy." Miss Troughton explained that sometimes stars make small voluntary contributions, sometimes financial, but more often in the form of a typewriter or mimeograph machine.

The cost of the Federation's program is to be borne exclusively by club members themselves. After the beginning of the new year the Federation's affiliation charge will be $1 per club and 50 cents for each individual club member. Honorary memberships—admittance to which requires a majority vote of the regular members in each club—are assessed at $1.

"As far as cooperation in our aims and purposes from the motion picture companies themselves is concerned we quite realize we have considerable opposition to break down," Miss Troughton said. "At present Paramount is the only company which definitely forbids its contract players to be members of clubs or to sponsor clubs. The Bing Crosby and Lanny Ross clubs are, therefore, ostensibly radio fan clubs, but this certainly does not keep the members from boosting Crosby and Ross pictures for all they are worth."

Miss Troughton explained that the average individual fan club has a membership approximating 100 persons and that when its sponsor's picture is playing at the local theatre the club members generally attend en masse.

Other film companies, while not forbidding contract players to have fan clubs, "do not seem to approve of it," Miss Troughton said. The two exceptions to this are RKO Radio and Universal, who, the Federation's executive said, had been "most helpful."

Clubs already belonging to the Federation—which has been in active existence for only a few weeks—are as follows:

The Mae Clark Club; The Official June Clyde Club; The Donald Cook Club; The Official Joan Crawford Club; The Bing Crosby Club; the Official Bette Davis Club; The Johnny Downs Club; The Hamiltonians (Neil Hamilton); The Official Jean Harlow Club; The Francis Lederer Club; The Gertrude Niesen Club; The Maureen O'Sullivan Club; The Ginger Rogers Club; The Lanny Ross Legion; The Norma Shearer Club; The Vagabond Lovers (Rudy Vallee); The Rudy Vallee Boosters; The Rudy Vallee Heigh-Ho Club; The Irene Dunne Club; The Ruth Etting Club; The Madge Evans Club and the Onslow Stevens Club.

Represented in this list of clubs by the stars for whom they are named are MGM, Paramount, Warner, RKO, Fox, Universal and others.

Federation's Officers

Officers of the Federation, in addition to Gwen Troughton, the president, are Minnette Shermak, president Jean Harlow club, vice-president; Marian L. Dommer, president Joan Crawford club, secretary; Alice M. Kelly, vice-president Mae Clarke club, financial secretary; Marion L. Hesse, president Ginger Rogers club, assistant secretary; Irene L. Brettman, president Maureen O'Sullivan club, chairman of committees. Directors of the Federation are Mildred Buck, Thomas J. Ellis, Beatrice Gordon, Jane Greenberg, Dorothy M. Hulse, Jerrie Matatia, Marionne Oppenheim, William J. Schoeller, Winny J. Thompson and Olga Troughton, all of whom are executives of individual clubs.

The Federation plans to publish every two months a magazine called Fan-Club-Fare. The editor-in-chief of the publication is Jean Betty Huber and subscription is included in the membership charge.

Through cooperation with the New York chapter of the national Irene Dunne Club the RKO Keith at Flushing, L. I., this week attracted attention to its showing of "The Age of Innocence." The club's New York members met at the theatre and the manager had photographers on hand. Much space, with art work, was obtained in two Long Island daily newspapers. A wire from the star was used in the lobby.

AIN'T GONNA BE NO MORE ENGLISH

*That's the Fear of the Educators,
So Something Is To Be Done About
It; More Classics Held Solution*

Motion picture players will have to mind their p's and q's, and their broad a's as well, for the educators are about to put English—as spoken in Hollywood—"on the spot." Henceforth, if the educators have their way, the letter r will be pronounced something like a cross between the double-d sound employed by the British and the growling tiger-like r of the Philadelphian, but it will be pronounced. In any event, the American English in the film medium must be improved if the language is to survive—at least so say teachers of English and the English classics.

According to William Cabell Greet, of the department of English at Columbia University, President Roosevelt's diction and general deportment of speech is "a fine example of an educated American using few localisms and little of the vestigial British accent typical of his class."

"We want to make Americans speak like Americans," said Dr. Greet, "not like a cross between Walter Hampden and an Englishman. I doubt if I have anything of real interest to say to Hollywood in this respect, but it was with considerable pleasure that I agreed with the statement I saw attributed to Lionel Barrymore that concern about speech had hurt more actors than it had helped."

"I think it unfortunate, on the other hand, that as the influence of the 19th Century American school of elocution is growing weaker—except, perhaps, in the speech departments of our public high schools—an admiration for an equally false, so-called British accent is taking its place. These affected accents, lying outside the historic development of American English, may be said to be 'like the mule, without pride of ancestry or hope of progeny.'"

Phonographing the Frosh

Announcement was made recently at Columbia that Dr. Greet would supervise a full graduate course there, in addition to his regular duties, in a new "Language Room," equipped with recording instruments, discs, phonographs, charts and a phonetics exhibit. In addition, each Columbia freshman is to be required to make three phonograph records during the year, by which his speech defects may be corrected. These speeches are to be extemporaneous.

Speaking for the industry's production branch in this weighty matter, Cecil B. De Mille last week expressed the fear that if Americans continue dropping their consonants there soon will be no recognizable English spoken anywhere in the country.

They will be talking in grunts, like Indians, Mr. De Mille said.

"When I cast a feature picture, approximately 70 per cent of the talent is immediately out," he said. "They simply can't speak the lines in English as required."

Mr. De Mille bespoke a fear that the word yes will have become extinct in

RASSLIN' WITH KING'S ENGLISH

Cecil B. DeMille, erstwhile professor of English during the producing of "Cleopatra," found a real problem on his hands—and tongue—to wit:

"I tried with desperation to get extras in the mob scene to speak the word 'wrestling' as it should be spoken. Seventy-five per cent of them said 'rasslin'.'"

America, this item having already become little more than a grunt, such as yeah or plain yah. The yes-men, however, are expected to survive.

Says Film Classics Would Help

Dr. Stella S. Center, head of the department of English in Theodore Roosevelt high school, New York, felt that picturization of more of the classics would do much to improve the speech of Hollywood's actors and actresses.

"Teachers of English all over the country are much concerned with trying to raise the literary taste of young people and are trying to tie up English instruction in school with the entire life of the child," Dr. Center said. "That is why we have conversation groups of students and discuss radio programs and what books and magazines to read."

"On the subject of motion pictures, it should be understood that teachers of English do not approve of the average screen version of classics. But it is felt that the motion picture is with us and that its influence must be reckoned with. There is no sense in adopting an academic, highbrow, superior attitude. We cannot merely ignore the fact that children do go and will go to see moving pictures."

Two Objectives

"So we have been trying to attack the problem with two objectives in view, our main purpose being to make possible conditions that shall result in the presentation on the screen of pictures having higher standards—both as to speech and method of presentation. We are trying to show the producers our ideals of better pictures and to train our pupils to more intelligent appreciation."

Pupils in Dr. Center's classes are asked to note whether a picture is well cast, whether it is authentic as to dress and background, whether the acting is sincere and artistic and, most important of all, whether the actors' speech is generally satisfactory.

It is Dr. Center's firm conviction that within a few years, when the level of intelligent discrimination is raised everywhere, the result must be the production of higher class pictures and better speech, "since the taste of the audiences will demand them."

Speaking for the Hollywood acting profession—unofficially—Mary Boland said it was her conviction that the language of purest Boston eventually would become the standard of good American speech. This, of course, involves the broad a and the eliminated r in the middle of words.

"Boston English will become the standard speech of the films and from the movies it will be adopted by the people of the United States generally," Miss Boland said. "Language as dispensed in the 'Hub' is the purest English in the United States, and educated Bostonians speak better English than Londoners—always excepting King George, whose English is perfect."

Miss Boland describes as "absurd" the "Oxford accent"—the affectation of many of those who have attended the British university and "a lot who haven't."

The finest diction on the American stage or screen is that employed by John Barrymore, Miss Boland said, with Irving Pichel and Warren William deserving honorable mention.

Warner Considers Film Scholarship

A scholarship for students in colleges and universities where courses in motion pictures are offered was suggested to students of New York University recently by Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers. Mr. Warner had been invited to address the motion picture class on "Problems in Motion Picture Production."

"I am giving a great deal of thought as to what we can do to encourage what you are doing here," Mr. Warner told the students, "and I have several plans in mind. We may decide to select one student from each college where motion pictures are being studied, and give him one year's trial. Perhaps it will be something like a scholarship. I think there is a distinct possibility of that and I am going to get in touch with you later and probably give the idea a year's trial."

Sol G. Newman Dies in London

Sol G. Newman, managing director of Radio Pictures, Ltd., which handled RKO Radio pictures throughout the British Isles, died in London Tuesday. Mr. Newman's death followed a three-weeks illness.

Mr. Newman, who was in his late 50's, had been in charge of the British company since its formation. No successor as yet has been appointed.

Two RKO Units Dissolved

J. Henry Walters, RKO attorney, has filed certificates with the secretary of state at Albany dissolving the Flatbush Leasing Corporation and St. John Riviera Corporation, which have become obsolete and are no longer operating.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

"Procrastination" is a sour fifteen letter word meaning alibi to most people. Anyway I wish you to know that I am now a subscriber to your magazine. Believing there is no substitute for authentic information I had to get on the list.

Your magazine is almost as essential as film in the operation of a successful theatre business. Your features such as the "Cutting Room," "Showmen's Reviews" and the "Release Chart" certainly contribute in making MOTION PICTURE HERALD the fine trade paper it is recognized to be.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah.

Circuits Thought Ready To Return to the ITOA

Several independent theatre circuits in New York which recently left the local Independent Theatre Owners Association, are understood planning to return, the chief reason being unity in handling labor problems. The ITOA is then expected to sign the code, and seek a clearance and zoning schedule for the territory. It is understood that Sam Rinzler and Louis Frisch may drop the Fox Metropolitan theatres from their operations in New York, since the houses are said to be unprofitable.

Springer and Cocalis, New York independent circuit, has benefited from the failure of RKO and Skouras to conclude a pooling deal on the Riverside and 81st Street theatres. RKO refused a Skouras pooling offer involving the houses and Skouras went to Springer and Cocalis. Maurice Browne and Bernard Barr are canvassing New York independents on their plan to merge 100 unaffiliated theatres into one large circuit.

Allied Says Distributors Violate Code on Shorts

Allied Theatres of New Jersey, in charging that some distributors are violating the code clause relative to short subjects, has claimed that complete shorts programs are being forced, and that some companies are requiring exhibitors to spend as much for shorts this year as last. President Sidney Samuelson, who is also national Allied president, plans to outline the attack on the code to members at the next meeting of the organization, November 13.

Independent exhibitors will meet in Des Moines, at the Hotel Kirkwood, November 13, to discuss the music tax, the Tri-Ergon patent situation and the code, under the auspices of Allied Theatre Owners, Inc. It is expected that 18 leaders of the Allied organization will meet in New Orleans next month for the national directors' meeting. Independent Exhibitors, Inc., Allied New England Unit, will meet on November 13 in Boston.

WASHINGTON HOUSES JOIN IN PRESS TIEUP

Competing Theatres Provide Cards and Question Boxes; Answers in the "Daily News"

First-run motion picture theatres in the city of Washington, D. C., are participating in a joint newspaper publicity venture in conjunction with the local Daily News, a Scripps-Howard publication, in the nature of a question-and-answer service for the city's 500,000 inhabitants. The cooperative arrangement is unique in exhibition annals and is so constructed that it can be adopted in any city by competitive theatre owners to the advantage of all.

The service was started last week with trailer announcements from the screens of the Earle and Metropolitan, both Warner houses; RKO Keith's theatre, and Loew's Fox, Loew's Palace and Loew's Columbia.

It was the idea of Don Craig, motion picture and drama editor of the Daily News, to devote a portion of the amusement page to the answering of questions pertaining to the city's current motion picture attractions in particular, and to the entire motion picture industry and its people in general, this to satisfy the public's curiosity and at the same time establish an outlet for motion picture news and information.

Theatres Distribute Cards

The theatres provide printed cards for patrons and have set "question boxes" in the lobbies, through which queries find their way into the Daily News regularly throughout the week, in a special column which runs daily from 10 to 16 column-inches.

In the first few days of the service, questions were being turned in at all theatres at the rate of about 100 daily.

Each exhibitor or theatre manager is responsible for the answering of those questions deposited in the question box at his theatre—at least, as many of the questions as are germane to that particular theatre's program.

The question cards must bear the name and address of the questioner, otherwise they are ignored. This gives the theatre additional names for development of the regular mailing list to which are addressed programs and announcements of coming attractions.

A single fundamental requirement must be met by all questioners (besides that of identification) and that is all queries must pertain to fact—no pure-opinion questions will be answered.

Interest in Page Increased

Of the questions deposited thus far, about 50 per cent are of such a nature that the answers are suitable for publication, the other half pertaining to matters outside the self-imposed limitations. Of the unacceptable 50 per cent, about half are obscene and bear no manner of identification.

One of the direct benefits cited for the arrangement is creation of additional interest of readers in the amusement page with its advertisements.

In the establishment of the service the Daily News created something of a record in aligning all the city's first run theatres for a common newspaper tieup.

Newspapers heretofore have conducted question-and-answer services on the industry, but almost always in connection with some syndicated service. Usually the material is of a stock nature, and while these services have possessed some desirable qualities, they were manifestly inadequate for any particular locality and for the publicizing of the motion pictures then being screened.

As published in the Daily News the questions and the answers are tersely phrased, in order to get in print a maximum of queries. Each question bears the initials of the inquirer.

Gaumont British Gives Lee Five-Year Contract

The first of a series of long-term contracts to be entered into by Gaumont British with key men in its American organization was announced last week with renewal for a five-year period of the tenure of Arthur A. Lee as vice-president and general manager.

George W. Weeks, general sales manager, left New York Friday on a month's tour visiting Gaumont representatives in key cities. Deals placing Gaumont product in practically every first-run situation are reported to have been concluded with Publix, Loew's, RKO, Fox West Coast and Warner Bros.

Three new branch managers are Jack McCarthy, formerly with United Artists, Omaha; R. J. Heft, Des Moines, and Fred Abelson, Minneapolis.

Lou Goldberg resigned from Gaumont's New York publicity staff and Arline De Haas has joined as head of the publicity department.

Gaumont British has appointed Harry A. Eagles as exploitation representative for GB on the West coast. J. L. Schlaifer, New York branch manager, resigned his post this week.

Ditmars, Zoo Head, Named To National Board Group

The executive committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has elected Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of mammals and reptiles at the New York Zoological Park, to its membership.

Dr. Ditmars, who has just published in "Confessions of a Scientist" an account of many of his adventures in search of zoological specimens in strange parts of the world, has for years been making motion pictures for the purpose of spreading information about his special department of science, among which have been films showing the habits of little-known animals.

In addition to writing many books, he has prepared a series of 42 reels of motion pictures called "Living Natural History."

Goldstein With Rex

Jack Goldstein has been named sales manager for Rex Premiums, Inc., New York, a subsidiary of Progressive Poster Service.

18 MILLION BID MADE BY FWC CREDITORS

Move by Fox Film and Chase Bank Called "Legal Technicality"; Wesco Name Changed

A technical offer of $18,000,000 for the assets of Fox West Coast Theatres—a circuit comprising 325 houses in actual operation and about 75 others closed—was reported this week from Los Angeles to be planned by the circuit's principal creditors. According to the report, which could be neither affirmed nor denied in New York by Fox officials, who said they were "at sea" on the technical arrangements being made for reorganization, these principal creditors, in effect Fox Film Corporation and the Chase National Bank of New York, are prepared to make the $18,000,000 bid Thursday, following which Referee W. S. McNabb in Los Angeles is expected to set a hearing date, probably about two weeks later, when the private sale will take place.

Called "Legal Technicality"

Spyros Skouras, who is in New York, could not be reached for a statement, but one official described the $18,000,000 reported offer as "purely a legal technicality" having to do with the claims of both Fox Film and Chase National.

"Even if they offered $90,000,000 for the circuit's assets," this official said, "neither Fox nor Chase would have to put up any actual cash."

Under the reorganization plans understood to have been agreed upon by Chase and Fox Film, the name of Wesco as holding company for the theatres will be changed to National Theatre Corporation. Papers for incorporation of the new company, which will have as its head Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, were filed in Dover, Del., this week. Capital stock was increased from 1,000 shares to 1,800,000 at no par value. It is understood Charles Skouras will be first vice-president and W. C. Michel second vice-president. Mr. Michel is first vice-president of Fox Film. Mr. Kent also will head all Fox theatre units, including Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midwest.

A petition for leave to appeal from an order signed by U. S. district court judge Julian W. Mack denying Archibald Palmer, counsel for a group of Fox Metropolitan bondholders, the right to examine officers and members of the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee under Section 21-A of the bankruptcy law, was argued before the U. S. circuit court of appeals in New York Monday. Decision was reserved.

Subsidiaries to Follow Suit

The resignations of Archibald R. Watson as president of Fox Theatres Corporation and Watson & Wilguss as attorneys for receivers were accepted by Federal Judge Martin Manton.

Fox West Coast Theatres, under the new plan, will be known as Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, the only difference being the addition of the word "corporation." Spyros and Charles Skouras, who are in daily communication with Chase officials and Mr. Kent, are said to be the recipients of five-year contracts, with options for five additional years.

Actual completion of the reorganization plans is not expected before the new year. After Fox West Coast, subsidiary groups are expected to follow the same procedure.

On October 28 the last of the major claims against FWC was filed, one of these being for final settlement of compensation for the three trustees, Charles Skouras, William H. Moore and Charles C. Irwin. The sum asked is $200,000 for services up to September 29. Another claim was filed by O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, law firm, seeking $212,000.

Spyros Skouras will continue as operating head of all FWC houses, it was said in New York this week.

Conferring in New York with Mr. Skouras and Mr. Kent is Rick Ricketson, operating head of Fox Rocky Mountain.

COMPOSERS' SOCIETY
RETURNS U. S. FIREAnswers Monopoly Suit with Charges of Song "Piracy" by Radio and Film Interests

Denying that it has created a monopoly in the music field, or that it ever attempted to create one, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers last week filed its answer to the Government's anti-trust suit in U. S. district court, New York. Every allegation of the Government pertaining to the Society's violations of anti-trust laws and restraint of trade was denied by ASCAP in its 42-page answer. At the same time the Society flung charges of song "piracy" at both the radio and motion picture industries. Trial of the suit is expected in January.

The music tax compromise recently agreed upon between ASCAP and the Exhibitors' National Emergency committee is made a part of the Society's defense against federal charges of exorbitant royalty payments by theatre owners, ASCAP citing the agreement as an example of the "amicable system of collective bargaining through which the organization's music tax schedules are established." The answer also represents the exhibitors' committee as being "entirely pleased" with the compromise. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the Allied States Association still are opposing the Society's seat tax schedules.

Answers "Restraint" Charge

The answer sets forth that during the compromise negotiations "it was freely and unanimously stated by the members of the committee that the exhibitors of America would be confronted with a tremendously difficult and apparently insoluble problem in connection with the use of copyrighted musical works, were the Society to be dissolved."

This statement has been generally construed as being ASCAP's direct answer to those portions of the Government's suit charging it with being a monopoly in restraint of trade and recommending the Society's dissolution.

The answer also states that in nearly every hotel, restaurant, motion picture theatre, vaudeville theatre, cabaret, dance hall and other place of public amusement, prior to the Society's formation, the most successful works of American authors and composers were appropriated and publicly performed for profit in direct violation of the copyright laws. The answer also inferred that such "piracy" by many of the more "irresponsible" types of motion picture producers and exhibitors still goes unpunished and that constant friction between the Society and the radio broadcasters is encountered.

Cites Exhibitor Agreements

That part of ASCAP's answer intended to show that its music tax schedules are not "arbitrarily established," as charged, but are, rather, the result of agreements arrived at through collective bargaining, lists as further evidence the negotiations which, the answer states, were consummated with the MPTO of Michigan, MPTO of Virginia and committees "representing an exhibitors' association of Minnesota and South Dakota" and one representing "an exhibitors' association of North Carolina."

Twenty-three exhibitor trade associations are named in the answer as "having been combined to form a united front for the purpose of defeating the right of composers, authors and publishers to a reasonable royalty." It also cites the "penny-a-seat war chest" championed by the exhibitors' emergency committee and charges the MPTOA with being responsible for an agreement "to issue questionnaires to every senator and congressman to get them committed to the fact that they would favor repeal of the law which secures performance rights to members of the society" and that "they proposed to engage in lobbying on a large scale for congressional action and to engage 100 contact men for the purpose of inducing senators and congressmen to act in favor of the united front and in opposition to the interests of the Society."

Campaigns Called Failures

Much of the past history of exhibitor and broadcasters' litigation against the Society and opposition to music taxes is recited in the answer as having been either ineffectual, or decided in the Society's favor. It further mentions many legislative campaigns of both exhibitor trade associations and broadcasters, asserting they were all failures, and while general denial of most of the Government's allegations is set forth, specific denials are made only as to the existence of a music licensing monopoly, an attempt to create one, or any violation of the anti trust laws or of restraint of trade.

In conclusion the answer maintains that the Federal Trade Commission, the Department of Justice, various congressional patents committees and federal and state courts have ruled in the past that the Society is engaged in "a lawful and legitimate enterprise under the copyright laws." It also goes into detail regarding the Society's work in helping underprivileged authors, composers and publishers and their relatives.

ASCAP's answer was filed Thursday in U. S. district court, New York by Gene Buck, Society president, after having been drawn up by Nathan Burkan, ASCAP attorney, who also is legal counsel for many of the large motion picture companies.

LONDON FILM STUDIO TO COVER 97 ACRES

British Hollywood to Employ
1,000 When Completed; Film
Institute Finishes First Year

By BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

Preliminary details are now available as to the studio which London Film Productions is erecting at Elstree, in the close neighborhood of the British International Pictures and British and Dominions plants.

Elstree's claim to be the British Hollywood, and a serious rival to its American original, will be powerfully reinforced when this ambitious plan is in active operation.

The plans show that Jack Okey, architect of the First National Burbank plant, intends to provide London with a studio of comparable size and even more up-to-date equipment.

Ninety-seven acres of land will be occupied, with a frontage of three-quarters of a mile on a new bypass road, and such natural features as woods, lakes and farm buildings will be retained.

The main studio building, which has a striking frontage, will house the executive offices and, behind, three sound stages immediately will be complete and fully equipped.

Carpenters' and plasterers' shops and property rooms adjoin these floors and there is full provision for erection and transportation of sets without interruption.

Special plans have been made for "crowds," including separate entrances to costume and makeup departments and an off-set retiring room which will abolish waiting on the set itself.

Apart from small theatres for the viewing of "rushes" there will be a fully equipped preview theatre with armchair seats for 150 and spacious anterooms and refreshment rooms.

Air-Conditioning Against Fogs

An air-conditioning plant will not only provide against the possibility of fogs, but, in combination with new ventilation methods, will prevent overheating.

When London's plans are completed it is expected that close upon 1,000 will be employed at the studio and its accessory laboratory and other departments.

The studio will be wired by Western Electric. It should be ready for completion early in the spring of 1935.

John Barrymore, Charles Laughton, Fredric March and Maurice Chevalier will be among the first artists to face the camera at the new plant.

Institute's First Year

Proceeding without any fuss, and in face of a certain amount of trade indifference, the British Film Institute has completed a useful first year's work, which, as its just published Report shows, has covered an extraordinarily wide field.

The Institute, founded in October of 1933, was the sequel to the investigations of an unofficial Commission on Educational and Cultural Films which represented more than a hundred educational, scientific and social organizations.

The Commission's report, "The Film in National Life," is already a historic document. One of its main recommendations was the establishment of a central body to coordinate the efforts of all those concerned in advancement of the film.

The British Film Institute is the answer. With a semi-official status, it is financed by a grant of £5,000 a year from the Cinematograph Fund created by a levy on Sunday cinema receipts.

Its aims are to increase the quality of films as entertainment and to extend their use in non-entertainment fields. One of the valuable things it already has done has been, by means of sectional panels, to enlist the active aid of many public workers whose attitude to the cinema was previously highly critical.

There are panels on education, entertainment, international relations, medicine, social service and scientific research, among other things.

The Institute also has supported the establishment of film societies throughout the country.

Establishment of a central library of educational films is a probable future activity of the BFI.

Newspapers Laud Warner's Plan To Classify Films

Commenting on the Warner plan to designate all pictures shown in houses of the circuit in the Philadelphia territory, as adult or family entertainment, and employing "A" or "F" for the designation, the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger declared last week:

"Warner Brothers' new system of classifying photoplays, which goes into effect tomorrow in all their neighborhood theatres here, is a decided forward step in the delicate matter of public relationship between cinema and its customers. . . .

"One reasonable fear of the sponsors of the idea is that the audience may get the opinion that because a picture is labeled with an 'F' it is a childish or juvenile offering. I only hope that the fear is not justified. . . ."

Commenting editorially in the same connection, the Philadelphia Bulletin said:

"The plan of the Warner motion picture management to make a limited classification of their presentations at the neighborhood houses . . . is in the nature of an experiment. It remains to be seen whether the motion picture patrons have been waiting to be told and want to be told which of the varied offerings they may accept most advantageously. . . .

"But it is in a degree a recognition of the present problem of motion picture appeal and influence and the responsibility on the part of the exhibiting management for co-operation with the various efforts that are being made by individuals and organizations to solve that problem. . . .

"The new plan does not go very far. . . . But it is worth trying. And, perhaps, its most encouraging significance is its open assumption of responsibility on the part of an important producing and exhibiting interest of a more careful examination of its offerings warranting an open mark of judgment in classification. . . ."

The Warner plan is meeting with somewhat varied comment from the field. In Baltimore three exhibitors queried, J. Harry Gruver, Meyer Leventhal and J. Louis Rome, were agreed that the plan would not work satisfactorily. It is pointed out that the M. A. Lightman theatres in Memphis have long made a practice of designating films as to classification.

In Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Iowa a similar plan was launched by Fox Midwest last August, and beneficial results have been reported. Chicago circuit operators were not enthusiastic, while in Milwaukee the reaction was favorable.

Consolidated Film Note Plan Okayed

Approval of the agreement reducing the monthly maturities on $1,500,000 of RKO secured notes held by Consolidated Film Industries was given last week in an order signed in New York by Federal Judge William Bondy, who directed RKO to proceed with the carrying out of the agreement.

However, Judge Bondy instructed Irving Trust Company, trustee for RKO, to try to obtain a bank loan at 4 or 5 per cent with which to retire the entire amount of the obligation at one time. Under RKO's agreement with Consolidated, RKO is given 45 months in which to retire the notes with interest at 6 per cent, the maturities amounting to $25,000 a month, plus interest, on the first of each month up to and including Feb. 1, 1937, and retroactive to last September 1, and $50,000 on the first of each month beginning March 1, 1937, and ending May 1, 1938.

Under the original plan the maturities called for payments of $300,000 on the first of each month up to and including Jan. 1, 1935, an arrangement which was described as "physically impossible for RKO to fulfill" by counsel for Irving Trust.

A new corporation, understood to be wholly owned by Rockefeller Center, has been formed to become lessee of the Radio City Music Hall under the new agreement among RKO, Radio Corporation of America and Rockefeller Center. This agreement must be approved by the federal district court in New York. A hearing has been scheduled for November 9, and if the agreement is approved, operation of the Music Hall, will, in effect, be completely independent of RKO, with W. G. Van Schmus continuing in charge of the Music Hall as managing director for Rockefeller interests. It is understood a minimum amount of RKO product will be contracted for annually. The Music Hall will pay $700,000 minimum annual rental to Rockefeller Center.

Agreements covering RCA's advances to Rockefeller Center for rental deficiencies in the past, estimated at $900,000, also are included.

RKO's remaining connection with the Music Hall under the agreement, it is understood, is through RKO Service Corporation, which will continue to perform certain management services and be paid weekly by the Music Hall on the basis of a percentage of average gross receipts.

Gaiety on Broadway To Show Foreign Films

The Samjux Theatre Corporation has completed a deal with the Erlanger interests to take over the Gaiety theatre on Broadway for the showing of foreign features. The date for the opening of the house has been set for November 13. Samuel Cummins and J. A. Koepel head the company. Opening attraction will be "Camicia Nera" ("Black Shirt"), by Mussolini.

Open Sunday at Last

The Linwood theatre at Pawnee City, Neb., one of the last theatres in Nebraska to start offering Sunday films, held its first Sunday performance recently.

WARNER WILL MAKE COSMOPOLITAN FILMS

Succeeds MGM As Producer and Distributor of Marion Davies Vehicles in Hearst Deal

On New Year Day, 1935, William Randolph Hearst's Cosmopolitan Productions—whose chief attraction for several years past has been Marion Davies—will move its entire production staff and equipment from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot at Culver City to the Warner-First National studios in Burbank, Cal., where all future Cosmopolitan pictures will be produced and distributed through Warner Bros.

The arrangement, which brings to a close eight years of production and distribution teamwork between Cosmopolitan and MGM, was consummated this week between Warner and Hearst officials as contracts were signed by Edgar B. Hatrick, vice-president of Cosmopolitan, and Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of all Warner production.

Mr. Hatrick's Hearst Metrotone News was not, however, included in the deal, and the reel will continue to be produced by the Hearst news staff and distributed by MGM, as at present.

The reason generally advanced for the break is that Miss Davies was becoming increasingly dissatisfied with the roles assigned her. Considerable friction was reported when the role of Elizabeth Barrett in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" was assigned to Norma Shearer. Miss Davies' request for a test, according to reports, was denied. Matters came to a head when it was suggested to Irving Thalberg that Miss Davies play the title role in "Marie Antoinette." Miss Shearer was given the part.

Cosmopolitan-Marion Davies Productions, of which Miss Davies is president, under the MGM production and distribution arrangements was backed by William Randolph Hearst. Whether Mr. Hearst will continue to finance Miss Davies' pictures on the Warner lot has not been announced. Hearst officials in New York on Monday indicated, however, that Miss Davies' stories, casts, directors and production supervisors would be selected by the Hearst organization. As to Cosmopolitan productions other than those in which Miss Davies will appear on the Warner lot, Hearst representatives could make no official comment.

Other Cosmopolitans To Be Made

"We consider ourselves very fortunate in having obtained the services of Marion Davies for a series of star productions," said Jack L. Warner. "Our aim and ambition will be to produce pictures with Miss Davies that will create even greater success than she has heretofore attained. In addition to Miss Davies' star productions, we will also produce a series of Cosmopolitan pictures to be distributed by our company throughout the world."

Said Miss Davies:

"I feel very happy over my new arrangement with Warner Bros. I am confident that they will give me every cooperation in the production of my pictures and that I shall have greater individual opportunity."

Whether Warner Bros. will actually finance Miss Davies' pictures was regarded this week in New York as of comparatively little importance in comparison with the fact of Warner distribution of her pictures with the vast resources of the Hearst newspapers behind it.

"Breaks" for Warner

For many years the 28 Hearst papers in the United States have accorded more publicity, probably, to Marion Davies' pictures than to those of any other star, while Mr. Hearst's publishers always have appeared slightly more partial to MGM stars than those of other companies. Although MGM will still maintain a definite entrée to the Hearst news columns through the Hearst Metrotone News, publicity "breaks" are expected to go to the Warner organization after the first of the year.

Discussions between the Hearst organization and Warner over possible affiliation is not new. At least four years ago the Warner production chief almost had concluded an arrangement with Mr. Hearst for Miss Davies and the International Newsreel, but at the last minute Hearst renewed the MGM contract.

Cosmopolitan Productions, Inc., Ltd.—the previous official title of Miss Davies' company—late last week changed its name to Cosmopolitan Corp., New York City. Formerly it was a Delaware corporation, but no special significance was attached to the name change by the Hearst office in New York, it being described simply as an inter-company move.

In Theatre and Films Since 1916

Miss Davies, who was born Marion Douras in New York City in 1900, has been engaged in the theatre and in films since 1916, her first professional appearance being in that year as a dancer in "Chu Chin Chow." Following this she cast her lot with the young motion picture business and in 1918 appeared in "Runaway Romany" for Ardsley-Pathe. "April Folly," "The Restless Sex," and "When Knighthood Was in Flower" followed in 1920-21-22 for Lasky, and in 1923 she appeared in Goldwyn's "Little Old New York." Since that time Miss Davies has worked on the MGM lot, in "Beverly of Graustark," "Tillie the Toiler," "Quality Street," "The Fair Co-Ed," "The Patsy," "The Cardboard Lover," "The Hollywood Revue," "Marianne," "Show People," "The Floradora Girl," "Not So Dumb," "Bachelor Father," "It's a Wise Child," "Five and Ten," "Polly of the Circus," "Blondie of the Follies" and "Operator 13."

The six Cosmopolitan productions slated for the 1934-35 season, two or three of which will star Miss Davies, will be released by Warner, which means that those pictures scheduled for MGM's new season list will not be made for that company. It is reported the first Davies vehicle under the new deal will be a Sidney Skolsky story, "Movie Queen."

Hoblitzelle To Aid Saenger Solution

With appointment late last week of Karl Hoblitzelle, head of the Interstate Theatres circuit and a theatre operating partner of Paramount Publix, as intermediary in the current negotiations between the Paramount trustees and E. V. Richards in connection with Mr. Richards' participation in reorganization of Saenger Theatres, Paramount took another step forward in bringing together the many loose ends which still remain in the way of final reorganization.

The Saenger negotiations, it is understood, center around an adjustment of the provisions for participation of Mr. Richards and Paramount, respectively, in the stock of the reorganized Saenger company. Under the original provisions, Mr. Richards was to receive all Class A stock of the new company for $25,000, with Paramount retaining all Class B shares. The trustees feel these provisions should be revised somewhat more in Paramount's favor.

Settlement of the long pending $5,099,000 anti-trust suit brought against Paramount by E. M. Loew of Boston was agreed upon and a petition asking court approval is being submitted at once in New York by special master John E. Joyce. The settlement figure, it is understood, is in excess of $100,000.

This marks the second anti-trust suit settlement by Paramount within a month, the first being a settlement of the Edward Quittner suit of $5,100,000 for $10,000. A settlement of the anti-trust suit brought against Paramount by A. B. Momand of Oklahoma for $4,900,000 is scheduled for early negotiation.

George J. Schaefer, Paramount Publix general manager, filed a $98,000 claim Monday under his contract which the Paramount trustees disaffirmed in September, 1933. The agreement was to run until February, 1935.

A proposed agreement under which Madison Operation Company, Paramount subsidiary, would relinquish its lease on the McVickers theatre in Chicago, and obtain release from all obligations in connection with the $1,600,000 mortgage bonds outstanding on the theatres, was approved by Federal Judge Cox, who also approved a compromise and settlement of all claims against Paramount by Cecil B. De Mille Productions, calling for payment to De Mille of $202,915 by Paramount Productions.

Zanuck Takes Bromfield Story

Darryl Zanuck, production head of 20th Century, has purchased the film rights to Louis Bromfield's story, "De Luxe." A stage version, done by the author and John Gearon, will be produced on Broadway by Chester Erskin, in conjunction with 20th Century, in line with the Zanuck plan to use the stage in the nature of a laboratory for the screen.

To Release French Films

Paramount plans the release in this country of eight French pictures, beginning with this month. The pictures were produced at the company's Joinville studio near Paris. They will only be released in French-speaking communities and generally in Canada.

PAPER COMMENDS FILM EDITORIALLY

The management of the Harrison Theatre Corporation of Indiana calls attention to a highly laudatory editorial in the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel, commending the MGM picture, "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," which was held over at the local Emboyd theatre. The editorial points out that the newspaper had not hesitated in the past to criticize "off-color" pictures, but declares it "is just as eager to praise as to condemn."

Six Memphis Theatres Indicted for Sunday Films

Indictments were returned recently against six Memphis theatres for operating on Sunday in the face of state and city "blue laws" by the new Shelby County grand jury. The indictments came as a surprise to theatre managers, as the old grand jury repeatedly had refused to indict.

Indictments were returned against the Orpheum, Loew's State, Loew's Palace and the Strand, downtown theatres, and against two neighborhood houses.

Germany Bars Two Of Most Popular Stars

Two of the most popular motion picture players in Germany have been barred by the government from appearance in any future films. Adolph Wohlbreuck was barred on the ground that he is non-Aryan, Paul Hoerbiger for making indiscreet remarks concerning the Nazi regime during a private conversation.

Miss Rolf Due in January

Tutta Berntzen Rolf, Scandinavian actress signed by Winfield Sheehan of Fox while he was abroad recently, will come to the United States in January. She has appeared in films in various European countries.

Abeles Assumes Duties

Arthur Abeles has begun his new duties as manager of the Warner Mexico City exchange, succeeding Felipe Mier, who has taken over a projection and accessory business.

Goldstein Heads Schine Club

Louis Goldstein, chief booker for the Schine circuit, at Gloversville, N. Y., has been elected president of the Schiners Club, an employees' benefit association, for the year 1934-35.

Graham With United Artists

John Graham, until recently British International Pictures representative in Kansas City, has joined the local United Artists sales staff.

Reports Business Better

Charles Stern, assistant to Al Lichtman, general sales manager of United Artists, returning from a Buffalo trip, reported business in upstate New York better.

Fred Meyer New Aide to Laemmle

Fred S. Meyer, former president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, and long a leader in exhibition circles, leaves Milwaukee this week to become assistant to Carl Laemmle, as advisor on production from the exhibition standpoint at the Universal Studios on the Coast. A farewell party was given him Wednesday night.

Mr. Meyer began his motion picture career, so to speak, in 1910 as manager of the Grand theatre in Chicago. From that time he was successively salesman, local branch manager in several cities and for several companies, theatre manager, and on several occasions representing Universal.

He has been president of the Milwaukee Theatre Managers Association. In 1933 he took over the lease of the Alhambra theatre in Milwaukee, which he had previously managed. He is a vice-president of the MPTOA, and has represented the unaffiliated exhibitors on the grievance board.

Royster Heads Ohio Paramount Subsidiary

Harry L. Royster has been named general manager of South Ohio Theatres, Inc., at Hamilton, Ohio, a subsidiary of Paramount's Famous Theatres, organized to operate three theatres in Hamilton and two in Middletown. The move returns Paramount to a dominant position in both cities, involving leases on the Paramount, Rialto and Palace in Hamilton and the Paramount and Strand in Middletown. All but the Strand had been returned to the former owner, the Taft Estate, Cincinnati.

Shirley Temple Is Sued By Agents in California

Shirley Temple, 6-year-old Fox star, was named defendant in a suit filed in California supreme court last week. Elinor O'Reilly and Gene Mann, complainants, declared they are the agents of the child and obtained for her a five-year Fox contract and another for New York personal appearances at $7,500 per week. They asked the court to construe the terms of their contract in view of these engagements. The suit also named George and Gertrude Temple, Shirley's parents.

EQUIPMENT CODE HEARD; FILM LEVIES IN EFFECT

Large Companies Protest Rules Framed by Authority Agency Committee; Decision Soon

With the exception of the hearing on the motion picture theatre supply dealers' revised NRA code at Washington and the final settlement of the controversy between independent distributors and members of the Code Authority over the producer-distributor assessment schedule, the motion picture code front was comparatively quiet during the week.

Other developments included:

1. Opposition by major companies to rules framed by the Agency Committee of the Code Authority.

2. Division Administrator Rosenblatt ruled that members of code boards appointed with industry approval may not be dismissed because any particular group fears they may be antagonistic to that group's interest in the future.

Equipment Code Presented

With a mere handful of witnesses present, a code for the motion picture and theatre equipment and supplies distributors was presented to the NRA through Deputy Administrator Frank H. Crockard on November 2 by J. E. Robin of New York, president of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association.

Proposed as a supplement to the general wholesale code, the agreement contained no labor provisions but an amendment regulating hours of employment and wages was submitted during the hearing.

In submitting the code, Mr. Robin said his organization represented 56 of the 69 companies in the industry which last year had sales of about $7,000,000, of which non-members of his organization accounted for about $3,000,000.

The code was also supported by Mrs. M. G. Ashcraft, of the Sears Ashcraft Manufacturing Company, Los Angeles. While the company would not come under the agreement, Mrs. Ashcraft explained, it is deeply interested because unfair trade practices among the distributors had brought conditions to a point where they were no longer able to meet their bills and the company was in a position where it could no longer finance them.

The proposal was further supported by J. C. Hecht of the Daylight Screen Company, Chicago, also a manufacturer.

Emphasizing that his opposition to the code was in no way to be construed as opposition to the NRA and explaining that his company was operating under the recovery program, R. P. LaRue of the National Theatre Supply Company opposed adoption of any agreement on the ground that such benefits as would accrue would not offset the inconvenience and expense.

Assessment Schedule Settled

Final settlement of the controversy between independent distributors and the members of the code authority over the producer-distributor assessment schedule was reached November 2 following conferences between Harold S. Bareford of the finance committee of the Authority and officials of the NRA. The schedules are now in effect.

With but one protest filed, and that apparently designed to lay the basis for future action, should such be desirable, on the ground that it constituted taxation without representation, the exhibitor assessment schedule was approved by the recovery administration, covering contributions for the last half of the current year.

No changes were made in the amounts to be charged under the producer-distributor schedule, but provisions were incorporated to safeguard the interests of the independents, and as approved by the administration it is provided that the total contribution of the independent group shall not exceed $18,000. If the contributions exceed that amount they will be credited to the independents, pro rata, against their 1935 contributions and if found to be greater than the sum to be collected next year, the excess will be refunded.

Further, it was stipulated, the 1935 schedule shall be revised so as to eliminate as far as possible any chance of collecting excess contributions.

As a third concession to pacify the independents, it is provided that any company which believes its assessment is too heavy may appeal to the code authority for relief.

Agency Reports Debated

Acceptance of the report of the agency committee was urged by Harold S. Bareford and an attorney for the MPPDA November 1 at a brief public hearing at which were present less than a half-dozen persons, none of them members of the committee.

As a result of the arguments presented by the producer representatives, it is considered probable the recovery administration will reject the rules proposed by the committee and require it to prepare new rules more in conformity with the instructions of the motion picture code.

The rules as written, it was declared, are confusing and ambiguous and deal more with relations between agents and their principals than between agents and producers, although the latter was the only subject contemplated in the code.

Further, the committee, it was charged, seeks to have the President sign the order making the rules effective, giving them an importance out of proportion to their place in the code, of which they should properly be a part.

As an added argument, the producer representatives asserted that the rules were written on the basis of the California laws and would likely be found to be in conflict with the laws of other states where they might be applied as well as with the Federal statutes.

Partial explanation of the failure of any West Coast agents to attend the hearing was found in a letter from Ralph H. Blum, Beverly Hills, Calif., protesting that the meeting should have been held in Los Angeles because "all the persons affected" are in the West.

The statements were challenged by the MPPDA attorney, who declared there are as many agents and nearly as many artists in New York, and that Eastern activities have so expanded in the past few years that the East is becoming recognized as a production center.

Laying down the principle that members of code boards appointed with the approval of the industry may not be dismissed because any particular group fears that they may be antagonistic to that group's interest at some undefined future date, Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt last week rejected an appeal of the Independent Exhibitors Protective Association, Inc., of Philadelphia, for reorganization of the Philadelphia clearance and zoning boards.

While it was indicated in New York this week that Kansas City's clearance and zoning schedule will in all probability be adopted by the Code Authority and put into effect around December 1, Jay Means, Kansas City Independent Theatre Owners president, said that "it looks as if the major distributors are out to sell protection."

B. and K. Answers Newspaper Charge Of Delayed Runs

A cartoon drawn by James Tinney McCutcheon, appearing last week on the first page of the Chicago Daily Tribune, and which intimated that Chicago "never gets first run movies until long after they appear in most American cities," was answered this week by circuits in that city as being contrary to fact.

While the local motion picture censors were admitted to be the cause of the postponement of some films, and that extended runs of highly successful pictures likewise delay general exhibition, officials of Balaban and Katz declared Monday that the Chicago situation is no different than that existing in other large cities insofar as prompt release of new pictures is concerned.

It was pointed out that "Monte Cristo," which is only just closing its Los Angeles first-run exhibition, was shown in Chicago some time ago.

"No other city, not excepting New York, has the important neighborhood theatres which Chicago has," said William Hollander, publicity and advertising director of B. & K. "And, to hundreds of thousands these neighborhood houses are their first-run theatres. When these pictures appear in key houses five weeks after a 'Loop' showing, many feel that Chicago is behind in release schedules. They forget the 'Loop' must come first."

Equity Council Approves Screen Guild Affiliation

Formal approval of the Screen Actors' Guild as an affiliate of Actors' Equity Association was given Friday in New York by Equity's Council. The Equity approval vote will now be resubmitted to the Class A membership of the Guild in Hollywood. A two-thirds majority vote must be recorded before the organization can be recognized under the American Federation of Labor charter for the entertainment industries, held by Equity.

Producers in Hollywood this week declared unanimously that they have no objections to individuals or groups joining either Equity or the Guild so long as such memberships do not instigate labor troubles in Hollywood.

The Friday approval provides that any affiliation agreement between Equity and the Guild may be terminated, that where the Guild seeks the aid of organized labor such labor shall be sought through Equity, and that the Guild pay a share of the tax which Equity pays to the A. F. of L.

The question of a possible double set of dues remained unsettled.

Says DeCasseres of "Lost Horizons," But "Order, Please" and "Bridal Quilt" Are Less Adaptable

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

LOST HORIZONS

This is definitely a picture buy and a box-office topper, or else I lose my gift as the descendant of old Tiresias, the famous second-sight man of Athens at the time Xantippe was razzing Socrates for hanging around with the soap-box fix-its of the Pershing Square of the Greek metropolis instead of bringing home the bacon and kiddie-cars for the little Socrateasers.

In twenty scenes, three acts, using up exactly 54 characters, with two or three revolving stages and planting the beautiful and accomplished Jane Wyatt definitely in the big headlines, "Lost Horizons" (Lawrence Rivers, Inc., producing), is, strangely enough, without any real author. It has been tinkered and re-tinkered with by several persons. The result is, as usual, the play sometimes lacks intelligibility, drags, and is often non. seq.

However, the boys out on the big camera ranches (where the snow on the mountain-tops needs cleaning—have you noticed?) will remedy all that. For here, in concept, is a mighty grand picture of what would have happened to Janet Evans if she hadn't committed suicide.

The moral of this drama is: if you are thinking of Having Done with the Whole Bloody Thing—don't! Stick around just a day or two longer. Prosperity, Happiness and, maybe, Uncle Morgenthau are right around the corner with a Big Surprise.

Janet, an aspiring young actress (Los Angeles), has great hopes. She is abandoned, however, by the fellow she loves and whom she was engaged to marry. He has got a job in the East. She has given up her career for him. She commits suicide—gun.

Now we are taken to "the Hall of Records," which are located on the other side of the grave. Here the "Director" gives Janet several books to read which show what her life would have been and how through suicide she has destroyed the pattern of other lives that would have touched her own.

The ensuing scenes of this Broken Thread and Ruined Patterns play take us to Atlantic City, Montreal, New York, Kansas City and finally back to the Hall of Records.

When Janet's whole life is spread before her and she sees the havoc she has done not only to herself but to others she knows the meaning of purgatory.

She meets again the man who jilted her. He has become District Attorney. She has made a great success on Broadway and he finds her glamorous again and wants her. And Janet wonders how the emotion she had once held for him had deceived her into thinking it was love.

She has found her real mate in the playwright whose play she has put over, and has brought to him both fame and success. They adore one another and are to be married.

And what happens instead? By her unfortunate act she brings blight and disaster upon the heads of others. Another girl takes her part in the play. It is a complete failure. The playwright in despair takes his own life. Murder, seduction, and many other things run the sub-plots and sub-sub-plots.

So you see here are all the blood and gizzard of a swell picture entertainment, which is not swell at all in the stage presentation because of lack of vividness, incoherence and too many chefs.

And Miss Wyatt should do this in pictures. She's the lady for this show.

Picture value, 100 per cent.

ORDER, PLEASE

Just about the time when I feared that the murder-mystery play was going into what the doctors call a senile slump up bob George Bushar and John Tuerk with a play called "Order, Please," by Edward Childs Carpenter, who adapted it from a play by Walter Hackett, and who, in turn, for all I know may have taken it from Alec Dumas.

The screen—thank God!—is never without its murder-mystery show. I can always find somewhere in this New York burg a house that's playing wall-tapping dicks, pistols that suddenly come out of innocent door-drapes, and a long shot of a good sound corpse stretched out on a swell rug as though it were trying to look through a hole in a floor at a reception to Dizzy and Daffy Dean.

Although Vivienne Osborne and James Bell do their best in Mr. Carpenter's boisterous and breath-panting "murder comedy," I cannot here report anything high and mighty or tasty for the picture trade. It is all too obvious, too stagey, too ancient.

Nevertheless, "Order, Please" will undoubtedly go to Hollywood. It will make a fair program filler between a W. C. Fields schnozzle-comedy and the esoteric connipations of Slim and Zasu.

We are in what the scholarly George Raft would call a New York hostelry—the Hotel Diplomat, to be more precise.

In blows a young guy from Wyoming who has come to New York to sample brunettes, or what have you. He once longed from the depth of his Cheyennesque soul to become a detective. Kismet grants his wish—and how!

Next to him a stockbroker has been murdered. "His body lies crumpled on the floor" (I quote one of my old Paramount titles).

The Wyoming Wonder skins downstairs (oh, I forgot—there's a valuable bracelet lying alongside the corpus balonie, the property of a Russian Countess) to unfold the news.

Ha! Ha! When he, they and those get back to his room the corpse is in his trunk!

When the dead ex-dabbler in stocks rolls out of the trunk, when the lights go out and Great Doings are done on the stage, when women scream and strong men yank out their flasks and some lout in the gallery yells "Heil, Hitler"—you may be sure you are in the right place.

Well, anniehow, the Wyoming Van Dine solves the murder with a button, I think, and goes west with Phoebe, the telephone operator. O chortle, ye cherubs!

Nothing here for Max Reinhardt or Monsieur Zanuck, as you see.

Picture value, 40 per cent.

BRIDAL QUILT

"The Bridal Quilt" is the story of a lamb from Kentucky who got stewed on the Romantic Ideal.

It will be a picture some day, but not one that will cause the flight of any great number of exhibitors to the Riviera to spend their gains.

Tom Powers wrote this play. Powers is the memorable "Dear Old Charlie" of "Strange Interlude." He is a fine actor, but as a playwright he is too thin, too vague—too—too—too—well—I regret to say it—mushy.

Vera Murray, Charles Dillingham's secretary for many years, produced "Bridal Quilt." It was her initial venture. She had a grand first night—a regular Hollywood opening night—but I fear that that will end the matter—at present.

The smart Bartons of New Jersey are motoring down through Kentucky. Car runs into a ditch, or something, oh, I remember—a crick.

While Jim Barton is doing the fixing the wife is picked up in the arms of a mountain Launcelet, Wash Alexander, and he carries her over the crick to keep her fleshlings from being splashed.

He falls for her—necking is so proletarian around this Kentucky digging—and goes moon-eye and calf-mooing over the Fine Lady.

Swing the audience now to a swell "drawing-room" reception of the Bartons in their New Jersey home. Wash busts in—he's on the track of his Isolde. Sturdy Old Kaintuck laddie appears in door of monocle-and-cocktail nest! Picture it—what?

But now rides the Climax on the Winds of Destiny. Wash doesn't know that his Queen of Sheba has a Solomon on her staff—her husband—just old Jim Barton, who lies 'round in ditches tinkering with gas-buggies. So when she breaks the news the proud Son of Kentucky cannot take it.

So what? Nothing. They send the poor boob back to his old Kaintucky home and then the good-natured husband drives his wife down so that she can apologize for not introducing him when they met in the crick.

Farewell, fond dream, etc.

Picture value, 40 per cent or less.

PUBLIC RESPONDS TO IMPROVED PICTURES

Press Reflects Audience Appreciation of Higher Class Product; Better Attendance Seen

Definitely favorable reaction of the public to motion picture product of the new season is reflected in the reaction of editorial writers and dramatic critics. Much of that comment concerns the trends of production since Joseph I. Breen rolled up his sleeves and began applying the functioning of the Production Code Administration directly to the studios, from story to finished production, July 15th last.

In the critical expressions of writers in the daily newspapers and the religious press these conclusions appear most frequently:

Quality of product has shown marked improvement.

Censorship boards are making comparatively few cuts.

Dignified and intelligent themes are prominent in the new films.

Producers are concentrating upon general audience appeal.

Patrons have elevated their standard of screen taste.

Box office receipts have increased.

Historical, biographical and high grade musical offerings are evident.

Entertainment value has been heightened.

New patronage is being attracted.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Flirtation Walk

(First National)
Soldier Romance

Showmen who desire to sell their attractions should find plenty which is both necessary and valuable to work with in this picture. Given unique and colorful backgrounds of army post, Hawaii and West Point Military Academy, it is composed of practical entertainment and showmanship elements whose merits in creating and satisfying public enthusiasm have been proved.

The picture is the romantic story of a soldier boy, tracing his career, crowded with many amusing and appealing incidents, from rear rank buck private to Cadet Corps regimental commander. The substantiating love story accompaniment engenders spontaneous human interest. This quality is given an added appeal by the manner in which romantic and in-line-of-duty conflict is interpolated. Tinged with gay comedy, music both sentimental and martial, the picture also develops spectacle both alluring and thrilling. The picture features a striking Hawaiian ceremonial dance, and at West Point presents many heretofore unrevealed glimpses of dormitory and student activities as well an unusual parading pageantry. Always the show is keyed to a popular pitch.

The picture opens in Hawaii. There under the spell of tropical moonlight and emotions that surge in tune to the native dance spectacle, rookie Canary and the general's daughter, Kit, fall in love. Their romance is short-lived, as when Lt. Biddle intrudes upon their almost clandestine affair, Kit apparently double crosses the amazed boy. Hurt because he is accused of inability to understand because he is neither officer nor gentleman, Canary resolves to become both.

He wins an appointment to West Point. Several reels are devoted to picturizations of the manner in which the cadets live and are trained. Each year, new honors come to Canary, and they are always a thrill to Sgt. Scrapper as he reads of them in the kid's letters. Marked by many sequences featuring the Cadet Corps on parade, the story moves into Canary's senior year.

Again Kit comes into the picture. Seeing her rookie here on parade, the old affection flames again, but even a walk along the Cadet's sparking ground, Flirtation Walk, cannot break down the boy's reserve or eradicate the suspicion that Kit once before got him into a jam.

Canary is writing the Senior play. The Corps selects Kit to play the heroine. In many ways the playlet satirizes lightly the Kit-Canary-Lieutenant Biddle romance. Only when the script calls for a kiss does Canary realize that he's in love. Throwing discretion to the winds, he dashes out to inform the sacred but willing-to-know Kit of his discovery. Found violating the rules again as well as the "officer-gentleman" tradition, Canary resolves to resign, only to have Scrapper, who has come to see his protege graduate, talk him out of it and to have Lt. Biddle understand that he cannot stand in the way of real love.

In title, cast names, story idea and the color and fanfare that marks its production there is available showmanship for any type of campaign. Being the kind of attraction that justifies the spending of a little extra money as well as personal effort to stir up patron curiosity, the more intensive the advance, the better patron response should be.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Broadway Bill

(Columbia)
Comedy-Drama

Although the title suggests otherwise, this is a different kind of race track picture. As it combines drama, romance, lively and colorful comedy and packs a potent but unique heart appeal, it's a fresh story of a man, the horse and a girl. Full of that atmosphere, both realistically and by illusion, that has made horse-racing the sport of king and commoner, it builds to a vivid action race sequence and then crashes to a tragedy—a great horse breaks his heart to win and with honors befitting a hero is buried on the track where he ran his epic race. Though the picture does a lot of fooling about to reach its objective, it seems to have the peculiar quality that makes for popular attractions. There is action and color for the men folk, and it possesses a novel romantic angle that no smart exhibitor will overlook.

Dan, although very much in love with his wife Margaret, has little desire to be just a cog in the industrial domain of the small town tycoon, J. L. Higgins. Rising in rebellion, he takes to the road with his horse, Broadway Bill, and Whitey. An old race track man, he knows his way about. Broke, he runs into his old pals the Colonel, Happy and others. In their relations the comedy sequences are concentrated.

On his first test, Broadway Bill, unused to the ways of the track, runs away. In stalling off feed bills, caring for sister-in-law Alice, who sympathetically follows him to the track, Dan and Whitey have a hectic time. Pathos, tinged with comedy, first is inserted, as rain seeping through the miserable stable roof gives Bill a cold on the eve of the Derby. Heroic measures, plus the application of a little mind over matter theory, bring the horse around. With the excitement of far-flung pool room betting interpolated, in which a gag to get money is inserted by the Colonel and Happy to drive the odds on Broadway Bill down, the stage is set for the race. This is a classic of action. Fighting for his head against a jockey in league with the gamblers, Bill just manages to nose out the gamblers' favorite—to somersault over, dead. The memorial services portrayed in a sincere and sympathy-stirring manner, the picture shifts back to Higginsville. Margaret has divorced Dan. Higgins has sold off his enterprises. The family is gathered for one final meeting. Rocks crash through the windows, Alice is the first to know it's Dan, and dashes out to him, to be quickly followed by her father who at last sees in Dan the kind of fellow who makes life worth living on the open road with a pair of new horses.

This picture promises both pleasing entertainment and some new and different showmanship possibilities. It's the kind of attraction that should be circused.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Original story by Mark Hellinger. Screen play by Robert Riskin. Directed by Frank Capra. Photographed by Joseph Walker. Produced by Harry Cohn. Running time, when seen on Hollywood, 105 minutes (to be cut). Release date, to be determined.

Student Tour

(MGM)
Musical Comedy-Drama

With comedy the predominant element, plus music, a chorus dance number or two, romance and action in a crew race, this film presents lively and entertaining screen fare, with its appeal apt to be general.

A new melody, vocalized by the principals, may be reproduced over lobby amplifiers to attract pedestrian attention. That comedy is to be emphasized in the selling is clearly indicated by the fact that Jimmy Durante and Charles Butterworth have the leading roles, sharing with Maxine Doyle and Phil Regan.

The basic idea of the story has an element of showmanship novelty. The college crew wins a big race, and is eligible to compete with an English crew provided the members pass their course in philosophy. Unable to do so they take the trip anyway, the professor accompanying them as a way out of the difficulty. With Butterworth as the professor of philosophy, and Durante the crew's trainer, becoming room-mates aboard ship there results the greater part of the film's considerable comedy.

The college atmosphere is readymade for the younger set among the patronage, while the comedy offered by the two leading players is the appeal to the older folks, while the general appeal may be indicated in the musical aspects of the film and the chorus numbers.

Regan is stroke of the college crew which is preparing for a trip to Europe for a race, part of the trip to be a student tour around the world. The hitch is the philosophy course, under Butterworth's direction, which no one seems able to pass. A group of girls, led by the college siren, Florine McKinney, ties the professor in a closet, and burns the results of the examination. But the failure holds, and it is only after the professor is prevailed upon to accompany the group and examine them again later, that they leave. Miss Doyle, Butterworth's niece, wearing shell-rimmed glasses, a demure expression and a retiring manner, goes along as the professor's secretary.

Aboard ship, with the trip enlivened by the song and dance numbers, the comedy of Durante and Butterworth and the romance of Regan and Miss McKinney, there is lively screen entertainment. Miss Doyle is in love with Regan, and he, infatuated with Miss McKinney, only pities the mouse-like secretary. But at the ship's masquerade ball he dances with a masked girl who is the hit of the party. He pursues her but cannot learn her identity. Miss McKinney later makes him believe she was the girl. It is only at a party somewhere in Europe that he discovers his error and the real identity of the girl at the masquerade. She will have nothing to do with him. At the race in England, it is discovered that the coxswain has lost his voice, and Miss Doyle goes in as a substitute for him. The crew wins with the aid of a singing coxswain, and she and Regan are reconciled. The appearance of the radio tenor, Nelson Eddy, singing one number, may be worth attention.

It is a salable film, and of general appeal.—AARONSON, New York.

The Painted Veil

(MGM)

Drama

This is a Greta Garbo picture and she is about its only showmanship asset. As far as its entertainment quality is concerned—a slow moving, heavily tempoed drama of outraged love and a woman's moralistic regeneration influenced by her husband's humanitarianism—it is that style of entertainment quite apt to create derogatory rather than favorable word-of-mouth advertising. At best, because of Miss Garbo and the picture's artistic caliber, its major appeal most likely will be limited to the intelligentsia. Whatever mass enthusiasm is aroused will, undoubtedly, be the result of smart showmanship rather than anything the picture itself will create.

With dialogue the sole interpretative medium, action is practically nil. Only in one instance, an elaborately mounted and spectacular Chinese ceremonial sequence, is there any spontaneous flair. Likewise, comedy relief is at a minimum. Whatever laughs there are come along late in the picture, and then they are effective only because they afford a contrast to the heavy and somber atmosphere.

The actual story is just another exposition of the triangle love premise. The major locales are Hongkong and interior China. Husband Walter Fane, busily tending the needs of teaming thousands of Chinese, has little time to give his wife, Katrin. Although she fights against it, she succumbs to the affections of philander-ing Jack Townsend. Her husband learns of Katrin's faithlessness and when Townsend's disavowal of her comes at the same time, the stage is set for Fane's revenge.

Forcing her to accompany him to cholera-infested interior China, he labors to eradicate the scourge. Katrin is left to think and fear, her only bright spots being the visits of Waddington and his philosophical comedy. When Fane cracks under the strain, the real woman in Katrin is revealed. Audiences are left to presume that, from this purgatory, husband and wife will enter a heaven of trusting eternal love.

There are many problems to be solved and handicaps to be overcome in the showmanship. It would seem that concentrating on Garbo alone, making whatever use is possible of the other cast names, and coming out straight from the shoulder and informing the public that this is serious dramatic romance, would be the most effective way of presenting it.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

6-Day Bike Rider

(Warner)

Comedy

Of the drawing power of the name and comic appeal of Joe E. Brown the exhibitor is well aware, and when that comedian is concerned in the thrill, spill and speed of the famed six-day bicycle races, plus an incidental but nonetheless entertaining romance, the result is the kind of attraction which should be comparatively simple in the selling and wide in its appeal.

The title in itself, when tied in with the name of the star, has its value, and the active theme opens the way for all sorts of local exploitation stunts. Unusually effective in attracting pedestrian attention at a Broadway theatre was the stationing of several riders, on regulation racing wheels, in an open store window above the street adjacent to the theatre, where they pedaled their way to nowhere on raised wheels, while continuing crowds watched.

Another element is the appearance in the cast of Frank McHugh, who almost never fails to find an appreciative audience, and who, in this case, is Brown's partner in the big race. Opposite Brown in the romantic aspect of the story is Maxine Doyle.

The race itself and its complications have been handled with as much excitement, thrill and punch as anyone could wish. There is a nationwide interest in that major sporting event of the year. Whatever the film may lack in unusually hilarious comedy moments, it definitely makes up in action and punch.

Small town station agent Brown is an ardent cyclist and the "financay" of Miss Doyle. To the town comes Gordon Westcott, trick cyclist at the local theatre, who loses no time in appropriating the attention of Miss Doyle, much to Brown's chagrin. As a bumpkin who thinks he is quite a lad, Brown is highly entertaining. When his girl, annoyed by his conceit, turns him down, he leaves town, running into McHugh en route. McHugh has the same intention as he, entering the big race, and they become partners.

In their capacity as bicycle messenger boys, they have plenty of time to practice. Brown, delivering a message, finds Westcott at a rooming house, mistakes a voice he hears for that of Miss Doyle, fights with Westcott and lands in jail. The race starts without him, and McHugh begins to ride alone. Brown is finally freed, and races on an appropriated bike through the crowded streets to the velodrome, a rather hilarious sequence in the old fashioned style. At the velodrome, he enters the running just in time, disrobing as he rides.

Through an accident, an ether-saturated cloth is caught in his rear wheel. As he speeds about the track, he nearly renders unconscious all the other riders, and then himself. But finally, of course, the team wins the big race, and the girl is waiting for him at the finish.

It is lively, amusing entertainment, and by all means may be shown to the entire family.—AARONSON, New York.

College Rhythm

(Paramount)

Comedy

Farce comedy in which the colorful hysteria of highly commercialized football enthusiasm is applied to modern department store management, gags, girl glamour, music, dancing and cheering section stunts, are the materials of which this laugh show is built. A showmanship feature, it places at one's disposal a whole host of tricky and unique possibilities that not only can take advantage of the screen presentation of the radio-vaudeville favorite, Joe Penner, but also the ways in which the Stacey emporium was reestablished.

Larry Stacey, star piccolo player in the college band, is much in love with Gloria, as the foil for egotistical, in a funny way, all-American halfback "Love and Kisses" Finnegan. Despite temporary glory, Larry predicts his nemesis will be a bum. A couple of years later, Finnegan is all that while Larry is manager of his father's store. Modernistic in every way, the only thing it doesn't have is customers.

Arriving simultaneously on the scene, Finnegan, a bum, but cocky, talks J. P. Stacey into applying a combination of musical comedy and football furore to business management, with a pro eleven as the star attraction. Come also Penner and his duck, to flick hilariously in and out of the picture continually. The customers also desert rival merchant Whimple and Finnegan rides high while Larry is shuffled into the background in business as well as love.

Amid much tomfoolery all around, Whimple organizes a team and challenges the Stacey stars. The night game makes great use of every two-reel comedy gag, and features some unusual geometric chorus girl numbers in rhythm with Mimi's singing, cheer leading and body twisting.

Of course, there are the heroics where Larry is inserted into the fracas to take a beating from the Whimple gridsters as well as his own mates. But after the Whimple team resorts to the strategy of turning the lights out to score a touchdown, Penner shows Stacey how to pay back in kind. The finale has Finnegan winning Gloria, while Larry rushes to June, the little girl always in the background, to realize that she has been continually telling him that she loves him, as Stacey collects his toe-kissing bet from Whimple right in Stacey's department store window.

Of the several song numbers featured, three, "Stay as Sweet as You Are," "Take a Number from One to Ten," and "Give Three Cheers for Love," can easily be made an effective part

Girl O' My Dreams

(Monogram)
Comedy-Drama

Concerning itself with the manner in which a very self-inflated young college track star is deflated through the efforts of the college newspaper editor, this picture's appeal is to the younger patrons in particular, with little in name or title power to suggest unusual selling.

For atmosphere there is the lively activity of the big track meet, which helps considerably in injecting entertaining material into a story which basically is not new, and assisting performances no more than adequate.

The title, aside from the mere fact that the romance included in the yarn presupposes something of that nature, is not indicative of the theme.

Heading the cast are Mary Carlisle, Eddie Nugent, Creighton Chaney and Sterling Holloway.

The story itself presents the best exploitation medium, going after the younger generation. Holloway, as the college paper editor, supplies the comedy in his own peculiar style. Where he is known for his short subject appearances, billing of his name may have some value.

Nugent is the star of the college track team, but in a role of such conceit that his actions are a continual source of wonder to his fellows. He is in love with Mary Carlisle, and though she returns the feeling, she would prefer to have the wind taken out of the young man's sails. Her feeling is shared by Holloway, his roommate, who is conducting the college election for selection of the most popular man. Holloway, seeing his opportunity, tampers with the vote, and causes Chaney, another track star, but a quiet one, to win the election.

Holloway's maneuvering also twists things so that, in spite, Nugent makes love to Chaney's girl, GiGi Parrish, and Chaney to Miss Carlisle. At the crucial moment at the all-important meet, the two girls pen notes to the stars, and with the good news as inspiration, they score the necessary points to win.

The film is apparently best played in a mid-week position.—AARONSON, New York.

My Song For You

(Gaumont-British)
Musical Romance

There is a salable combination here of comedy and musical values, with sentiment as light seasoning. It is an adaptation of a Cine-Alliance Joe May production, and the atmosphere of Continental gaiety and irresponsibility is not lost in Maurice Elvey's direction of the British version.

Jan Kiepura, Polish tenor, has selling value and his voice is also an artistic asset, but the theatre campaign probably can most effectively be based on the originality of situation which marks the film.

Perhaps the best is that in which Kiepura, locked in his hotel bedroom with the telephone cut off, brings the police to his rescue by throwing up the window and treating the passing crowds to a series of operatic solos. There is humor and camera originality in the picture of the gradually gathering masses, who eventually stop the traffic, but there is also a first-class opportunity for Kiepura to show how he can sing.

There's another piece of originality when a girl, infatuated with the tenor, creeps out to a rendezvous with him after having been put to bed, with a sleeping draught, by her mother. She falls asleep during the love making.

The story is that Kiepura, famous tenor, falls for a girl whom he takes to be one of the chorus rehearsing for "Aida," in which he is the star. Actually she is at the Opera House looking for a job for her fiancé, a pianist. She makes a date with the singer to aid her fiancé. Follow the episodes just mentioned and the desired introduction. The girl discovers that the pianist is quite willing that she should go any lengths with the tenor; the tenor thinks she has just been exploiting him.

The girl hides. To find her, the tenor has the idea of advertising that he will sing at a big swimming gala and give the money to any charity nominated by the girl who had the private party with him. She reveals herself, but punishes his tactlessness by explaining that the whole stunt was for publicity, and then arranges to marry the pianist. At the altar she backs out and finally is married to the tenor.

There's the "no" to the marriage vows as well as the comedy angles, and Kiepura is a good comedy actor as well as a fine singer. In fact, "My Song for You" has plenty of selling values as well as real entertainment angles.—ALLAN, London.

Mister Cinders

(British International - British)
Comedy, Music

A London Hippodrome stage success, offering song and comedy and a simple but amusing story, the picture cast is headed by Zelma O'Neal and Clifford Mollison and includes such wellknown London stage turns as the Western Brothers, Renee Houston and W. H. Berry.

Jim Lancaster, nephew of Sir George and Lady Lancaster, has been adopted on a poor relation basis and the fact that he is left all the work of the establishment, like Cinderella, earns him the nickname of "Mr. Cinders."

When he saves a millionaire, Henry Kemp, from drowning, his cousins, Lumley and Guy, try to steal the credit and the rescued man's pretty daughter Jill, but Jill takes a hand at the game and arranges that Jim in disguise shall attend her coming of age party, to which he has not been invited. There is a robbery and Jim is suspected, but, with Jill's help, discovers the real culprit and marries the heiress.

Use can be made of the original story angle that has the hero instead of the heroine in the Cinderella role. The other strong selling angles are the comedy of the Western Brothers in the "wicked brothers" roles and the attractiveness of the four song features: "Where's Jim?", "Just a Blue Sky," "I Could Get Used to You" and "Spread a Little Happiness."—ALLAN, London.

Produced by British International Pictures at Elstree and distributed by Wardour Films, Ltd. Directed by Frederick Zelnik. Script by Clifford Grey and Frank Miller. Camera, Otto Kanturek. Sound, A. Ross.

The Broken Rosary

(Butcher-British)
Romance, Music

The main appeal is the first screen appearance of Derek Oldham, the famous British tenor. Apart from his excellent singing, he acts well. The story is extremely unsophisticated but exploits the renunciation theme in a somewhat unusual setting. There is dramatic value in a scene in which, intending to take his friend's life, the tenor is stopped as he raises his pistol by the booming of cannon announcing the beginning of the "two minutes silence" on Armistice Day.

The background of a gramophone recording studio, used in many important scenes, is not only new in itself but permits some original situations to be developed; one of the best is that in which a girl listening over the loudspeaker in the office overhears a love passage between her fiancé and another girl in the studio. Various exploitation angles are suggested by this situation.

Giovanni and Maria are betrothed as children by their Italian parents. Years later they are studying singing in Milan. An English friend and war companion of Giovanni, whose life he saved in the trenches, is also a student. He falls in love with Maria, but returns to England rather than betray his friend.

The Englishman, Jack, becomes a partner in his uncle's gramophone factory. Maria refuses to be wed to Giovanni until she has had a year's career as a singer. She comes to London to make records for Jack's firm.

Oldham, who very successfully puts over the personality of the Italian, can be advertised with confidence that his voice will please. The finale, in which he sings Gounod's "Ave Maria" over the microphone, is a good sob-scene for the mass public to which the picture is frankly addressed.—ALLAN, London.

The Camels Are Coming

(Gaumont-British)
Comedy Spectacle

There is a rather original blend here of elements of popular appeal not usually found in one picture: authentic exteriors filmed in Egypt, good comedy values in plot and situation, excellent air scenes, and a musical appeal typified by the really good theme song, "Who's Been Polishing the Sun?" which the star, Jack Hulbert, puts over very well.

It is extravaganza against a background usually reserved for drama, and there is selling value in this fact and in the pictorial value of the Egyptian scenes, which are introduced by a sequence showing a squadron of British planes flying out on a campaign against Arab drug smugglers.

The officer in charge, Jack Campbell (Jack Hulbert), after descending from the skies upon the caravan of Sheik Ali, first lieutenant of the smugglers, is easily kidded into letting him go. Follows a wild goose chase of a mysterious plane containing a beautiful and mysterious girl, who Jack forthwith decides must be the smuggler in chief. She plays up to the character by disabling his plane before sailing off in her own.

Stranded, Jack manages to capture a camel and to make his way to the headquarters of Nicholas, the real chief of the dope gang. There he ingenuously explains all the Government's plans against the smugglers, and Nicholas, instead of poisoning him, realizes that he has a simpleton to deal with and easily persuades him to carry to Cairo some antique vases packed with drugs.

Later Jack gets on the track of the mysterious girl, who is really working a publicity stunt for a new brand of cigarettes, and fools him into an attempt to seize her goods—which is very bad publicity for him. She makes it up to him by sharing his next expedition when Ali is finally brought to book after a thrilling battle in the desert in which planes bomb the smugglers' fort and the Camel Corps conducts the operations on terra firma—a very spectacular last scene.

Plot interests are well maintained and Jack's insistent sticking to the wrong trail maintains an amusing note of comedy in scenes which are otherwise on a scale appropriate to the most ambitious "sheik" melodramas.

The main selling value has been indicated. There are opportunities for an original campaign also in the mystery of the girl smuggler of the air, and comedy values are obvious in the situation of a man acting as unwilling agent of the gang he is after. Stills of the picture, with their desert backgrounds, picturesque Arabs and camels and Eastern atmosphere suggest many good lobby displays.—ALLAN, London.

The Olympic Winter Sports Capital

(Mary Warner)
Interesting

There is a large measure of interest, as well as a sporting thrill or two, in this subject, which pictures the locale of the winter sports division of the Olympic Games of 1936, at Garmisch-Partenkirchen, in Germany. Exciting are the bob-sled races on the ice-coated course, the ski marathon and the ski jumps, as present and former Olympic champions are seen in action. The description by Lowell Thomas is an asset. With the tryouts for the American team scheduled for this winter, it should not be difficult to arouse interest in the subject.—Running time, 8 minutes.

At the Mike

Entertaining

With Ford Bond, radio announcer, rallying the performers for what is supposed to be a radio rehearsal, this Mentone subject gets under way, and develops into a tuneful and entertaining show, in the vaudeville style. With Bennie Ross, orchestra leader, acting as master of ceremonies, and singing a number himself, there are seen Tess Gardella (Aunt Jemima), the Giersdorff Sisters, Maxine Stone, Kathleen Howard, Baby Rose Marie, and Emerson's Hill-Billies, featuring Tex Fletcher.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Dartmouth Days

(MGM)
Good

The younger generation in particular should find this pictorial rambling about the Dartmouth College campus of interest, and with appeal. The remarks of Pete Smith in accompaniment add to the effectiveness of the subject as a whole, while the scenic work is attractive. The winter sports which are a feature of the extra-curricula activities of the students, are pictured and add a punch and liveliness to the short.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Well, by George

(Universal)
Fair

There is no more than fair entertainment in this collection of vaudeville turns, with George Price acting as master of ceremonies. Having their turns before the camera are Ramona, radio singer; Dave Craft, star tap dancer; Mills, Gold and Ray, eccentric dancing comedians, and the 16 Mentonettes, girl chorus. Price himself sings two numbers. The subject is no better than average in entertainment value.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Done in Oil

(MGM)
Fair Comedy

The attractive Thelma Todd and the plump Patsy Kelly combine their efforts in this comedy to achieve a result which is for the most part fair comedy. Patsy is the unenthusiastic model for room-mate Thelma's efforts with brushes and palette. A slightly inebriated publicity friend decides to put Thelma across, calls her by a French-sounding name, and the trouble begins when a group of Frenchmen arrive and Patsy has to appear as a French maid, Fifi.—Running time, 18 minutes.

What a Business

(Universal)
Fair Entertainment

With the occasionally amusing dialogue of Smith and Dale, comedians, as the basis, as Dale tries to sell theatre owner Smith a group of vaudeville acts, the subject offers a group of performers, who are competent, if not particularly inspiring. Included on the roster of entertainers are the four Ink Spots, colored singers; Bill Telask, Bill Brown and Sally Blane, in a song and dance act, and the Russian Revels, led by Maybohm Smith, an orchestra and soloists of several sorts. Rates as fair entertainment.—Running time, 19 minutes.

You Said A Hatful

(MGM)
Has Its Moments

There are amusing moments in this comedy, featuring Charley Chase, the elongated, bespectacled comic for Hal Roach. Chase is the secretary to a railroad owner, and in love with the boss's daughter. The boss gets a tip which leads him to start for Kansas City on a big deal, and he forces Chase to don clothes like his, while he assumes the role of secretary. Chase gets the clothes at a costumer, buying a loaded magician's hat, which does tricks en route. For those who like Chase this will probably be enjoyable, for others a fair comedy effort.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Zion, Canyon of Color

(MGM)
Excellent

One of the FitzPatrick Traveltalk subjects, filmed in Technicolor, this pictures, with beautiful scenic effect, the natural majesty of the Zion national park in Utah, its name bestowed by the early Mormon settlers. With interesting accompanying dialogue, the film is a subject which seems almost certain to find a widely attentive audience.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Skylarks

(Universal)
Amusing

When Oswald and his pal Dopey see motion pictures of the stratospheric Piccards, they determine to do the same thing. The result is an amusing cartoon subject, recounting their adventures on Mars, their capture by the god of war. He begins to shake them into a state of unconsciousness, when they awaken in the theatre, under the impetus of the janitor, cleaning up for the night.—Running time, 8 minutes.

A Toyland Broadcast

(MGM)
Entertaining

In this lively Harmon-Ising musical cartoon in color the inhabitants of a toy shop on table and shelf, offer a broadcast featuring dancing, instrumental work and singing, with a lively and tuneful zest. Little figures represent various personages of the radio and stage, "doing their stuff" to an enthusiastic response from the fellow toys. An entertaining subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Rugby

Active

Active in its picturing of a fast and rough sport, and interesting in its clear indication of how the game which is the father of modern American football is played, this subject in addition features the chattering, and occasionally amusing comment, in explanation, of Pete Smith. The short is entertaining and interesting.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Jolly Little Elves

(Universal)
Excellent

An unusually good cartoon subject in the Cartune Classics series, in Technicolor, has been made of the old tale of the elderly, impoverished cobbler and his wife, who befriend the hungry and tired little elf. At night, when the couple are asleep, the elves rally round to make many pair of the finest shoes, the sale of which results in wealth for the old cobbler. It should prove especially enjoyable for the youngsters.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Strikes and Spares

Filmed Skill

The skill with which the best of bowlers handle the large ball in the alleys, which is an amazing skill, is the purpose and entertaining object of this subject in the Oddity series. Pete Smith renders the explanatory comment in his usual effective fashion and a bit of comedy is injected now and again, as one of the country's greatest trick bowlers makes the heavy ball respond accurately to his every wish.—Running time, nine minutes.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

HELLDORADO

Fox

An analysis of this production reveals many showmanship potentialities. The story, refreshing and pleasing romantic love interest modern in tone, combines thrill, laugh-provoking comedy and continuous fast action. Occasioned by a spectacular cloudburst and flood, it sets its players down in a little abandoned desert ghost-mining town, where, preceded by action that develops the romantic quality, as well as comedy and adventure elements, a new high-gear gold rush not only adds to the excitement but creates a vein of suspense when the fortune hunters are disappointed that threaten dire fate to the hero and heroine prior to the happy ending climax.

It is being produced by Jesse Lasky, from an original story by George M. Dazey and screen play by Frances Hyland. Direction is by James M. Cruze, remembered for many silent day successes and the recent "David Harum." While audiences have seen many thrill production stunts, the cloudburst flood sequences in this promise to add a new note.

Richard Arlen, seen in many Paramount features, and Madge Evans, recently in "Grand Canary," are the story's hero and heroine. Supporting players include Ralph Bellamy, lately featured in "Spitfire," "Crime of Helen Santley" and "This Man is Mine"; James Gleason, Stepin Fetchit and a 6-year-old colored boy, Lucky Hurlic, about whom the comedy episodes of the story revolve; Henry B. Walthall, Helen Jerome Eddy; Gertrude Short, seen in "The Thin Man" and "Perfect Week End"; Stanley Fields, currently in "Kentucky Kernels," and Patricia Farr, one of the Fox juvenile stock company's players.

Because of its production character and title, the story makes available much unusual exploitation which can take its theme from the modern gold rush angle.

CARNIVAL

Columbia

The title being indicative of the atmosphere, this is a dramatic story of a carnival grifter, his great love for his motherless child and the experiences he undergoes to keep the youngster with him while he searches the country over for another wife, eventually to find her in the woman who always was the "shill" in his concessions.

For this type of story, in which human interest is blended with and counterbalanced by comedy, spectacle, excitement and suspense, a little more consideration should be given the writing and direction credits. The author, Robert Riskin, who is also doing the screen play, adapted two of Columbia's most outstanding recent successes, "Lady for a Day" and "It Happened One Night." He is also the scenarist on the forthcoming "Broadway Bill." The director, Ben Stoloff, will be remembered for "Palooka" and "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round."

The quality of entertainment which author and director represent is furthered by the cast selections. Lee Tracy's last lead in "Lemon Drop Kid" was similar in atmosphere and relationship. Likewise, Sally Eilers' last was seen in a picture—"Baby in the Ice Box"—where the welfare of a baby was the important feature.

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

Players in support include Jimmy Durante, Fred Keating, vaudeville notable, seen in "The Captain Hates the Sea," Florence Rice who made her debut in "Fugitive Lady," and a brand new child actor, 2-year-old Dickie Walters.

One of the production highlights of the story is a baby show which immediately suggests similar exploitation. Also the fact that practically all the action takes place against a carnival background makes possible colorful showmanship which can accentuate the past accomplishments of the author.

THE VANISHING PIONEER

Paramount

Although this is a western story, the production is making a serious effort to keep away from hackneyed formula. Produced by Harold Hurley, it is directed by Charles Barton, whose recent "Wagon Wheels" is proving quite a success in the secondary and smaller town houses. Adaptation is by Louise Long, with the screen play by Edward E. Paramore, Jr., and Ethel Doherty.

As an experiment is being made with story showmanship and entertainment values, a similar departure is noted in the selection of the cast. In the principal roles youthful names are balanced by several oldtimers, and a famous stage personality is introduced to the screen. Randolph Scott, who has been featured in practically all the Paramount westerns, has the lead. The new personality introduced to screen fans is Mrs. Leslie Carter, whose stage career and fame has extended over more than four decades. The other screen veterans are Chic Sale, Florence Roberts and George Marion. The younger players include Ann (formerly Clara Lou) Sheridan, Kathleen Burke, the original "Panther Woman," and James Eagles. Other supporting players are Willie Fung and Charles Wilson, who has been seen in minor parts in several recent Paramount features.

Sans the usual western thrill heroics, but with more than the usual quota of situation and dialogue comedy, "The Vanishing Pioneer" is a murder mystery story. As a lot of unusual chicanery and double dealing is involved, the murderer attempts to pass himself off as the slain man, a mining engineer. His talents are combined with those of a timid wild west sheriff to solve the complicated crime.

The commercial success of several of the recent Paramount westerns not only with the youngsters, but also among the grownup action-adventure fans, is a direct tip as to how this attraction is to be handled.

THE NIGHT IS YOUNG

MGM

There being many valuable showmanship features to this, probably the most outstanding is the manner in which it adapts a new method of motion picture presentation technique. It will bring to the screen the technique of grand opera and musical operettas where every bit of action, line of dialogue and the lyrics, naturally, are synchronized to music. Even Leo's introductory role will be in rhythm with the accompanying background melodies.

The story, "Student Prince" type, is modern, located in Vienna, and detailing the romantic affair of a prince of the reigning house and a ballet dancer, is by Vicki Baum. It blends love interest, pathos that inspires human interest, comedy and color. The screen play is by Oscar Hammerstein II, Franz Schlyz and Edgar Allen Woolf. Music is by Sigmund Romberg and the lyrics by Hammerstein. The director, Dudley Murphy, made "Emperor Jones."

As the picture introduces a new method, it also introduces a new star, Evelyn Laye, one of Europe's most noted musical comedy artists. In the role of the ballet girl, she both sings and dances. Teamed with her in the lead is Ramon Novarro, last seen in "Cat and the Fiddle." The supporting cast includes two of the feature players in "The Merry Widow," Edward Everett Horton and Herman Bing. Also included are Donald Cook, Henry Stephenson, Rosalind Russell, currently in "Forsaking All Others," and "Evelyn Prentice"; Charles Judels and Albert Conti.

With the production trend indicating that musicals are going to figure largely in winter programs, it should be well to note the experiment that is being attempted in this picture. Likewise from the standpoint of novelty, it affords a talking angle that easily can be capitalized upon in creating interest for the show, not only on the part of music lovers but the rank and file patrons as well.

I'VE BEEN AROUND

Universal

Related in a high society atmosphere, against exclusive Long Island estate backgrounds, swanky watering places and metropolitan New York, this is a story of tangled and disappointed love. The original story and screen play are by John Meehan, Jr.; recently credited with "Wake Up and Dream." It is being directed by Phil Cahn, a former film cutter, elevated to his present status by B. F. Zeidman, the picture's producer, who similarly discovered Louis Milestone.

Romance, which is given a strong dramatic twist, motivates the yarn. It is the story of an engaged girl, swept off her feet by a fortune hunting interloper. Her illusions, as well as those of her fiancé, crumble when both discover they are being victimized. They marry. As the husband devotes himself to months of wild philandering, the lonely pair are brought together when they realize the folly of their individual sufferings, and under the spell of chimes tolling the birth of a new year understand that true love will efface the memories of many bitter experiences.

Chester Morris, currently in "Let's Talk It Over" and "Repeal," and Rochelle Hudson, in many Fox pictures and soon to appear in "Imitation of Life," are teamed in the leading roles. Gene Lockhart, outstanding in Radio's "By Your Leave," is the third party to the triangle. A newcomer, Phyllis Brooks, widely publicized artists' model, will make her screen debut. Other principals are G. P. Huntley, Jr., Isobel Jewell, whose performance in MGM's "Evelyn Prentice" is a valuable asset to this picture, and Walter Walker, currently in "Strange Wives."

WINGS IN THE DARK

Paramount

As the title indicates, this is an aviation story, but one in which the romantic and melodramatic content, and the manner in which both are developed, is quite off the beaten path. The story revolves around two separate ideas. The hero has devoted himself to perfecting mechanical devices which will permit aviators to fly safely in the dark or fog. The heroine is attempting a transatlantic flight from Europe to New York. Prevented from landing by fog, she is piloted out of the clouds by the hero, and the meaning that is read into the title is given a surprising punch in the climax.

The original story is by Nell Shipman, former screen star, and Philip D. Hurn. Adaptation is by Dale Van Every, with the screen play by Frank Partos and Jack Kirkland. Direction is by James Flood, whose most recent pictures are "All of Me" and "Such Women are Dangerous." The picture is being produced by Arthur Hornblow, who was similarly associated with the current "Pursuit of Happiness."

The cast features Myrna Loy, currently in "Evelyn Prentice," and Cary Grant, now appearing in "Enter Madame." Supporting players include Roscoe Karns, Hobart Kavanagh, Dean Jagers, Russell Hopton, Mabel Forrest, Bert Hanlon, James Burtis, Mat McHugh, Julian Madison, Rita Owen, Esther Michelson and Virgil Simmons.

As the production angles of the picture feature much unusual aerial thrill, it makes possible a brand of exploitation which establishes the show as something other than a war-flier attraction. Also it affords opportunity to make some new kinds of cooperative contacts with plane manufacturers, commercial transport lines and local fliers. Similarly it suggests an out-of-the-rut brand of publicity and advertising.

PASSPORT TO FAME

Columbia

The story by W. R. Burnett upon which this picture is based appeared in the Saturday Evening Post under the title "Jailbreaker." A drama, tinged with unique romance and situation comedy, it's the yarn of clerk Jones, whose resemblance to a feared public enemy, Killer Mannion is so amazing that it develops high and thrilling entertainment. While for picture purposes much of the original story content has been altered, it still preserves all the characteristic suspense packed drama.

The screen play is by Jo Swerling, recently credited with "The Defense Rests" and "Lady by Choice" and Robert Riskin (See "Carnival"). Direction is by John Ford, who made "The Lost Patrol" and "World Moves On."

Edward G. Robinson, last seen in Warner's "Man of Two Faces," plays the dual role of the spineless hardware store clerk and the ruthless killer Mannion. In support are Jean Arthur, featured in "Most Precious Thing in Life" and "Defense Rests"; Etienne Girardot, drug store proprietor in "Handy Andy"; Arthur Hohl; Fred Keating and Donald Meek, both of whom are in "The Captain Hates the Sea"; Douglas Dumbrille, now in "Broadway Bill"; Paul Harvey and Edward Brophy, currently in "Evelyn Prentice."

There being a continuous air of gangster threat and menace in the production, the story is told in situations entirely apart from the semi-political background of the original. Therein, Jones sold the story of his strange experiences to newspapers and went to Hollywood. Here, as the instrument, he lures Mannion to death to collect a reward making possible a South Sea Island honeymoon.

Potential unusual showmanship is to be found in the title and story content and also by stirring up memories of the success which Robinson met in early gangster pictures from "Little Caesar" onward.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE

Paramount

Outstanding among commercial values is the fact that this production is adapted from a series of short stories published in magazines by Gilbert K. Chesterton, noted British writer. For this purpose, the highlights of several of the best read stories have been combined. Father Brown, the key character of the series, is a jovial clergyman whose hobby of solving baffling crimes has made him a famous detective. Here the story builds to the solution of a great jewel robbery, the pursuit and capture of an international thief, the manner in which Father Brown slyly outwits his nemesis, reforms him and makes him a fit man to marry the girl he loves.

The screen play is by Henry Myers and C. Gardner Sullivan. Direction is by Edward Sedgwick, maker of "Here Comes the Groom," "I'll Tell the World" and "Poor Rich." It is being produced by Bayard Veiller, who functioned similarly on "Menace."

Walter Connelly, currently in "Whom the Gods Destroy" and "The Captain Hates the Sea," has the role of Father Brown. Paul Lukas is the crook. The girl is Gertrude Michel, now in "Menace" and previously seen in "Murder at the Vanities." Halliwell Hobbes, also seen in "Menace," is the man whom Lukas robs and is the uncle of the girl he loves. Supporting players include Robert Lorraine, Una O'Connor currently in "Barretts of Wimpole Street"; Peter Hobbes, Bunny Beaty, E. E. Clive, Gwenllian Gill, Eldred Tilbury, Robert Adair and Yorke Sherwood.

Showmanship seeking to interest those who have read the Chesterton stories as well as the army of fans who delight in unusual mystery detective yarns is the brand of exploitation for this attraction.

MILLS OF THE GODS

Columbia

Because it gives May Robson an entirely different character, this production has dramatic story value and topical interest for much unique showmanship. The original story is by Melville Baker and Jack Kirkland, who collaborated on "Zoo in Budapest"; the screen play is by Garek Fort, recently credited with "Private Scandal" and remembered for "Frankenstein" and "Dracula." Direction is by Roy W. Neill, who has made several Columbia pictures.

The story is a drama of a woman, an industry, a family gone to seed, and a current social condition. Mary Hasting (Miss Robson) builds a blacksmith shop into one of the world's greatest industries. At the height of prosperity, ready to retire, she summons her family, Fay Wray, Raymond Walburn, James Blakely, Josephine Whittel, all grown fat in the lap of luxury, to take over. Each preferring the gaudy life they live, all refuse and the factory is turned over to employees to run. Comes the depression. The children, called upon for financial support, again refuse to help. The old woman steps out of the picture; the family would close the plant. Headed by the agitator Victor Jory, who finds in Fay Wray the kind of woman he never knew before, the workmen riot. As the elder son is slain, Mary raises the money to put the mills in operation again, giving the workmen a chance to live and setting matters so that Jory and Miss Wray know that real love will be theirs.

Topical significance, plus the present May Robson box office draw, appear to be the outstanding showmanship angles. Those players mentioned predominate in interpreting the story. With the exceptional title as a basis and almost every community familiar with situations similar to the story, smart showmen should find in this picture plenty of opportunity to test their business building abilities.

Fay Uses Letter to Himself as Film Ad

Ed Fay, well known exhibitor of Providence, used a unique method of advertising a performance which featured the Warner film, "Big Hearted Herbert," at the Majestic theatre. Taking considerable space, Mr. Fay ran, as the advertisement in its entirety, a reproduction of a letter which he had received from Major Albert Warner of Warner Brothers, thanking him for the suggestion that the original play be purchased by Warner for screen adaptation.

AMPA Sues General Foods

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, New York, has brought suit against General Foods Corporation for $2,500, allegedly due by virtue of a contract whereby the AMPA supplied talent for a General Foods radio broadcast, with money paid to have gone to the AMPA charity. No money was paid, according to the complaint. General Foods has filed a denial.

Audio Makes New Reel

Audio Productions, Inc., has completed a one-reel subject in two-color stop motion, featuring the range of premiums offered by the Brown & Williamson Tobacco Company. F. Lyle Goldman supervised the subject.

Boitano Joins Donahue and Coe

L. F. Boitano, who is a former executive of Agfa-Ansco, raw stock manufacturer, has become associated with Donahue and Coe, New York advertising agency which has several motion picture companies as clients.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

Hollywood Correspondent

LESS than a year ago, many observers predicted the revival of "musicals" as just another flash in the pan, to live a shorter life than the original musical cycle of 1927-28. But musical productions have increased by leaps and bounds.

Whether this demand has reached its peak only time will tell. Nevertheless, the records disclose the astounding total of 25 new musicals in final stages of preparation, to go before the cameras within two or three months.

Never in the history of Hollywood production have so many pictures in one cycle been ready to start, and the problem of talent shortage is giving producers and casting directors something else to worry about. The call at all agencies is for singers, dancers, instructors and directors.

Chorus Girl Problem

The ultimate in bizarre settings will be the keynote for every production to make spectacular numbers stand out. Backgrounds, however, are secondary to embellishing sets with beautiful dancing girls. Greater demand for vocal choruses is already in evidence, and teachers to train them are being sought, but Hollywood has but 300 trained chorus girls and decidedly fewer trained voices specializing in screen work, only enough of each to accommodate five big musicals at a time, yet ten musicals are to go before the cameras simultaneously.

Of the 25 musicals planned for early production, MGM reports five; Warner, four; Fox, Paramount, Radio and Universal three each, while 20th Century and Columbia plan two each.

Trail Blazers Find Rewards

While the average Hollywood producer is content to punch out "run-of-the-mill" pictures, the few trail blazers are reaping rich rewards.

Harry Cohn flew in the face of tradition by attempting to give grand opera to the hoi polloi, and as if that weren't bad enough, he picked a star whose two previous pictures had had meager circulation. Now the first "yessers" and the second "guessers" are ascribing all manner of reasons for the box-office success of "One Night of Love," except Harry Cohn.

After returns started coming in, even the Marx Brothers embarked on a grand opera comedy entitled "OperAntics."

Pioneer Jesse Lasky, after a year at Fox, took courage in his hands and produced "The White Parade," eliminating anything surgical, clinical or iodoformish.

"Judge Priest" was something unusual for Will Rogers. It was a gamble to put him in a story where he couldn't wisecrack about the political situation, or things he reads in the papers. Sol Wurtzel ventured the Civil War role with more heart interest than Rogers' previous roles.

Eddie Small, in producing "The Count of Monte Cristo," was told it was old fashioned, a costume picture that couldn't be compressed into six reels. But Small picked an unknown player, Robert Donat, for the lead and gave the production a modern treatment.

Pandro Berman's conception of the "Gay Divorcee" exhibits the unusual. He ventured that Fred Astaire expressed more emotion through his feet than some actors do with their faces, took the big chance. The Continental also was a musical dance adventure.

Samuel Goldwyn, who dares more often than any other producer, whose showmanship even is that of being different, again demonstrated his sagacity in "Kid Millions" by inserting Technicolor sequence of definite appeal to children.

"Pursuit of Happiness," produced by Arthur Hornblow, Jr., is another picture different by virtue of theme, daring in treatment, but handled in good taste.

"The Thin Man," produced by Hunt Stromberg, really started a new school for murder mysteries, surface gaiety and smoldering drama beneath.

Frank Capra's "It Happened One Night" dared to make a comedian of Clark Gable. It glorified everyday incidents in humorous vein, making characterization as important as plot.

The Return of Whimsy

"What Every Woman Knows," produced by Irving Thalberg, marked the return of whimsy.

Two other producers are now engaged in making the different type of photoplay.

Walter Wanger, it will be remembered, caused quite a furore with "Washington-Merry-Go-Round" and "Gabriel Over the White House." Now he is putting the finishing touches on his first independent film, "The President Vanishes," a modern drama of the White House and the puzzling influences that beset the high office. It is said the President has given it his sanction.

Dudley Murphy, also a constant experimenter into realms of the unusual, after the out-of-the-ordinary "Glass Maker," a Technicolor short, is now working on something that he calls a "rhythmic film," with the entire action and dialogue in cadence and the various sequences in dynamic harmony with each other. Murphy says even the roar of the MGM lion will be done rhythmically. The film is "The Night Is Young," adapted from the Hammerstein and Romberg operetta.

Rated by Hollywood as perhaps the most daring producer is Darryl Zanuck, sponsor of "The House of Rothschild." Mr. Zanuck pioneered in the revival of musicals while at Warner.

News Flashes

Scarcity of United Artists product to feed the Chinese theatre with sufficient pictures on a three-a-day policy at popular prices, forced the UA circuit to enter into a temporary arrangement with Fox West Coast to play day and date with Loew's State, sans prologues at both houses. The new policy went into effect this week with Jesse L. Lasky's "White Parade" and probably will be followed up with "Kid Millions."

* * * *

All Hollywood sat up and took notice last week when John Hay Whitney made the startling announcement that he would spend $7,000,000 for the making of nine Technicolor features within the next two years.

* * * *

Deciding to confine his entire picture activity here, Douglas Fairbanks sold his holdings in London Films, Inc., to Alexander Korda last week and at the same time canceled his starring contract with that company.

* * * *

After several months of bickering back and forth Greta Garbo affixed her signature to a new contract with MGM calling for her exclusive services for the next two years. She will make two pictures a year.

* * * *

After obtaining his release from a four picture producing contract with Radio, Lou Brock signed a similar deal with Fox. His first under the new deal will be "Adios Argentina," a musical he had planned for his Radio deal. Felix Young succeeds to Brock's spot at Radio.

Six Pictures Start

Six features started in the past week, while six others were finished. Of the new productions Columbia and Universal are credited with two features each and Paramount and 20th Century contribute one each. On the completed side, MGM and Warner each have a pair, Universal and Paramount accounting for the other two.

At Columbia "The Depths Below" started. Its cast is headed by Jack Holt, Edmund Lowe, Florence Rice, Forrester Harvey and Frank Sheridan. In "Feud" Tim McCoy is starred.

Universal started shooting on "I've Been Around," in which Chester Morris, Rochelle Hudson, Gene Lockhart, Isobel Jewell, G. P. Huntley, Jr., Phyllis Brooks and Walter Walker will be seen. Also on the stages is "Straight From the Heart." Roger Pryor, Mary Astor and Baby Jane (Juanita Quigley) are featured with Carole Coombe, Henry Armetta, Robert McWade and Warren Hymer in the cast.

Another Zane Grey western is the new Paramount activity. Titled "The Vanishing Pioneer," its cast will feature Randolph Scott, Chic Sale, Ann Sheridan, George Marion, Sr., Florence Roberts, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Howard Wilson and James Eagles.

As the second picture on its new season's program, 20th Century began work on "Clive of India." A big production, the extensive case is headed by Ronald Colman, Loretta Young, Frances Lister, Colin Clive, Lumsden Hare, Montagu Love and Robert Greig.

First of the completed pictures at Warner is "The White Cockatoo." Jean Muir and Ricardo Cortez are starred.

At MGM, "Wicked Woman," in which Mady Christians makes her screen debut, was completed.

Universal completed "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head," with Claude Rains.

"Behold My Wife," Paramount's contribution to the completed quota, is a Schulberg production with Sylvia Sydney and Gene Raymond.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

QUESTION NO. 247.—(A) Describe the bearings of horizontal type motor-generators. (B) Name the reasons why cleanliness around a motor and generator is essential. (C) What precautions are necessary with regard to electrical connections? (D) Give your ideas as to necessity for ammeters and voltmeters, and their location.

Answer to Question No. 241

Bluebook School Question No. 241 was: (A) Name the various objections to using a. c. at the arc. (B) What is meant by "rectifying" the current? (C) Name the various means available for rectifying current. (D) Give your own views as to whether or not a current rectifying device will return its cost to the management.

The following made good: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; A. F. Sprafke (who also sent a correct belated answer to question 240); D. Ferguson; R. J. Arntson; D. Ferguson; J. Wentworth; G. A. Atrley; C. E. Wainscott; H. Edwards; J. T. Seiler; T. Van Vaulkenburg; R. and K. Wells; M. and J. DeVoy; O. Allbright; N. L. Simms; T. Turk; L. R. O'Leary; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; B. R. Walker; P. and L. Felt; D. Breaston and H. Haber; B. L. Patterson; L. N. Guiding; D. L. Sinklow; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; F. H. and L. Klar; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; E. Hodson and S. Johnson; F. L. Saylor and G. N. Guidotti; P. L. McIntosh; M. F. Fallon; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; S. Spooner and B. H. Thaller; R. Geddings and L. Grant; D. Johnson; S. Spooner and B. H. Thaller; D. T. and L. B. Palmer; T. Turk; T. R. Rosche; A. Richardson and N. L. Haynes; L. Thomas and N. N. Boyde; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrop; H. Hughes and T. E. Mantol; L. Grant and R. Geddings; M. L. Spooner; T. U. Grant; L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; H. N. Hoffman; R. and K. Wells; T. N. Onby; F. Harlor and G. Harrison; K. L. Knight; L. Henderson and B. I. Henderson; W. R. Greiver and L. Howell; D. L. Patterson; T. Morris and D. L. Danielson; F. L. Dodson and F. L. Benton; C. Umphrey; C. B. Burray; D. T. Bennett; R. Crawford and G. E. Osborn.

While several made most excellent answers to Section A, I believe you will all agree the one selected for publication (that of G. E. Doe) could not be much improved upon. He says:

"I take it the question is not intended to include the new type a.c. arc that still is building its reputation, which I understand to be excellent where only a limited screen illumination is necessary.

"Starting with that premise, the a. c. arc is quite unstable as compared with the d. c. arc. Second, it is much less efficient because of the fact that half the light producing power is wasted, the crater of one carbon facing away from the collector lens or mirror. Third, the a. c. arc is not as silent in operation as is the d. c. arc, and some of the transformers used with it also are more or less noisy. Fourth, there is not the steadiness of illumination provided because at each cycle the light from the source of available light drops off heavily in brilliancy, which has the effect, if not of visible flicker, of reducing the brilliancy of screen illumination as a whole. Fifth, the a. c. arc produces a harsh light tone as compared with d. c. light."

The fourth subdivision of Doe's answer brought up a question. He says the drop in brilliancy once each cycle reduces screen illumination as a whole, and while that point has never, so far as I know, been brought up, I hold he is correct. It seems to me it just must be so.

Evans and Rau and almost every one else answers Section B as follows:

"Rectifying the current means changing alternating current into direct current—current that flow continuously in one direction only. It is not of constant voltage, however."

(C) P. and L. Felt answer thus: "There are many devices that may be used to rectify alternating current into direct current. Those available for serving an a. c. arc are the motor-generator, the mercury arc rectifier, the rotary converter and the chemical rectifier—the latter doubtful, meaning that while it can be used, its reliability and efficiency are doubtful.

"For other purposes there are the vacuum tube, the synchronized commutator, the electrolytic rectifier, the vibratory method and the copper oxide rectifier.

(D) H. Edwards says, "The exhibitor or manager who has a. c. supply and installs proper means for rectifying the current into d. c. will be well repaid. The a. c. arc is very wasteful because of the fact that only half its light production can be used. As a matter of fact, the same wattage used in a d. c. arc would, or at least should, more than double the available illumination.

"Of course, there are losses in rectification, hence the cost would not be cut in two, but nevertheless the superior excellence of illumination and reduction of eye strain to theatre patrons would fully justify the expense of rectification."

J. Wentworth answers thus: "With the understanding that in this answer I am not considering the new type of a. c. arc, about which I as yet am possessed of no very satisfying information (I am waiting for the new Bluebook, expecting it will be contained therein). I would answer with an emphatic yes. My reasons would be (1) that the d. c. light produces better results upon the screen than the a. c. light, (2) that while it is true it costs money to rectify current, it is a wise expense for the reason that it improves screen results and anything that does that increases the box office income, and (3) that it is debatable whether the increase in income will be sufficient to justify the additional outlay incurred by current rectification, but exhibitors should believe that anything that will improve the show to any considerable extent will be in the nature of justifiable expense, provided, of course, the expense is not unreasonable.

"The expense of current rectification is considerable, true, but after all it must be remembered that we get at least twice as much light per watt from d. c. that we can use for projection than we can get from a. c., because with a. c. exactly half the light goes in exactly the wrong direction—away from the lens or mirror.

"Repeating myself, therefore, my answer is an emphatic yes. In the end the whole cost will come back to the box office, with a lot of profit money tagging along behind it."

Toronto Auditorium Wired

The total of available seats for motion pictures in Toronto has been increased by 2,770, with the wiring for sound films of the civic concert auditorium, operated by a board of trustees, on a non-profit basis. No regular film schedule is planned, merely occasional film to fill concert program gaps.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

NO. 86—CUT RATES IN GROUPS FOR THEATRE PARTIES

QUESTION—Occasionally we have requests for reduced admission prices for theatre parties of, say 15 to 30 people. Our matinee prices are 20 cents for adults. Would it be a violation of the code to make about a 15-cent rate for a theatre party of 15, 20 or 25 persons, in no instance cutting under the price set in the contract?—SOUTH CAROLINA.

ANSWER—The proposal to make a 15-cent rate—when the regular adult admission is 20 cents—for a theatre party of 15, 20 or 25 people, would not be a violation of the motion picture code if it did not prove to be unfair competition to a competing theatre. By this is meant that such a practice would be unfair to a competing theatre, and would be prohibited by the code, if the exhibitor widely publicized and ballyhooed the fact that he would grant a special wholesale cut-rate for special theatre parties. Another probable form of unfair competition would be for the exhibitor otherwise to solicit the patronage of groups with a cut-rate admission as a lure. However, in no case must the admission even to the group be less than the minimum admission specified in the contract.

The clause in the motion picture code (Part 3, Section I, Article V-E), says: "No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates . . . which . . . are unfair to competing exhibitors. . . ."

No. 87—CONTRACT MATTERS WHICH DO NOT COME UNDER CODE

QUESTION—Perhaps this is not a code question, as the contract was signed before the code became effective, but not knowing who to ask about the problem I am writing to you.

In July, 1933, I signed a contract for 37 pictures, which contract was accepted on July 31, 1933, and was to go into force October, 1933.

There are four allocations in this contract, namely, $25, $15, $12.50 and $10.

In this contract there is a clause which reads: "The exhibitor may reject not exceeding 15 feature pictures, such rejections to come from the lowest allocated licensee fees only, and at a rate not to exceed five pictures every four months. Acceptances or rejections by the exhibitor must be given within 14 days from the notice of availability."

To date I have rejected only three pictures and have 12 more to play.

The company with which I am under contract has not released enough pictures for me to take advantage of the clause quoted above.

The following questions arise:

(1) Since the year is up, may I reject the entire 12 pictures "en bloc"? If so, does that complete my contract, though I have not played the 37 pictures? By taking advantage of rejecting 12 pictures I will have disposed of all features released to date on the 1933-34 contract.

(2) A feature was booked for February 21 and 22 and was confirmed to me at $10, the lowest allocated class. A few days before I was to play same a second invoice came through raising it to $12.50. As I had advertised this feature I paid the extra $2.50. Does this constitute a breach of contract?

(3) I never signed the code. Am I subject to the rules and regulations of the various code boards?—IOWA.

ANSWER—Questions number one and two are purely contractual matters that do not have any bearing on the motion picture code. They are subjects of contract interpretation and are matters requiring adjustment by arbitration, if arbitration is provided for in the contract, or else they are matters to be litigated in the courts, if the exhibitor believes that the distributor is in violation of the contract. Again, none of the problems mentioned in the first two questions has any bearing on the code.

Regarding question number three: All exhibitors are bound to abide by the code, and, regardless of whether or not they signed the code they are subject to any rulings of the local code boards.

NO. 88—SUBSTITUTIONS UNDER THE CODE

QUESTION—Do we have to take substitutions of star pictures which we contracted for, even though such substituted pictures are released before the end of the contract year? Or, if we play these substitutions are we entitled to eliminate a like number of the other pictures if we wish? We have contracted for all of this company's pictures.

ANSWER—The motion picture code says (Part 3-A, Article V-D): "No distributor shall substitute for any feature motion picture described in the contract as that of a named star or stars . . . one of any other star or stars . . ."

This means that the exhibitor is under no obligation to accept any substitute picture for a star picture, which star picture is specified as such in the contract as that of a particular star or stars. However, the question next arises as to what constitutes a star picture or who is a star and who isn't.

A player may be named in the contract, not as a star, but merely for the purpose of identifying a particular picture.

The Local Grievance Board would have to determine whether the specific case involves an actual star substitution where there is any doubt over the status of the player.

The code does give distributors the right to substitute named players for other players when such players are not stars, and also to make changes in the cast, when such changes do not involve a star or stars.

However, if a definite star picture which was named as such on the contract is not delivered and another picture is delivered in its place with another star, then the exhibitor is not obliged to accept the substitution.

But, if the exhibitor does accept the substitution and plays it, the matter ends there.

Heywood-Wakefield Cuts Loss

Heywood-Wakefield Company and subsidiaries has reported net loss, after all charges, of $46,435 for the nine months ended September 30. The figure compares with a loss of $533,215 for the equivalent period in 1933.

Charles Hawthorne Dies

Charles Evans Hawthorne, 62, Paramount attorney handling real estate matters, died last week at his home in New Rochelle, N. Y., of pneumonia. A sister, Mrs. Adelaide H. Woodin, survives him.

Krimsky Rapf Assistant

John Krimsky, New York theatrical producer, has been placed under contract as assistant to Harry Rapf, executive producer for MGM. Mr. Krimsky is a member of the stage producing firm of Krimsky and Cochran.

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Final Report Made in Picture Epics Bankruptcy

Irving Trust Company, trustee in the bankruptcy of Talking Picture Epics, Inc., of New York, last week filed its final report and accounting with Oscar W. Ehrhorn, referee in the case. The report listed gross receipts of $8,779.33 and disbursements of $2,579.90, leaving a balance on hand of $6,199.43. A final meeting of creditors was held in the referee's office last week for final disposition of the matter.

Sennett Loses Suit

Mack Sennett last week lost his $35,000 suit against Myrtle Mack for injuries he suffered in the motor crash in which her husband, Charles E. Mack, was killed in Arizona in January of this year.

Sylvia Froos With Educational

Sylvia Froos, radio star, has signed a contract to make a series of short subjects for Educational. Production will be in New York. She is now making "The Girl from Paradise."

Kahn Forms Kameo Pictures

Henry W. Kahn, formerly Fox managing director in Central Europe, has formed the Kameo Pictures Corporation, with offices in New York, for world distribution of American and foreign product. The company will finance production.

Wilmington Without Vaudeville

The Aldine, Stanley-Warner first run downtown theatre in Wilmington, Del., has discarded vaudeville. The action leaves the city without a theatre playing vaudeville.

George Kann with Pioneer

George Kann, former MGM unit manager, has joined Pioneer Productions on the Coast as business production manager.

Named Radio City Producer

Vincente Minnelli, art director at the Radio City Music Hall, last week took over his new duties as a stage producer.

J. C. JENKINS--His COLYUM

Lincoln, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

This town of Lincoln is the home of the Cornhusker football team. Heretofore that was something to brag about, but since the team went up to Minneapolis and let those Gophers walk all over 'em to the tune of 20 to nothing, about all Lincoln has to offer the public (outside of her seven theatres) is the state capitol building.

But speaking of state capitol buildings, did you know that Nebraska has a capitol building that cost $15,000,000 and that it is entirely paid for? Well, she has, and there is not a cent against it. We are not paying interest on long-time bonds. In fact, our constitution will not permit the state to go in debt nor issue bonds. We pay as we go, and that is a good system for any state or any person to adopt. But we started to talk about the Cornhusker football team, but since the Gophers trimmed 'em up, even if the Huskers did up and nose out Iowa's Hawkeyes 14 to 13, we haven't a thing to say except that there was no doggone sense in the Cornhuskers letting the Gophers clean 'em that way. Anyhow, this is what we had on our mind—

AN OPEN LETTER TO GEORGE BRENT

DEAR GEORGE (If we may be permitted to address you in this manner):

Did you ever sit on the bank of a lake and fish all the forenoon and the most of the afternoon and not get a bite, then all of a sudden a five-pound bass would come along, grab your hook, and you would yank him out and take him home to feed a hungry family? You did, eh? Well, so have we, and do you remember how the mosquitoes would flock around us for their noonday meal? And then when that bass grabbed your hook what a sense of joy and satisfaction it gave you? Do you remember that, George? Well, that was just the feeling we had last night when we saw you playing in "Desirable" with Jean Muir and Verree Teasdale.

Say, George, we have sat through many a show when the mosquitoes gathered around us by the millions (and the whelps were hungry, too) and we have seen the society swells take young girls to their apartment and dismiss the butler and lock the door and then they would have a wrestlin' match on the sofa, to the utter disgust of those who had any regard for decency, but to the delight, no doubt, of the director and the young and dizzy minded.

But, George, you didn't do this, no sir, and right there was where that bass grabbed our hook. You were in love with an innocent girl and you played the part of a gentleman and you protected her, just as you ought to have done. Probably some wanted to see another wrestling match, but you and the Legion of Decency said no, and say, George, if you will continue to say "no" and continue to play in decent roles, as you did in this one, it won't be long until the public will be calling for you as they are now calling for Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers, Harold Lloyd, Louise Fazenda, Irene Rich, Chic Sale and a number of others.

And do you know why they are calling for these people, George? Well, it is because there are never any "mosquitoes" around the theatre when they play, and they always take a bass home with them, and say George, if it is the custom for Hollywood to fight mosquitoes don't you ever have a wrestling match on the screen.

Jean Muir was the girl, and she was a most delightful performer, too; not only that, but she was the daughter of her mother, and her mother was pretty hardboiled, too.

George, they say that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," whatever that means, and we will suggest that the next time you take a bath you be sure to wash both feet and back of yours ears, and the next time we come out there we will go down to Santa Monica and get us a boat and we will go out and catch some sea bass. How's that, old timer?

The teacher told the class that each of them should write a verse of poetry to be read at the school exhibition at the close of the school, so Willie wrote:

*I once knew a girl named Nellie
Who had freckles all over her nose,
She ate some green apple jelly
And got a bad pain in her head
And that's all I know about Nellie.*

He read it to the teacher and she said, "Why, Willie, it doesn't rhyme," and Willie said, "Of course it don't but you wouldn't want it to, wouldja?"

That Timber Belt

We heard a fellow say the other day that the past season had been so hot and dry that his garden had all burned up and he didn't even raise a radish, but that next spring he was going to plant a row of trees around his garden so it wouldn't dry out. This fellow is a strong advocate of that "Timber Belt" idea to bring rain. He also believes that the earth is flat and that the moon is made of green cheese. [Sh-h-h, Jaysee. Read the third column of this page.—Ed.]

A girl stopped us on the street yesterday and said, "Say, Colonel, what would you say I ought to do if my boy friend kisses another girl?" And we replied, "Well, you better go home and turn on the radio and listen to Percy de Pyster, the crooner, sobbing 'Your Kisses Bring Heaven to Me,' then after that take a big dose of salts and you will be all right."

But as Andy Gump said to Min: And then there's another thing.

Didja know that trees won't grow out in western North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas, except along the streams, unless they are watered every fifteen minutes? Well, they won't. That's why it is so dry out there, because they don't have "trees to bring rain." [We warned you, Jaysee!—Ed.]

We got a letter from Andy Anderson up at Detroit Lakes, Minn., asking us to come up there and go fishing with him. He says that the bass are so hungry that they will jump right into the boat and grab a "Wilson Wabblers" before he can light his pipe. We'd like to go, but Walt Bradley, our son-in-law, has booked a lot of mighty fine shows for his Moon theatre and that's that, although we are soon to start for Oklahoma and Texas for the fall and winter, so that's the way it goes. Darn the luck, anyway.

COLONEL J. C. JENKINS
The HERALD'S Vagabond Colyumnist

THE PROFESSOR TO THE COLONEL:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

Colonel Jenkins started this battle of words in the August 18, '34, issue of the HERALD. He made some rather wild statements, to wit: "Somebody has had another pipe dream"; "Trees don't give moisture"; "Trees don't produce rain," etc. I countered with what I thought was convincing statements substantiated by good authority. He is apparently unconvinced that I am correct and, like most arguments, neither am I convinced that he is right. I'm most happy to cross mental broadswords with him and, even though he claims to have a "halter on that horse," please advise him that my little goat is still grazing peacefully in the south forty.

I admitted in my last letter that there will be planting failures; that it takes time to grow a tree; that it was probably poor policy to drain the lakes of western Nebraska, and I'll admit further that this shelter belt will not make the Dakotas and Nebraska an inland lake. (This in no way subtracts from my statement that "trees do give off moisture"; that "a 30-foot forest should increase local rainfall one or two per cent," etc.) I said if it can increase it two inches, it might make the difference between agricultural success and failure. But there are other factors, such as cutting down of wind velocity, better distribution of the snow, and greater absorption by the soil of snow and rain water, that make the shelterbelt worth the trial.

The "Colonel" asks the "Professor" a question and I'll grant that we on the Pacific Coast get our rain in the winter. I'll also concede Iowa and Nebraska get some rain in the summer. But, J. C., let me ask one? If the following statement you make is true, "The reason why we have more rain in the summer than in the winter is because there is more heat in the summer to evaporate the water than in the winter," then why do we have most of our rain on the Coast in the winter? Give me a good answer to that one and I'll ship my goat by express collect!

Before you answer this, just go out to Halsey, Neb., and ask the Forest Supervision to show you the 25,000 acres of young trees that are growing and growing well in your native sand hills. They have never been watered or cultivated. That's the proof of the pudding that trees can be made to grow there. The Supervisor will be happy to show you around. I've been there and it's a revelation. He gave me a cross-section of one of his thinned trees. It was almost six inches across and it grew that in 16 years.

Don't let your horse run out this winter. Tie him in the shelter of the trees and he will consume less corn to keep him fat.—T. J. STARKER, Professor of Forestry, Oregon State College, Corvallis, Ore.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—As every exhibitor knows, this is the best of last season's pictures. We played it late, and I'm glad we did. Played October 5-6.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Ann Sothorn, Edmund Lowe, Gregory Ratoff, Miriam Jordan, Tala Birell—Very good entertainment. Audience reaction good. Business above normal. Played September 21-22.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur—While there really was no star in this picture, and Miss Arthur only received top billing as a featured player, her acting was of the stellar variety and she deserves that rank. She and Donald Cook, after a hasty college courtship, were married. Now, Donald was completely sold on his own parents, as any son should be within certain limits. Unfortunately these "certain limits" do not always include the newly wed wife, who has ideas of her own, about a home of her own. (Most of them do, you know.) Shortly after a son was born, the wife and mother insisted that her wishes in the matter be given more consideration. The husband and father (Cook) being a hard headed and unreasonable cuss, charged his wife with possessing the shortcomings that were not hers at all, but his'n. Upshot being a separation of the young couple, the wife leaving her son with the father and grandparents, because he could be given advantages that she saw no way of providing for him. Twenty years go by in a flash, as they have a way of doing in reel life but not real life. We next see her as a scrub woman at the college her husband attended, at the time of her marriage. Eventually, her son comes to that same college and, when she learns who he is, she takes a hand in directing his destiny from then on. The sacrifices she makes and the battle she wages to make her son's college career a successful one, is the best piece of acting I have ever seen Jean Arthur do. That's my story (I mean her story) and I'll stick to it. Running time, 8 reels. Played October 24.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook—Good program picture. Character acting of Jean Arthur was wonderful. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—Well done drama that was weak at the B. O. Played October 11-13.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

First National

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Story of a lady of easy virtue who finally sees the light. We previewed this, then cut off the whole last reel; it makes a better picture. Weak story; just another picture. Too bad they can't give Kay better vehicles, she can act if given the opportunity. Not for children and maybe not for adults.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

MASSACRE: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak—Story dealing with poor treatment of Indians by those in charge of Indian reservations. Fine story, and Barthelmess and Dvorak play their parts very well. Clean. Should please.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess—Played on double bill. My patrons liked it and it held the interest well. Better than I expected. Played Oct. 15-16.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

REGISTERED NURSE: Bebe Daniels, Lyle Talbot—Better than most of the hospital stories. Suspenseful drama with more comedy than there is in most of this type of story. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—If you are not using Shirley Temple's pictures you are cheating your patrons as well as your pocketbook. Spend some money to get them in the first time and little Shirley will take care of them from then on. She is a big bet and if you fail to do business it's your fault. Hope she doesn't get "spoiled." Running time, 68 minutes.

What the Picture Did For Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Played Sept. 10-11.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes—Possibly this cannot be classed as a great picture, but the music lovers particularly will call it great. Several said it was the best they have ever seen. In any case, it will please as near 100 per cent as any picture ever has. Played October 23-24.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes—Lavish from the opening to the close. It has three musical numbers most cleverly presented, but, it is just a little long, although it holds the interest throughout. It pleased very well, but got no business. Played October 20-21-22.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

CARAVAN: Loretta Young, Charles Boyer—Well worth boosting as a clean and entertaining picture. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 14-16.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—This is a very good picture; as a matter of fact the best Harold Lloyd ever made. It is straight comedy, with plenty of thrill, romance, drama and comedy. It is entirely different from any of his previous pictures. The dramatic finish is the hit of the entire picture. The excellent supporting cast perform splendidly. Played two days to fair business, but above average for Lloyd pictures. Running time, 100 minutes. Played October 22-23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—Excellent. The best of the Chan series to date. Many favorable comments. Played October 9-10.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

CHARLEY CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—The first "Charlie Chan" feature to make any money in this town. Patronage was good and everyone seemed pleased. The story unfolded in a manner that held the closest attention of the audience. Photography and recording were of the high class that one has learned to expect from Fox. Running time, 77 minutes. Played October 25-26-27.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

DUDE RANGER: George O'Brien—Zane Grey western of familiar pattern. Well received by average attendance. Played October 4-6.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Just another western. Not much change in story from others that we have had and so many of them cut over the same pattern. We find that the westerns are not drawing normal business any more. I know that the producers claim that it is only the small towns that demand westerns and that they cannot spend the money on them. Maybe if they did and moved some of these drawing room pictures out of their programs and put some money into westerns they might be surprised what they would do. I recall "Light of the Western Stars," "Arizona Kid," "Cisco Kid," "Shooting of Dan McGrew," and all I saw in a first run house. I would like to see some producer send up a trial balloon on a couple of bang-up outdoor stories. The run of the mill westerns are not getting the money. But I think that the public are getting ready for something besides "Kiss and Make Up" and "Ladies Should Listen."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Personally thought it above the average western, but many complaints were passed on it. Irene Hervey grand. Marvelous scenery, clever comedy lines. Played October 24-25.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Good show with plenty of comedy. Running time, 65 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—A good Saturday show for a theatre that runs western pictures. My patrons enjoyed this picture very much. Business average. Running time, seven reels. Played October 20.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien—O'Brien is quite a favorite here and lost none of his popularity in this picture. The Fox Corporation is fast emerging from its obscurity brought about by mediocre productions of the last few years, to a place in the Sun reserved for those who both promise and produce. They may yet produce some inferior pictures, but unless I'm very much mistaken, the 10% cancellation privilege should take care of them. Played October 13.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—Not as good and did not draw as well as "David Harum," but Rogers always draws for us and "Handy Andy" will please Rogers' fans and is a good Rogers picture. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Sept. 28-29. A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Another one from Fox that pleased here. Played Oct. 24-25.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLD THAT GIRL: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Just an ordinary picture. Will get by. Played October 20.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Mich. General patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lillian Harvey—I played this late. Those of you who have not played this should play it if you can get a good print. I got a real good print out of the Detroit exchange. It is really two shows in one. The puppet show, which is part of the story, is truly wonderful. I did not know that marionettes could be made on so elaborate a scale. This picture is a real treat for old and young. Do not think that it is a kids' story on account of the puppets. It is also good adult fare. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—A great show. A natural for Rogers and balance of characters equally well cast. However, did not do half the business it deserved. I believe Rogers' radio talks responsible for declining pull of his pictures. He is becoming "commonplace." Played October 18-20.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—About the best Rogers show made and could be shown in any church. Nuff said. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 21-23.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—My patrons almost unanimously concur that this is Rogers' best picture. Drew splendidly in spite of the fact that my two competitors both showed it ahead of my theatre. Fox certainly has the cream of motion picture releases thus far this year. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 28-29-30.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE TIME: Nils Asther, "Pat" Paterson—A dandy show of the type. Producers should learn to leave the word "love" out of titles as patrons interpret it as another bunch of mush. If you can impress upon music lovers that this is Franz Schubert's life and work during his early career, and have music clubs and the schools plug it, you are bound to enjoy the appreciation they will express. It is as clean as a whistle. Played October 24-25.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lillian Harvey, Lew Ayres—Story of a housewife who becomes a lady. A light musical comedy with plenty of laughs. Not a big picture by any means, but should pass your audience.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crosman, Marian Nixon, Norman Foster—Story of a selfish mother who sees the error of her ways after visiting her son's grave overseas. Fine story but a bit overdrawn. Henrietta Crosman a good actress, but she overacts. With May Robson in the role, this picture would have been one of the year's best. It is not a special because it is too drawn-out and too stagy. An average picture that will please. Clean.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—One of the best comedies we have had for months. Just perfect for small towns. I won't ask for any better one than this. Played October 13.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees—Played on double bill and was pleasantly surprised with this one. Better than I expected and my patrons liked it, but business was just average. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Oct. 15-16.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: All Star Musical—An excellent musical with little Shirley Temple as the outstanding star. Good music, good acting and pleased all who came. Played a little too late for the attendance it deserved. Running time, 80 minutes. Played October 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

MGM

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone, May Robson, Winnie Lightner, Fred Astaire, Ted Healy—Story of the rise of a chorus girl. Good acting. Good story. Plenty of laughs and just enough pathos to make it interesting. Fine dancing by Crawford in this. Pleased here. Better story than most musicals, though not as spectacular.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—Good program picture. Baseball story with several good numbers. Nat Pendleton and Ted Healy furnish the comedy relief. It's OK. Did average business here. Running time, 74 minutes. Played October 24.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Washington. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow—Entertaining for small towns but silly in spots and far-fetched. Much better than "Bombshell." Harlow does not draw as well as she used for us. Would not consider this picture offensive. Played Oct. 17-18.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Lewis Stone, Patsy Kelly—Excellent picture, business slightly better than average. Wasn't the "special" it was rated to be.—C. J. Hurley, Jr., Manager, New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow—Could not get an early date on this picture so played it on a double bill. An interesting story, well acted and was especially pleasing to the young folks. The patronage was good. Running time, 73 minutes. Played October 25-26-27.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow—A lot has been written as to what the Decency drive would do to the Jean Harlow pictures. Judging by this, the results are all to the good. It is packed with real entertainment and you don't have to hide and blush with embarrassment when respectable people leave the theatre. Patsy Kelly should be given equal credit with Jean Harlow. Without Patsy it would not be nearly as good. It seems to me that Patsy Kelly is too good to be wasted on two-reel comedies. With parts properly written for her she can make a good picture great and a poor picture passable. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Marion Davies, Bing Crosby, Fifi D'Orsay, Stuart Erwin, Ned Sparks, Patsy Kelly—Story of a girl who would be an actress and finally succeeds. Lots of music, plenty of laughs and some fine ensembles. Clean picture. Should please any audience.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

HFR SWEETHEART, CHRISTOPHER BEAN: Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack, Beulah Bondi—A kindly old doctor almost turns hypocrite when an opportunity of securing wealth faces him. Dressler as the house maid turns out one of the finest bits of acting of her career. A splendid picture containing drama, excitement, romance and laughs. It will please any audience. Clean picture.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Clark Gable—We capitalized on the Dillinger killing and we're telling you they enjoyed every minute of the 95. Several came back the second night and it has to be good in order for patrons to do that. Metro is delivering some of the finest motion pictures this year that it has been our privilege to see. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Oct. 19-20.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—A very fine picture, recording good and 100 per cent entertainment. However, I can't see where Metro should class this as a special. I could have done more business on a western. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Oct. 5-6.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Rugles—Just a program picture with no draw at box office. The runaway railroad car furnishes some excitement to an otherwise uninteresting picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Oct. 8-9.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Rugles, Una Merkel—A fast moving mystery story that pleased my patrons. Mystery, comedy and tragedy hold the interest to the last reel. Beautiful scenery and a spectacular rescue from the runaway car is the highlight. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 17-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X, THE: Robert Montgomery, Elizabeth Allan—A good mystery picture that will more than satisfy patrons who like this story. Played October 13.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

OPERATOR THIRTEEN: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—A good picture of Civil War days. Our patrons have liked Miss Davies ever since they saw "Peg o' My Heart." This picture will stand advertising and will do better than average business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Sept. 5-6.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Myrna Loy, Max Baer, Primo Canera, Jack Dempsey, Walter Huston, Otto Kruger—Story of the rise of a prizefighter. Fine story. Splendid acting. Good ensemble numbers. Baer's acting will prove a very agreeable surprise. And Myrna Loy as leading lady is superb. Fight scenes are splendid, but don't let the trailer confuse your audience into believing this to be the Baer-Canera championship fight picture; the trailer is misleading. This is a very fine picture.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

SHOULD LADIES BEHAVE?: Alice Brady, Lionel Barrymore, Conway Tearle—The laughable tale of a would-be-misunderstood wife. Alice Brady steals the picture from Barrymore—and that's somethin'. Plenty of good laughs in this. Clean. Pleased here.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—Story of a couple of married men who try to outwit their wives and attend a convention. Married folks especially will enjoy this. A bit draggy in spots, but on the whole rather funny. Drew quite a number of laughs.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—This picture did not help Myrna Loy, whom our patrons had begun to like. A complicated affair. A poor title and poor at box office. Running time, 90 minutes. Played October 1-2.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—Brent—I agree with the exhibitors who said too much kissing in this picture. I did not do any business, but I thought it was a little better than a program picture. Running time, nine reels. Played October 24-25.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: J. Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—The warm weather this fall has paralyzed the show business as we're in a mining town and it doesn't matter what we run, we can't get them out. What few saw Tarzan ate it up. It's a swell show from every standpoint. One boy said he wished we would have Tarzan every week. Running time, 116 minutes. Played October 12-13.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—One of the best shows of the year. William Powell's best show. Holds the interest to the last reel. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 91 minutes. Played October 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Just about the nicest picture we've run this year. This boy Powell is the berries and Metro couldn't have teamed up a better bet than Myrna Loy with him. She's a honey. Running time, 91 minutes. Played October 17-18.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—If I would write what I think of this picture MGM would sue me. To me it was 110 minutes of battle, murder and sudden death. Wonderful acting by the entire cast, well produced and with some fine shots of ships and the sea. Comments ranged from "wonderful" to "rotten." Kiddies and young folks liked it and I think it pleased about 90 per cent of the adult patronage. That is what my patrons thought of it. I must be a low brow and a poor judge of pictures, for I thought it was the worst picture I ever exhibited. Why blacklist gangster pictures and let this one get by? Long John Silver makes Dillinger and Pretty Boy Floyd look like pikers. This is no doubt a wonderful picture because the critics say it is, but if I never see another one like it it will be 27 years too soon. I am still dreaming of carving knives and sharks. Running time, 110 minutes. Played October 26-27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Monogram

DIAMOND TRAIL, THE: Rex Bell—A good western. Good print and good recording. Running time, six reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI, THE: Mary Carlisle, Buster Crabbe—Fair picture. Bad print. I played it too old.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—After showing this film, it strikes us that Mae West is like the State Fair. When you've seen her once, you've seen her all time. And it looks like the public is beginning to feel that way.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

ELMER AND ELSIE: George Bancroft, Frances Fuller—I can't remember when I have had a worse one than this one is. It is bad from start to finish. It all revolves around Elmer and Elsie and it is Elmer this and Elsie that until it was painful to hear it. Never have I seen lack of brains in both the acting and the directing. They ought to pay the exhibitor to run it. Phooey with such a picture and I know that my audience would say likewise. Anyway, half of them walked out on it and I would have gone, too, if I could have left the box office. One word says it—terrible.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HELL AND HIGH WATER: Richard Arlen—Paramount, like all other producers, occasionally makes a mediocre picture, but I do not recall one that featured Arlen which failed to please. Jack has not outworn his welcome on the screen yet, while many who entered films when he did or even later, have fallen like snowflakes in a winter storm. Richard may never reach the heights, but I'm quite willing to wager a carload of thousand dollar bills, he'll never reach the depths. Personally I should prefer the happy medium. He has a wife, baby, lots of friends and seems to have a steady job. Could one ask for more? The answer is obvious or shall we say no? Incidentally, I might add, this was a fine little picture. Not "was," but is. A little old, but so am I. Played October 23.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin, Edward Everett Horton—The resistance that you will have on this one is the title. It is hard to get the small town audience to go for one that is as mushy as this one would indicate. We did our best in the advertising to overcome this jump of title, but it was useless. They did not come and that tells the story of what a title will do to militate against a fair picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN: Cary Grant, Frances Drake, Edward Everett Horton—A Paris locale, three women and two men, a very thin story. Horton helps save the picture and this lady Frances Drake has plenty on the ball given a better vehicle. She has the voice, swell looking and apparently is an actress. I miss my bet if she is not a star to be heard from later in a better role. Good in what she had to do with. In the way of story the picture is not there for a small town.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN: Cary Grant, Frances Dee—This is another program picture with some comedy and some very pretty sets. Played it one day to about average Friday business. Running time, seven reels. Played October 19.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN: Cary Grant, Frances Drake—Light, good entertainment, no bad moments. Business normal. Patrons all well pleased and many of them said they would see it again. Played September 30, October 1.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—I thought this would draw and it sure did. Brought in both low and high brow. Lay stress to songs to get the high brows and you'll do extra business. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 61 minutes. Played October 15-16.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID, THE: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy—Just a program picture. It did not do any business for me. I should have played it one day only. Running time, seven reels. Played October 15-16.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID: Helen Mack, Lee Tracy—Tracy is not his old self, at least not in this picture. Helen Mack is excellent in most any picture, to my patrons. This, in my estimation, is just another picture and is not a very large drawing card. Played October 14-15.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—Excellent picture and Shirley Temple draws them in. Picked this up late and did good business. Her pictures cannot be classed as "kid pictures" and I think that is one reason they appeal to all classes. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 10-11.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Adolphe Menjou, Dorothy Dell, Shirley Temple—Shirley Temple is the whole show and she carried her part to a finish. But why in the world do they have to put her in stories of this type? Played October 2.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields—A good picture and it pleased. Entire cast good. Children extra good. If you have it booked double your advertising and do a little extra work and you will make some money with the picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played October 22-23.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House Theatre, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple—Good picture, but not as good as "Little Miss Marker." Did a good Saturday night business and Sunday night the power lines were down so we had a dark house. Oh, well, if it isn't one thing it's another. Played October 21.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard—Excellent draw account fame of Shirley Temple. Story none too good. Played September 16-17.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich—A complete flop. I did not have a single person to tell me they liked this picture. Some wanted their money back. Personally, I thought it was a fair picture. Guess I was wrong. Running time, 11 reels. Played October 17-18.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, John Lodge—Business below expectations. This picture is an excellent production if your audience likes grandeur in settings and acting; my audience does not care for it, though we had a few favorable comments. The direction is excellent. Played October 7-8.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE LOVES ME NOT: Bing Crosby—Best Crosby picture so far. Everyone liked it and it drew a good attendance. Running time, 84 minutes. Played October 14.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie—Good program picture. Average business. Played October 17.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Oakie, Jack Haley—Old but still good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Burns and Allen, W. C. Fields—The few who came to see it were pleased. Title had no drawing power. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 16.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Ohio. General patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sydney—A nice little picture with nice little leading lady. At times Sylvia looks positively pretty. At other times she does not. But at all times she looks the perfect artist she is. When she smiles, her whole face lights up and you smile with her, although you may be losing money on the picture. This might have been entitled "Smiling Thru" as the patrons smiled 100 per cent while exiting, while I was invited to step over to the corner and have a "Smile" and these "Smiles" being served in a glass without cost to me, caused me to smile. If there was one who did not like this picture, he or she was discreetly silent. Did not lose on this one, but would still sing its praises if I did lose. Running time, 8 reels. Played October 21-22.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott—Not as good as we expected. Just an average western that will get by on weekends. Running time, 59 minutes. Played September 7-8.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—A real good western picture made on a big scale. Some good singing. Scenery was very good. Did about average business and pleased. Running time, seven reels. Played October 27.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—One mention of Zane Grey in my advertising and I am sure of a packed house. This picture is quite noisy, though the song "Wagon Wheels" is very excellently used. This is the best western I've had for some time. Story and action good. Played October 19-20.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard—Very good musical. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack—I did not see this picture, but was told it was good.

FROM LOUISIANA AND OKLAHOMA

From Far West and Far South come two new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. They are:

C. J. Hubley, Jr., New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La.

Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla.

Read their reports in this issue.

Running time, seven reels. Played October 26.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack—Fair story. Young David Holt looks promising. Tracy was below par. Business normal. Played September 23-24.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—Kept audience laughing all the time. Very good comedy. Running time, 61 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: Irene Dunne, John Boles—A very fine picture. One that will create talk. But isn't the public tired of this Back Street stuff?—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler & Woolsey—Better than their worst, but not as good as their best. This team does not mean much for us any more. Some fairly good comedy, but the costume stuff drives our patrons away. Running time, 72 minutes. Played October 12-13.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Very good comedy. Wheeler and Woolsey always were good. Running time, 71 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This picture was not up to the standard of the Wheeler and Woolsey productions, being too exaggerated. I consider it an ordinary offering only. Played October 20.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, Ned Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—One of the most miserable botch jobs of production I have ever seen. Given all kinds of material to work with, stars, story, music and money, the net result is a total loss. Apparently no one in the cast or in the studio cared a tinker's dam what became of the picture, and what happened is history. It is easy to sell, however, and will get them past the gate for one day, maybe two. With me, it was one day, and then the cyclone struck. I'm lucky I have my shirt left. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Oct. 14-16.—A. West Johnson, Heilig Theatre, Eugene, Ore. University and general patronage.

FOUNTAIN, THE: Ann Harding, Brian Aherne, Paul Lukas—Very good, but does not have universal appeal. A little draggy.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

FOUNTAIN, THE: Ann Harding, Brian Aherne, Paul Lukas—This is very poor entertainment so far as the average patron is concerned. It is a typical RKO picture, being 100 per cent talking and the action missing. Thanks to RKO for giving Miss Harding one picture where the "going to have a baby" scene is missing. In all of her past pictures, that was the outstanding scene and I personally wish this would be omitted in all stories. Business fair. Running time, 84 minutes. Played October 20.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—My patrons like Dix and this picture went over well, although business was below normal. Played October 2-4.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston—Pretty good Friday-Saturday picture. Little too much horse to make No. 1 entertainment. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—A good picture. Old but worth playing. No business for me, however. Running time, eight reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Very good. Miriam Hopkins great.—Jake Jones, Ritz Theatre, Shawnee, Okla. General patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—This is one of the better of the summer's pictures. Business normal. Played October 12-13.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Norman Foster, William Gargan, Marian Nixon—Wild and of little entertainment value. My patrons like Velez but not Durante. Business below average. Played September 28-29.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

THIS MAN IS MINE: Irene Dunne, Ralph Bellamy—Action slow at beginning, as this portion of the picture was all dialogue. But toward the end both the actors and the acting was lively and the picture ended very satisfactorily. Just a fair production. Played October 29.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Good comedy featuring Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville that pleased my family night patrons. A lot of laughs and that is what they want. Running time, 68 minutes. Played October 24-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Rather simple story. Pitts is getting better, but not Summerville. No business. Played September 18-20.—Art Warner, Colonial Theatre, Grandview, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper, Fay Wray—Story of the rise, fall and rise again of a colorful Bowery character. Good plot. Good acting by entire cast. Lots of laughs, plenty of tense drama. Not clean enough for a Sunday school, but still, not too smutty. Presents facts as they were in the old days. Would not recommend it for kids, but adults will eat it up.—Don Adler, Empress Circuits, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK: Ronald Colman—Just fair and not much draw for us. Played it on Friday and Saturday to below average business. Colman not well known here. First time we have used United Artists pictures and am afraid they are a little too sophisticated for small towns. Running time, 68 minutes. Played September 10-11.—A. C. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss—In my opinion, one of the best pictures played here this summer. Evidently my patrons thought otherwise, for it grossed the lowest Saturday and Sunday for three months. Had extra music and other good shorts with it to make it a good program. I rise up in needing to ask why an exhibitor should try to run the so-called better class of picture when they don't even pay expenses. Played October 27-28.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MOULIN ROUGE: Constance Bennett—Good musical comedy, but did not draw at the box-office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY VIII, THE: Charles Laughton, Robert Donat, Binnie Barnes, Elsa Lanchester, Merle Oberon—Life story of Henry VIII. Costume play. Acting by Laughton is superb, but on the whole this picture failed to click; lacks definite climax, which American audiences demand. An historical epic which people should see, though it wouldn't do them any great harm if they missed it. Not a special.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

WHOOPEE: Eddie Cantor—Very good musical comedy that drew only fair. Eddie Cantor is slipping. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

BE MINE TONIGHT: Jan Kiepura, Magda Schneider—Story of mistaken identities. Good plot, but acting is not up to American standard. However, singing by the leading man makes up for any other defects the picture may possess. Even though your audiences may not like "high class" music, I feel certain they will enjoy the singing, especially that of the last reel or two. Clean.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—A laffable tale of mistaken identities. Lukas should not have shaved his moustache off—he looks too different. However, the picture should please. Has some clever lines and interesting situations. Sophisticated, laffable, but not a picture for the children.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

CROSBY CASE, THE: Wynne Gibson—Just a program picture with no box office appeal. Played September 26-27.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—Lively all the way through. Not a dull minute in the film. Good enough for anyone and will please almost anywhere. Good in all respects and will go over anywhere. Played October 6.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—This is entertainment that pleases. Radio great plus plenty of comedy, good music and some thrills make it a dandy show. Some patrons came in three times; it pleased them so well. A good plan is to read Liberty magazine reviews and take them in reverse. They must be paid for knocking good shows. We have too many musical shows, but they are better than the hot ones at that. This one is as clean as they make them. Running time, 71 minutes. Played October 28-29.—H. J. Lonaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

KING FOR A NIGHT: Chester Morris, Helen Twelvetrees, Alice White—Story of a fighter who after winning championship sacrifices his life on the electric chair so that his sister's name be unstained. Splendid story, splendid acting. Lots of laughs and very dramatic situations. Should please; however, the sad ending is its weak spot. Too bad they didn't change the ending by sentencing him to five years instead of giving him the chair. Just because an author wants to be "different" the producers ruin a fine picture. It pleased here, but the complaint was, "Why the sad ending?"—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

LET'S TALK IT OVER: Chester Morris, Mae Clarke—Good comedy drama that is inclined to be a little rough. However, seemed to give general satisfaction. Played October 16-17.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullivan, Douglass Montgomery—If Uncle Carl and his boy would give more time to making good pictures, exhibitors would be better off. Just one ordinary picture after another has been our experience with Universal and "Little Man" goes in the same classification. No good and Douglass Montgomery plays the part of a silly weakling. Margaret Sullivan is good if she had good pictures. Played September 24-25.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard, Colin Clive—This is a very good picture, but it will not appeal to the masses. It is a dramatic romance and over the heads of the average patrons. It is an English picture and deals with their social customs, views and legal proceedings. It is lacking in action, but from a story by a wellknown author. Due to the foreign atmosphere, we played this one two days to only fair business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played October 25-26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edna May Oliver—I haven't had a real box office picture from Universal this year. This picture belongs to the ordinary class. No stars, no box office. Played Oct. 10-11.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—Pretty good musical comedy. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—Maynard draws well in our community over weekends and this picture did a nice business. Universal westerns are all right and their serials are O. K. Running time, 65 minutes. Played October 5-6.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Elizabeth Young—A very nice program picture of the domestic type. Running time, 87 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

UNCERTAIN LADY: Genevieve Tobin—Would like to say this is a fine picture, but I'm not a good liar. This picture was banned by the Legion of Decency. Sorry I didn't ban it. Methinks exhibitors, whose name is also "Legion," will wish they had listened not so much on moral grounds, but for business reasons. The lady may have been "Uncertain," but the results to me were far from that. In short, it did not please and it did not pay. You may play it and like it. But, as the title indicates, this is "Uncertain." Played October 19.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Very interesting western. Good for Friday-Saturday. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—A little above average business, but the picture was disappointing to our patrons and not nearly as good as "20 Million Sweethearts." Some beautiful scenes, but not much story and people are getting tired out on chorus ensembles marching around and no story. Poor business second night. Played October 3-4.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

DESIRABLE: Jean Muir, George Brent—This pic-

URGES COMMENT ON PUBLIC REACTION

M. R. Harrington, of the Avalon theatre at Clatskanie, Ore., rises to make a plea for fairness to the picture, in reports particularly from smaller centers, by urging comment on audience reaction as well as business done. Harrington points out that special community events—the championship game of the high school, a carnival, impassable roads—may cause heavy damage at the box office though the reaction of those attending may be decidedly favorable.

Writes Mr. Harrington:

"I am sending along some reports for your interesting and very helpful section of THE HERALD. This is my first contribution, but I hope I shall be able to help the cause, by reporting regularly, in the future.

"Have noticed that few exhibitors mention the audience reaction in reporting on pictures. They seem more anxious to mention the business done or not done, as the case might be. I believe this is hardly fair, as in small towns, where drawing power is limited at the best, other activities may cut into the business done on a certain show, yet those who did attend found the picture fine entertainment. I have found this to be the case many times and on a 2- or 3-day run, the first night of which had outside competition, the other nights built up, largely, I believe, because of the fact that those who did attend found the picture was worthwhile and passed along the word to others. Such advertising beats all the lobby displays and other picture selling methods you can think up."

ture will get by and the audience seemed to like it. There is nothing new in the story—the eternal problem of two women and a man. Jean Muir gave an outstanding performance in this one and she was favorably spoken of by a lot of our patrons. It could have easily fallen into the mediocre class, but it had good direction and the story, while not new, as I have said above, moved right along.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charlie Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—This is a very good picture of the comedy type that should please all classes of patrons. Ruggles at his best in a role that was made for him. This has plenty of action, romance and spicy dialogue. This will make excellent entertainment for the whole family and please each one. The trailer will sell the show for you. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played October 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—In which the producers produced entertainment instead of a headache. Those who came to be entertained, were so-so, while I got mine. Rochelle Hudson and Patricia Ellis didn't hurt the picture at all. I predict that 90 per cent of those who are fortunate enough to see this picture will advise their friends not to miss it, and that's praise enough. Played October 17.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—You'll like this and so will your patrons. Full of fun. Plenty of action. Some good scenes of the Navy Fleet, the Macon, etc. Cagney and O'Brien both good and so is Alice Faye. Did some good business and this is a good small town draw. Step on it. It will pay. Played Sept. 19-20.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HI, NELLIE: Paul Muni, Glenda Farrell, Ned Sparks—Very fine newspaper story. Editor demoted to "Advice to Lovelorn" column, hence his title, "Hi Nellie." Plenty of laughs, good plot, good acting. Clean. Plenty of action. Should please.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

HOUSE ON 56TH STREET, THE: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez, Gene Raymond—Story of a girl who by force of circumstances leads a shady life. Splendid story, splendid acting, though I wouldn't recommend it for the children. Play this before you play "Mandalay." It has the same two stars as "Mandalay," but as a picture is 100 per cent better.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

HOUSEWIFE: George Brent, Bette Davis—Good picture that pleased my patrons. Ann Dvorak gives a fine performance. Wish Warner Bros. would give her more and better roles. Bette Davis in her usual role of vamp is good. Running time, 69 minutes. Played October 13-14.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

JIMMY, THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Cagney goes into the "Lost Heirs" business. This is a noisy thing, not much plot, not much chance for any of them to do any real acting. A few laughs here and there. A weak Cagney picture. Did not please—and no wonder it didn't.—Don Adler, Empress Circuit, Fairbanks, Alaska. General patronage.

Short Features Celebrity

JACK AND THE BEANSTALK: Fair. Coloring was poor. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

AW, NURSE: Scrappy Cartoon—Good cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ELMER STEPS OUT: Walter Catlett—Pretty good comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KATNIPS OF 1940: Krazy Kat Cartoon—A very good cartoon. Best in a long while. Running time, 17 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MICKEY'S MEDICINE MAN: Mickey McGuire Comedy—Pretty good two-reeler, but not as good as previous ones. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S EXPEDITION: Scrappy Cartoon—Good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S RELAY RACE: Scrappy cartoon—Good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SCRAPPY'S TOY SHOP: Scrappy Cartoon—Hardly up to previous releases of this series. Just fair. Running time, seven minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

TEN BABY FINGERS: Sidney & Murray—Very good with a baby furnishing the interest and Sidney and Murray the fun. It made our audience laugh, which is what we want.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WOMAN HATERS: Musical—Slapstick at its "slappest." Only fair. Running time, two reels.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

GOING SPANISH: Musical Comedies—Another two-reel paid for and gone. Punk. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

Educational

GOLD GHOST, THE: Star Comedy Specials—I wish a half a dozen other Educational comedies were a third as good as this one. Oh, well! Running time, 21 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

IRISH SWEEPSTAKES: Terry-Toons—This is an extra good and funny cartoon. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

I SURRENDER, DEAR (REISSUE): Bing Crosby—This reissue okay. Running time, two reels.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY: Will Mahoney—Excellent comedy. Pleased everyone. Running time, two reels.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

WHY MULES LEAVE HOME: Terry-Toons—A cartoon with an original theme that is very good. Running time, seven minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

Fox

COAST OF CATALONIA: Magic Carpet Series—Beautiful photography and interesting narrative make this a worthwhile subject. Running time, 10 minutes.—Hollis Drew, Temple Theatre, East Jordan, Mich. General patronage.

FOX MOVIE TONE NEWS: Very good with Lowell Thomas announcing.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOX MOVIE TONE NEWS: The new Fox News is everything they told us it would be and more. Patrons go out of their way to tell me that it is positively the best news they have ever seen. In my 16 years in the picture show business I have never run as good a news. And it gets better with every issue.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

AFRICA, LAND OF CONTRAST: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This is the best educational reel we have had on our screen for many months. It is easily the best of this series.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

AFRICA, LAND OF CONTRASTS: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Very good. My patrons seem to enjoy every one of these subjects. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

BEAUTY AND THE BUS: Todd-Kelly—Good. Plenty of action and laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

BEDTIME WORRIES: Our Gang—Good. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

EGYPT, KINGDOM OF THE NILE: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—This is a good one-reeler showing many scenes of interest in Egypt. It is also very educational and good entertainment, but my patrons seem to like comedies much better. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FINE FEATHERS: Oddities—One of the best short subjects I ever exhibited. Instructive and entertaining talk on birds in beautiful color. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN OF POLISH: Musical Revue—This one is okay. The two nuts in this one are okay and went over with a bang.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GOING BYE-BYE: Laurel & Hardy—Not much to this comedy. Very few laughs. If this pair don't get busy and make some funny comedies, they won't last much longer. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES NO. 6: Pete Smith—Swell, liked by young and old. Running time, seven minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HI, NEIGHBOR: Our Gang—This is the best Our Gang comedy in many months and I certainly hope there will be many more to come. This pleased all of my patrons, both young and old. Plenty of laughs and excellent entertainment for all. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JUNGLE JITTERS: Willie Whopper—This is a very poor cartoon. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

NIP-UPS: Oddities Series—This is a very interesting and entertaining one-reeler presenting some world famous acrobatic stunts, by the world's most famous acrobats. The remarks by Pete Smith are very good and add much to the entertainment. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SPEAKING OF RELATIONS: Irvin S. Cobb—Some more good film wasted. The salesman gave me a big song and dance about how good Cobb was and charged a fancy price, but so far he is just a pain in the neck as a movie comedian. Running time, 19 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

STRATOS-FEAR: Willie Whopper—Fair. Running time, nine minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

TULIP TIME: An interesting and exceptionally pretty short. Patrons more than pleased. Spot it best nights. Color beautiful. Running time, eight minutes.—Clarke Gurley, Ritz Theatre, Bainbridge, Ga. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE JAZZ?: Musical Revues—One of the best musicals we have had in some time. Some good music and singing. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

WILLIE WHOPPER: Just ordinary cartoons which our patrons are tiring of.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

ALL ON DECK: Headliner—Good musical. Running time, nine minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S RISE TO FAME: Betty Boop—One of the poorest Betty Boop cartoons that I have ever used. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

DREAM WALKING, A: Popeye, the Sailor—This is a good thrilling cartoon. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

LAZYBONES: Screen Songs—Fine. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE REVUE: Headliner—Dandy musical. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SCREEN SONGS: These are good shorts and our patrons like them.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SOCIETY NOTES: Headliners—No good. The members of the orchestra spoiled this subject by trying to be funny. They could have made a good musical act. I wonder if they got paid for this? Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

STATION T. O. T.: Headliner—A dandy one-reel subject. Very entertaining. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STRONG TO THE FINCH: Popeye, the Sailor—These Popeye cartoons are the best on the market. This one especially good. Running time, eight minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Cedarville Theatre, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

RKO

AIR TONIC: Ted FioRito and his Orchestra—This is a fine two-reel comedy, featuring Ted FioRito and his orchestra. Good music, good dancing and good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NO MORE WEST: Bert Lahr—This is a good comedy of the slapstick variety. It will keep your patrons laughing from start to finish. A burlesque of the West and will please the average theatre-goer. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PASTRYTOWN WEDDING: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—A very clever and interesting cartoon beautifully colored and splendidly recorded.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town patronage.

RASSLIN' MATCH, THE: Amos 'n' Andy—An Amos 'n' Andy cartoon that seemed to please. Running time, 11 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

UNDIE WORLD, THE: Blonde and Red Head Series—A fair two-reel comedy that got a lot of laughs. Running time, 21 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MICKEY HOUSE: Can't see that these are any better than the old series and they don't get extra business for us.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. General patronage.

SILLY SYMPHONIES: They are not worth what they cost for our town and we believe for most small towns.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. General patronage.

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST: Merrie Melodies Series—A cartoon in color that pleased. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LET'S PLAY POST OFFICE: Broadway Brevities—Some of these Brevities are okay. This is just another one.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MILLS BLUE RHYTHM BAND: Melody Masters—A few laughs, but a lot of dirt.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MOROCCO NIGHTS: Broadway Brevities—Good orchestra, good color and ordinary entertainment.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN YOUR EYES: Broadway Brevities—No better or worse than the other Brevities.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

NOTHING BUT THE TOOTH: Jack Haley—Nothing but the bunk for entertainment. Very few laughs. Were glad this is the last Haley comedy. There will be no more. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SONG OF FAME: Ruth Etting—This is a dandy. The hill billy musical numbers will bring the house down. Ruth Etting okay, but the above mentioned scene was best. Be sure to get this short.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

Serials Mascot

MYSTERY SQUADRON, THE: Bob Steele—This is a very good serial with plenty of action, fighting, thrills, romance and mystery. Only one objection—too much repetition. Why can't the producers get away from that? Maybe they will wake up some day. If you want a good serial—book this one. Twelve episodes. Running time, 20 minutes each.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Universal

PIRATE TREASURE: Richard Talmadge, Lucille Lund—A fair serial that pleased the kiddies. Do not consider it quite so good as some of their other serials, but went over fairly well. Twelve episodes. Running time, two reels each.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—We have run six chapters of this and find it No. 1 entertainment.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

World Wide

TARZAN, THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—This serial is proving a disappointment. It is cheap and prints are terrible. Too much visible faking. Poorest draw of any serial we have used.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

BRING 'EM IN DEAD: Road show consisting of "Dillinger," "Bring 'Em in Dead," "Hot Money" and "Road Thrill." Did more business on this than anything I've ever run, and it pleased the people. Play it if possible. The men who have charge of it are a nice bunch of people.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

*An international association of showmen meeting weekly
in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress*

GOOD MEN DESERVE IT

A leading circuit executive, over the coffee cups, made the interesting statement that the right kind of a manager is responsible for at least 25 per cent of his grosses. In other words, the theatreman who is not capable, conscientious and enterprising can be charged by his omissions with the actual loss of that much in the daily take.

That a good manager at the helm means money in the bank is no sudden revelation, but it is pleasing to know his services are held so highly in computing box office expectancies.

However, if the difference in manpower is of such significance, then by all means the able theatreman is justly entitled to a fair slice of whatever extra profits his efforts bring forth.

HO, AND ALSO HUM

Managers will no doubt be charmed no end to learn the vote-gathering Literary Digest has now joined the ranks with a picture-rating page wherein the new releases are gracefully branded with four or less of the letter "A"—four, evidently being established as the Victoria Cross and Medal of Honor of critical encomium.

In the process of climbing aboard the already overloaded bandwagon, the Digest's advertising manager writes to "Dear Mr. Exhibitor" stating that "readers . . . are now being told what they—and what their children also—may see in the movie houses and find enjoyable."

Now, ain't that sumpin'?

ON GETTING AHEAD

As certain as tomorrow's dawn is the progress of Round Tablers throughout the land. Good times, bad times, operation upheavals, banking ramifications and receivers come and go, but steadily, if slowly, managers who produce move ahead.

From time to time upon this page, we are pleased to record the promotions of various members, and to the roster may now be added Art Ableson, formerly at the World, Omaha, who becomes a partner in the new Roxy, Glasgow, Montana, and Joe Rosenfield who though in the Northwest but a few short months, has been selected to head the advertising and publicity forces of John Hamrick's many theatres.

Art and Joe, we rejoice with you and extend the heartfelt wishes of the entire membership for a most glorious success.

LO, THE POOR MAILMAN!

Distributors of house to house advertising are now faced with formidable competition by the United States Post Office. According to a recent ruling, third class matter merely addressed to "Patron" or "Householder" may be mailed under regular rates and will be delivered on any designated route by the patient mail carrier.

Just how much does the theatre gain by this new mailing slant? Very little, if at all, in our opinion, for the economies offered by the new ruling will undoubtedly open up the floodgates for millions of words from the butcher, baker and candlestick maker—all distinctly to the disadvantage of the theatre program.

To obtain attention in this expected welter of mass verbiage, managers must exercise considerable ingenuity in creating inexpensive mailing pieces that will catch the eye, and their success in this direction will determine the possibilities of the new ruling as concerns theatre advertising.

Jim Cunningham says: "The new order is a challenge to the showman's ingenuity." Well, mebbe 'tis, but it might also be regarded as a challenge to the physical prowess of Uncle Sam's mailmen.

NEWSREEL EXPLOITATION

The application for membership of Francis Wood, Jr. of the New York Embassy Newsreel Theatre, serves again as an emphatic reminder of the merchandising importance of these short subjects. The newsreel has for too long been taken for granted in the average program and although regarded highly by the majority of patrons, only recently has been given a proper break in advertising campaigns. Credit for this currently no doubt is due to the importance of the recent world-rocking happenings and their very thorough coverage by the different newsreel services.

Exploitation of these units presents many box office possibilities and Round Tabler Wood is in a favorable position to put on a lot of selling angles that perhaps can be duplicated or adapted by other showmen who see the obvious advantages of spotlighting these news flashes. The new member is therefore invited to forward frequent reports of his activities which of course will be publicized in these pages.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS! 6-Day Bike Riders

Stop B'way Traffic

Unusual indeed was the featured stunt on "Six Day Bike Rider" at the New York Rialto, where, in cooperation with Arthur L. Mayer, Terry Turner of Quaker Oats, put on a real six-day race in the windows of the theatre building atop the marquee.

Eight professional six-day riders participated in the stunt, performing on bicycles placed on rollers (see photo) attached to large mileage meters showing the distance covered by each team of riders. The plate glass windows were removed, allowing the front wheels of the bicycles to protrude for extra attention.

Tied into the stunt was a guessing contest, prizes of bicycles given to patrons approximating nearest the mileage covered during the week, slips for this purpose being supplied by the theatre doorman. Two teams of four riders each performed at a time in accordance with actual six-day ruling, thus ensuring continuous action for the traffic-stopping throngs at the Rialto corner, one of the city's most congested areas.

In addition, various Broadway celebrities participated in the stunt and on the first night, Maxine Doyle, who appears in the picture, raced against famed professional, Reggie MacNamara, with other names scheduled to appear during the rest of the engagement.

Turner reports successful adaptation of this stunt in other spots, Joe Feldman putting it on recently for the date at the Pittsburgh Stanley, and Sid Blumenstock is credited with an effective bike meet in conjunction with the showing at the Virginia, Atlantic City.

Radio Star Sponsors Buildup "Transatlantic"

The radio popularity of Jack Benny was an important factor in the campaign on "Transatlantic Merry Go Round" for the date at Loew's State, Boston, put over by publicity head Joe Di Pesa, aided by Al Selig, United Artists exploiter of Monroe Greenthal's staff.

The sponsors of the Benny program, being represented in a local food show held at spacious Mechanics Hall, the showmen arranged for a plug on the picture in the sponsors' exhibit setting up a large easel with production stills and theatre dates. Announcement cards were placed in all packages of purchases made at the booth, window streamers distributed to grocery stores and tire covers carried by the food company trucks.

Serialization of picture was carried by one paper and identification star contest placed in another. The press book milk company tieup was also put on wherein circulars and window strips were used by local accounts, and among other helpful ideas was the imprinting of bags of local perfume store's chain.

"Monte Cristo" Street Ballys for Seibel Date

For street bally, Manager E. Seibel, Riviera Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., dressed a man as "Monte Cristo" who distributed special treasure candy in imprinted bags to passersby.

Preview was arranged for members of the Federation of Women's Clubs, Parent Teachers Association and others with special letters going to all school principals stressing educational value. Libraries used displays on bulletin boards and distributed book-marks. A classified ad contest was run for three days and cooperative ads were arranged with department store.

Store also used effective window display contrasting costumes of 1812 and present day. Jewelry and beauty stores carried scenic still of Elissa Landi and action shots from the picture.

Fryer and Morris Stage "Widow" Waltz Contest

A "Merry Widow" waltz contest was put on by Harley Fryer, manager, and Claude Morris, exploiter, at the Fox Theatre, Joplin, Mo., elimination contest taking place on hotel roof and winning couples competing on stage of Fox, opening night of picture. Local jeweler donated loving cup and papers and radio station gave the contest plenty of publicity.

All sheet music houses gave window displays and druggist used window of Max Factor cosmetics with MacDonald stills. Fashion display was arranged with leading department store and local company bannered their trucks with copy.

Plugs Music Angles In "She Loves Me Not"

William Hartnett, Embassy Theatre, Waltham, Mass., week prior to "Loves Me Not" date started plugging various numbers from picture in his overture, advising that tunes were from the coming attraction. Music store used easel head cutout of Crosby and announced date in window display that included song sheets and banners.

Heralds were distributed house to house and placed in parking automobiles.

Herman Promotes Smokes On "Nineties" Campaign

The Lorillard people furnished Herman Bamberger, Paramount Theatre, No. Adams, Mass., with posters and cards for his "Belle of the Nineties" date and supplied a quantity of cigarettes for distribution. Colored cards with picture of Mae West bore copy "When You Come Up You'll Find Old Golds." These were placed in windows throughout town with copy.

Three weeks prior Herman constructed a display with the shadow figure of Mae and the words "coming events cast their shadows before." No other wording appeared and after ten days the regular Westian billing was inserted.

Ties In Classified Page On "Barretts" Plug

On his "Barretts of Wimpole Street" date, Johnny McManus, Loew's Midland Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., tied in with newspaper on a display "Have You Lost a Dog?" ad cut of dog appearing at top of ad and newspaper's copy on rates for "lost" ads followed. Upper right hand column carried theatre copy as follows: "This photo shows how 'Flush' appeared when momentarily lost from Norma Shearer, with whom he plays an important part in, etc., etc."

For "Last Gentleman" Johnny promoted local bank and secured a window display of scene stills and theatre copy. Streamers on grocery windows and radio broadcast were also used.

Armstrongs "Cleopatra" Style Window

Lands Ace London Store on "Cleopatra"

Coverage of distinction was obtained by able John Armstrong, London Paramount Theatres director of advertising on "Cleopatra" at the Carlton Theatre, commendable cooperation being secured from leading stores and the newspapers. The Daily Express among other things carried a four-column illustrated story by stylist on influence of the picture on current modes.

Selfridge's followed this up with an entire window (see photo) on the picture with cut-outs of Colbert as Cleopatra and models of styles inspired by her costumes. Article from paper was conspicuously posted and display bordered with production stills.

Striking was the inner lobby display at the theatre (see photo) wherein the walls and box offices were decorated with panels and figures in the mood of the feature.

Another activity is reported by Armstrong, who forwards a copy of "Sketch," famed English weekly, which carried a page of photos on the wax figures of Marlene Dietrich which John placed in Tussaud's Wax Works some time back, campaign being reported in these pages.

MANY CIRCUIT HEADS ENDORSE COMPETITION

Leading Theatre Executives Urge Managers to Forward Campaigns in Last Months

by A-MIKE VOGEL

To be noted with gratification is the widening of interest and spreading cooperation in the Quigley Awards as this international managers' competition enters into the final two months of the year.

Cooperating from the very beginning, J. R. Vogel and Oscar Doob of Loew Theatres have officially approved the purposes of the Quigley Awards, and in "Loew-Down," weekly ad bulletin, Mr. Doob has again invited all managers to forward campaigns in November and December.

Zone Directors Enthusiastic

Lionel H. Keene, Loew's Southern Representative, is another firm believer in the Quigley project and is urging all managers in his zone to participate. Carter Barron, W. A. Finney and Harry Long are other Loew zone chiefs who are boosting the idea.

E. A. Cuddy and Harry Browning, of M. & P. Theatres, continue to lend valuable support in New England, Mr. Cuddy bringing to the attention of all managers the various "Mentions" earned by showmen in his circuit. Mr. Browning writes as follows: "The boys in the field are beginning to take more of an interest and am sure that there will be a greater response in the future."

Warnerites Harry Kalmine, Marshall Taylor, C. J. Latta, Joe Feldman and Jules Curley are long-time boosters and from E. E. Whitaker, City Manager Lucas and Jenkins Theatres, Atlanta, Ga., comes further assurance that the showmen of this organization are also in line. Harry Shaw, Loew New England chief, is another of the many theatre executives throughout the country who are heartily in favor of participation of their managers in the Quigley project.

Elaborate Entries Unnecessary

Thus it becomes evident that the Awards are established in the opinions of theatremen everywhere and that the winners of the monthly plaques, Firsts and Honorable Mentions are winning valuable recognition from their superiors.

As we go to press, the judges for October are convening and their decision will be made known in the next issue. Many excellent campaigns have been received, their standard of showmanship measuring up to the previously high levels already established.

Again attention is directed to the fact that it is not necessary to lay out entries elaborately or artistically. While this phase is not to be discouraged, nevertheless at all times campaigns are judged purely on merit, and how they are presented means nothing at all in the final selection.

This is emphasized for the information of those showmen who do not have the time or facilities to "pretty up" their entries, and this assurance of full consideration to all entries should clear up any possible misunderstandings.

Preparations are going ahead for the presentation of the Grand Award which, as has been stated, is to be presented at the end of the year for the best campaign selected by the judges from all those entered in the Quigley competitions during 1934. Descriptions of this trophy have been carried in previous issues.

Two months more for the monthly Quigley Award and then the Quigley Grand Award for the best campaign of the year. Better begin to prepare that November entry now.

E. M. Fay's Suggestion Published as Ace Ad

Quite some months ago, when it first appeared as a stage attraction sponsored by Eddie Dowling, "Big Hearted Herbert" favorably impressed itself upon E. M. Fay, prominent New England exhibitor, to the extent that he recommended it as excellent screen fare to Warner Brothers.

Acting upon his suggestion, the brothers obtained the rights to this hit play and in film form it was recently released, one of the premiere engagements rightfully enough scheduled for Mr. Fay's circuit, at the Majestic Theatre, Providence, R. I.

Below is a reproduction of the letter written by Major Albert Warner to Mr. Fay, which was published as a gracious appreciation of this exhibitor's suggestion, at the same time serving as an effective ad.

Sanson Clicks With Lobby And Dance Gag on "Divorcee"

"Gay Divorcee" has been receiving a lot of smart treatment up New England way, most recently reported being Manager Jack Sanson's campaign for the date at the Roger Sherman in New Haven.

Outstanding was Jack's lobby treatment in advance in which the walls above exit doors and sides (see photo) carried a series of posters and cutouts that did an excellent job of selling the attraction. Put on for splendid results was the dancing stunt wherein costumed couple danced the "Continental" to musical accompaniment in window of leading department store.

Uniformed usher displayed cards with titles of the song hits and official time of screenings at the theatre. Traffic was reported to have been effectively stopped in front of the store, policemen being needed to keep crowds in order.

Maloney Effects Tieups For "Transatlantic"

H. H. Maloney, Loew's State, Providence, R. I., tied in with General Foods for giveaway of Jello and window streamers plugging "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round" (see photo). Market distributed circulars in basket deliveries and another tieup was made with a baker for special banners on delivery trucks reading, "Two best bets—'Transatlantic' and 'Blank Bread.'"

Luggage shops carried window displays with scene stills and cards with copy, "We can match any piece of luggage that you see in, etc., etc."

Leading Vancouver Store Sponsors "Mrs. Wiggs" Contest

Featured in Manager M. S. Joiner's Vancouver, B. C., campaign on "Mrs. Wiggs" was a tieup with the Hudson Bay Co. which sponsored a newspaper essay contest for girls under 16. Complete outfit of coat, hat, blouse, skirt, sweater and shoes were given as first prize for essay of not more than 100 words best describing a "Mrs. Wiggs" window display at the store.

Rules included that essays must be in entrant's own handwriting and signed by school teacher; name, address, telephone number to be shown; statement of school name and grade, and directions as to closing date of contest and place to deliver essays. The store took large ads to further plug idea.

Florist Donates Crawford Gardenias for "Chained"

Manager Bob Smith, State, Los Angeles, by giving a local broadcasting floral shop a complimentary notice on trailer arranged for two window displays using two blow-ups of Crawford as the Gardenia Girl in "Chained." Florist also plugged over broadcast special sale of Crawford Gardenia and the gratis presentation of flowers to patrons at theatre. Entire mezzanine and foyer were decorated with plants, flowers and blooms and attractive girls presented the flowers.

Jeweler tied in with display of new crystal frame with star name spelled out in chains. Department store devoted window to luggage and blow-up of Crawford.

In conjunction with recreation department, a special swimming match was arranged with theatre offering a Crawford cup to boys and a like cup for the girls.

Flies Pirate Flag Atop Upright Sign

In addition to the many various ideas put over by other managers on "Treasure Island," Francis Deering, Loew's State, Memphis, Tenn., is the first to report, so far as we know, the hoisting of a pirate's flag on his upright sign.

Small tags with keys attached, which were distributed, invited all to try their luck at opening the treasure chest in lobby. Another stunt was a treasure hunt, staged in one of the parks, for all boys between the ages of eight and fourteen, Park Commissioner cooperating with Francis on this one.

Newspaper Subscription Tiein Worked for "Clown"

Barney Gurnette, Santa Cruz Theatre, Santa Barbara, Cal. put on a contest with local newspaper offering free tickets for "Circus Clown" to those securing a month's subscription. Passes were collected at newspaper office on payment of subscription. Another tieup was made with classified ad page, Joe Brown inviting girls whose names appeared to apply at box-office for ducats.

Travelling sound trucks (see photo) with 24's of "Joie" toured city and surrounding sections. Barney's water bally consisted of bannered boat plying nearby beaches. Clown on stilts with kiddies dressed in clown outfits paraded streets and wound up at theatre.

Morrison Contacts Clubs For "Barretts" Showing

Thorough coverage is indicated by Mel Morrison, Strand, Dover, N. H., on "Barretts of Wimpole Street," including personal letters to clubs, drama societies, and physicians commenting on picture. Heralds were stuffed in laundry packages and passed out in house to house distribution.

Bumper cards on trucks and taxis, and window tieups in drug and five and ten cent stores plugged date, personal endorsement ad also being used. Midget cards in hotels, window cards in leading stores and special one sheets on leading roads to city.

For "Belle of the Nineties," Mel planted Mae Westisms in newspaper, and ushers wore chest bands with copy, "Mae West is coming." Orchestras played West music and gave theatre credit in return for orchestration. First five hundred attending opening matinee received photos of Mae and sound truck plied surrounding towns.

Pirate Spirit Permeates Waterfront and Town

For his date on "Treasure Island" Max A. Cooper, skipper of the Fox, Hackensack, N. J., made that town pirate-conscious by effectively permeating it with the buccaneer spirit. Besides covering the waterfront with an old schooner, the mast of which carried theatre banner, Max paraded his ushers through the streets dressed in pirate costumes, and later set them on a float which toured the shopping centers as well as the schools in the late afternoon. An attractive tableau (see photo) was arranged in the lobby by having ushers pose before a painting based on a scene in the feature.

A coloring contest, into which schools were tied, was run in two dailies, winners receiving passes. Guest tickets were also awarded to Junior High School pupils for best essays written on the book. Special schedule accommodated classes which came in groups accompanied by teachers.

A special atmospheric compo board front entirely surrounding box office and frames with star's full name in cutout letters, studded with 10-watt amber lamps formed another high spot of Wally's campaign.

Smith Stages Teaser Bally for "Barretts"

A street bally that was a little out of the ordinary was staged by Bob Smith, manager, and Frank Shea, M-G-M exploiteer for "Barretts of Wimpole Street," at the State Theatre, Los Angeles. An old-time carriage with coachman and footman dressed in period uniforms, sat on the box driving quaintly dressed old lady to various stores where she made small purchases. When questioned by the curious, she handed them small printed announcements of play date, etc. No banners were carried on the carriage.

Goodyear blimp flew over city with trailers and special "Barretts" streamer was used on windows in downtown districts. Libraries distributed bookmarks calling attention to picture and Browning poetry. Library board further cooperated by sending letter to all branches asking each head to do his share in stimulating interest in picture.

Department store used window display of original costumes worn by Miss Shearer, theatre in return exhibiting mezzanine display of perfumes.

A novel throwaway was gotten out by Sidney Jacobs, Sheridan Square Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., on "One Night of Love," in the form of a neatly printed white card, to the upper left side of which was a small blue badge to which was secured gold star. Copy read, "A personal endorsement of the blue ribbon attraction, etc., etc." Sid's name was signed at bottom of card.

Coloring Contest Features "Cellini" Boston Date

Tying up with local perfumer, Joe Di Pesa, of Loew's State, Boston, Mass., promoted imprinted paper bags for "Affairs of Cellini," another merchant using window display on Constance Bennett hats and coiffeur with stills of star.

Teaser heralds with copy "What a lover—what a liar" printed in five different languages were distributed about city. Coloring contest was run in newspaper with cash and theatre tickets as prizes for the best color combinations, and window displays on books were arranged with leading drug chain and department stores.

Woods Breaks Church And College Papers

Securing mention in a monthly church magazine and college papers was part of an advance newspaper campaign put on by Manager C. Clare Woods, on "Cleopatra" at the Paramount, Salt Lake City, Utah. College paper carried story and ad on picture, the edition distributed free to all freshmen registering on the opening day, while a scene mat and theatre underline appeared in the church journal. Generous newspaper breaks were obtained. Among the prominent guests attending the opening were the Governor, Mayor and president of the Mormon Church.

Bannered street car (see photo) made downtown section and lobby setpiece, center panel an elaborate oil painting of star in character role, was also exhibited. Stan Samuelson, art director, ably assisted.

SOME IDEAS FOR NOVEMBER

*Autumn Festivals Are in Order;
Managers Planning Thanksgiving
Canned-Goods Special Matinees*

With Election Day over and plans completed for Armistice Day celebrations, Round Tablers are now turning to ways and means of stimulating November grosses and many are already getting set for Thanksgiving. Here are some of the various ideas members intend using this season, and included are some slants that have proven of value in the past which are offered for what they may be worth to interested theatremen.

The "Festival" Plan

By this name, managers have put over "weeks" or "months" as the case may be, all pointed to bring into prominence a number of dated attractions over a certain period. The campaign is obviously meant to build-up a number of pictures instead of one, and this plan has been followed successfully to hold up grosses during various seasons.

Civic associations, chambers of commerce, merchants' organizations, newspapers, lunch clubs are all possibilities for cooperation with the thought in mind of stimulating all branches of business during the "festival" period. Fashion shows, popularity contests and the like are suggested, special sales days and other tried and true formulae can likewise be employed.

November Autumn Drive

A good example of the above is the drive put on last year by A. J. Sonosky and Herb Gahagan in Aberdeen, S. D., for the Capitol, Lyric and Orpheum Theatres. These boys ran their show in the months of October as well as November, but it can be successfully applied for a lesser period.

An autumn-leaf trade mark was adopted in all theatre and cooperative advertising. For instance, merchants used it in congratulatory copy; it was made up as a sticker placed on all store packages, restaurant and soda fountain menus, and also glued to backs of tickets for various dances. Stores carried it in windows, and the theatres displayed it prominently in lobby display.

Newspapers of course gave the idea a splendid sendoff with page one stories, also running endorsements from leading citizens and club leaders. 4-H Clubs were tied in by giving prizes for best exhibits of handiwork, letters going to all members mentioning the theatres. Cashiers made house to house calls, giving information about the coming shows, and "leaf" paper was posted conspicuously in town and out.

Fashion Revue Suggested

The fashion revue might be tied in along the lines of Sig Solomon's recent talent quest wherein local girls were invited to compete in a stage presentation, winners to have their measurements forwarded to the Warner Studios. This could be adapted to a style slant with the same idea in mind playing on the fact that the clothes of Hollywood stars are gaining rapidly in making American women style conscious.

Identification of "Miss November" who would appear in certain stores and districts at various hours on various days is also offered with emphasis on this in the columns of cooperating newspapers. Cash and other prizes might be given, announcements made in coop page ads contributed by participating merchants.

Treasure hunts to take place in the stores, lucky number angles worked with the regular numbers on store sales slips should also be considered, and wherever possible, theatre credits can be included in the form of stickers, etc.

Contests for best dressed merchant windows are also a possibility, prizes given to the store display heads most ingeniously using theatre cutouts, stills, posters, and other advertising of the pictures to be played.

Thanksgiving Day Angles

With turkey day in the offing, most obvious is the canned goods matinee, and among the many that were put over smoothly last year, we select as an instance that of B. B. Hamilton, of the Palace, Norwich, Conn.

"B. B." contributed a show for 2000 children who all brought some sort of canned food stuffs for the relief of the city's poor, and serving on the committee were many civic leaders who greeted the children as they entered and also addressed the audience after the show which consisted of a Western, comedy shorts and cartoons.

In addition to the "paying guests," children from the various orphanages and county homes were brought to the theatre by members of the local Elks' lodge and other organizations who also assisted in the gathering and distribution of the contributed food stuffs.

Press Cooperation Advisable

The press of course, is an important factor in putting this over successfully, and in few cases has this cooperation been denied. The opening story should break on page one at least a week ahead, and as the date for the matinee should be the Saturday preceding Thanksgiving, Nov. 24, arrangements should be completed at the latest, a few days ahead of this date, say about Nov. 20 or 22. Supplementary stories should break every day.

When the food piles up in front of the theatre, photos of the returns should also be run, and lots of eats can be promoted from various markets. The division of the food should be left in the hands of the committee so that charities of various denominations all will be represented.

Raffles for turkeys on the eve of Thanksgiving will also be used, Pilgrim lobby posters, cutout turkeys, pumpkins, corn husks, and other accessories are in order for display, Thanksgiving short subjects, stage presentations, and essay contests on the significance of the holiday for school children are just a few of the other angles that will be put over this year by members in various spots.—A-MIKE.

Puts On Press Book 'Happiness' Campaign

Press book campaigns that prove practical and profitable in the field are not frequently proclaimed and thus it is pleasing to record the "Happiness Week" drive by Paul Kunze at the Old Colony and Plymouth Theatres, Plymouth, Mass., in which this Round Tabler not only carried out in detail the "Happiness Week" stunts suggested in the press book, but also is gracious enough to congratulate Charlie Einfeld and his Warner ad crew for the creation of so workable a layout.

Kunze's newspaper went for the idea enthusiastically with a number of swell advance stories and, more important, sizable editorials endorsing the idea heartily. Other newspaper breaks included co-op pages with reverse mastheads plugging shopping days for the "Week" and other front page breaks that included a "Give Some One A Job" drive which had the support of leading citizens and prominent organizations.

To round out the publicity campaign, the same paper also put on the contest for the happiness couple, theatre cooperating with cash prizes. Entrants married 25 years or more were requested to send in their photographs and short letters as to what they attributed their happiness, winning photos and letters being reproduced.

Selectmen Proclaim "Week"

Rarely voted and thus a box office significance was a proclamation of the local Board of Selectmen announcing "Happiness Week" which was also front-paged, copy calling attention to the many things for which the community should be thankful.

"Happiness Week" dance was put on at leading ballroom on Saturday night preceding opening, favors, hats and novelties being distributed, song hits from the picture being plugged and theatre dates announced. The press book pledge cards were passed out at the box office a week in advance, Paul reporting that many signed them as requested and mailed them to friends.

Merchants contributed complete windows, empty store windows were whitened, stippled and lettered, screen and lobby copy adding to the buildup and further publicity carried in Kunze's regular weekly house organ. He states that the only reason the national merchandising tieups could not be made was that locally there were no outlets, in spite of which, however, he managed to do an excellent all-around job.

GENE CURTIS OFFERS "MRS. WIGGS" IDEAS

Meaty selling slants are stressed by Gene Curtis, sales promotion head of Famous Players Canadian, in his theatre bulletin on "Mrs. Wiggs". Gene suggests the picture be sold along the same lines of "Little Women" and that the local schools be approached for cooperation. Sampler making and crochet contest and "Mrs. Wiggs' Charity Ball"—those attending to wear old clothes costumes—are other smart ideas recommended.

Manager Attacks Press Books; Appeals For Improvement

WE wish to take this opportunity of appealing that something be done to improve the "press sheets" that are now being put out by the major distributing companies.

We know that time and time again this matter has been brought up—but always in some way, the thing has been more or less dropped and nothing tangible done to find out what exhibitors really needed. We read that accessory departments are losing money, but we often wonder whether or not they are putting out the material that they can really sell or are dabbling in artistic creations.

An issue often raised by accessory department heads is the fact that theatre managers do not purchase enough material directly from the departments but prefer to go out and buy from individual concerns. This is very true in chain organizations.

I can safely say that I know not one, but one hundred managers, who would prefer buying material from their own exchanges rather than go to an outside concern and purchase material, but that the only reason they do this is because they are forced to in order to obtain the necessary material.

Criticizes Mats

Take the ad mats that are put out by every distributing company. They have, for example, what they believe is a class A box office attraction and will flood the press sheet with three and four column mats and pay almost no attention to a small two column or single column mat. The only way we can figure it out is that the distributor does this so that theatres will be obliged to use the larger mats.

Paramount and more recently Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are arranging their ads so that they can be revamped to suit individual theatre requirements, which is a distinct improvement, but at the same time one must also realize that there are a lot of newspapers which, when they are required to cut mats and cast portions of them, butcher them so that the result is hardly what the press sheet means to indicate. Other companies arrange their ads so that they cannot be revamped, by splashing titles across illustrations, etc.

Notes Ad Improvement

Perhaps I should be fair and say that most of the companies are realizing this, as is shown by some of the press sheets coming in, i. e., "Mrs. Wiggs."

An example of ads that cannot be adapted very well were those put out in the Warner Brothers press sheet on "British Agent," the result being that none of the ads that were used really did justice to the picture—

Another very important factor that press sheet editors fail to take into consideration is that a great many theatres are running a double feature program and in all cases, are endeavoring to sell both features in space that was usually devoted to the selling of but

FURTHER DISCUSSION IS NOW SOLICITED

Many of the industry's exhibition sins have, justly or otherwise, been attributed to the press book. Important as it is to theatre advertising, there are many managers who criticize the majority of today's press books as lacking in many respects.

The writer of this article, who chooses to remain anonymous, is a very able manager. He has been doing a consistently good job in his various assignments and what he has to say should prove interesting. Readers who agree or disagree are invited to say so in these columns.—A-MIKE.

one. Again, press sheets do not allow room or space for second features unless managers start to take the ad apart—sometimes with good results and more often poor results, through lack of good working material.

One thing in particular, which always seems to make us grunt with pain, is that when we pick up a press sheet, we note that there is a space of about one by one-quarter inch allowed for our sig. cut. Even in its simplest form, our sig cut is at least one-half inch in depth. Of course, we realize that these ads can be revamped by making our own border lines, etc., but one cannot help but feel that when the so-called artists lay out theses ads, they are supposed to be the best that there are. In our own particular instance, we cannot support an artist so that nearly all our ads come from the press sheet.

Do not think for a moment that we do not like the ad layouts that come to us in the press sheets, for nine times out of ten they are a good deal better than any we might construct ourselves. However, in laying out these press sheet ads, if more thought were put into what the various theatres actually need, I believe that ad mats would be sold in far greater quantities.

Then, at times, exchange one sheets come through with all sorts of colors with illustrations that overbalance the title and cast and everything else, so that if a person were 20 feet away, he would have to guess what the copy was about. I know for a fact that most managers would be more than anxious to spend the few extra cents for a good piece of paper if they were sure of getting what they wanted. All paper looks good in the press sheet but it is a far different thing that actually appears when you get it up outside in the sun, some 20 or 30 yards from you.

It is a known fact that theatre managers have to pick out just one or two angles in a picture and direct their sales force and plans along those particular angles. Why can't the paper do likewise? In other words, if the star is the thing, plug the star, but not the star, title, pictorials and art at once.

Another important thing that press sheets lack many times is good heads in various sizes of the all important star or stars. Take, for example, the Paramount press sheet on "Belle of the Nineties." This press sheet was practically above criticism, as it gave us much material to work on. Still, when we wanted a half column head of Mae West or a spot head to use in an ad, it was impossible to obtain one, for the press sheet did not show any.

Wants Better Exploitation

Then, many times, you'll find the same stunts week in and week out in the exploitation section of the press sheets. We know that the managers are supposed to be original but how can this be expected when nine-tenths of the press sheets steal the same gags from each other? Here are just a few gags that are so old now that no manager will use them; still they are given big displays in press sheets and tell the exhibitor how wonderful they are—Music Tie-Ups, DeLuxe Tie-Ups, Fashion Stills, Typewriter Gags, Perfume Gags, Books and an outlandish newspaper contest where the newspaper is going to give us the newspaper for a few well spoken words from us on the merits of the stunt.

The dramatic punch in cutouts is also something that is fast fading away for if a theatre has an artist, fine and dandy, but if he hasn't, as most haven't, it is just so much wasted space. Why can't press sheet editors list these standard, regular stunts in one corner of the exploitation section without all the descriptive copy that most managers already know about and devote the rest of the space to some stunt that will amount to real box office promotion.

Some particular press sheets will make a hobby of listing all sorts of tricky animated lobby displays that probably not more than one theatre in a hundred can afford. Sometimes companies will list great national tie-ups whereby all the manager has to do is go out and contact the local dealer and—bingo!—he has the choicest of space and all sorts of window displays at no cost. Then, when you write in to their national headquarters, they will courteously inform you that they had not been informed of a tieup between "Grapefruit and Douglas Fairfax."

Hopes Publicity Will Help

There are of course many, many good stunts listed in press sheets that have proven of vast beneficial use to us at the box office but in the writing of this letter, I am just listing those evils as I see them and have had them happen.

It is my honest and sincere belief that exchanges, if operated properly, giving theatres what they need instead of hammering out the same routine stuff on every picture, can go out and get all this business that is going to so-called outside concerns and not only break even, but show a profit.

manages the Amherst Theatre in Montreal, Que., Canada, for the United Amusement Corporation. Rene has been in showbusiness for nearly twenty-five years, having been connected with the Allen Theatres, Famous Players and then his present job. Daig-neault started at the New Grand, at which spot he stayed ten years, left to go to the Palace, where he remained for three years and thence to the Amherst, where he has been for nine years. That's quite a record, Rene.

CHARLES W. CURRAN

formerly publicity director of the Strand, New York City, and now with Columbia Pictures Corporation home office is no newcomer to our pages. You've all probably read plenty about him as the winner of the Quigley Award for July. Charlie started as usher at Scollay Square Theatre, Boston, Mass., worked in the advertising department there in spare time and through efforts of Harry Brown was transferred to that work permanently, where he remained for three years, until he went over to the Strand.

RUSSELL S. HENDRICKSON

manages the Capitol Theatre in Oakland, Cal. You must be aware by this time, Russ, of the many members we have in your city since it is represented often on our pages. However, since you've joined we haven't had a contribution from you and here's hoping this little introduction to your brother members will make you realize your obligation to the Club and that we'll be hearing from you.

DON LE BRUN

is out in Decatur, Indiana, where he is managing the Cort Theatre. There is a heavy responsibility resting on your shoulders, Don, you know you are the first member to join the Round Table Club from Decatur, and unless you keep us posted on what's what, I'm afraid your town won't be heard from. So do your stuff.

WILLIAM M. SHOLL

holds down the managerial job at the Brandon Theatre, in Brandon, Vermont. Bill attended the Boston University, where he studied advertising and just received a B.S. degree. He started as usher in Warners Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., and worked in the advertising department of M & P Theatres, Boston, while he attended college. Well, Bill, with the apparent desire that you display to get ahead, there's no reason why you shouldn't, and one of the best ways is through our pages, so remember, don't keep your activities a secret, let's all know what you're doing.

THOMAS F. CHRISTIAN is way down in Birmingham, Ala., managing the New Central Theatre there, and if you aren't already acquainted with your Round Table brothers there, it might not be a bad idea to say hello to them. We're always glad to hear from the southern sector and are counting on you to swell the ranks of active members.

This Wheeler and Woolsey poster is the work of a newcomer to our pages, Ted Grohs, artist at the Soboda Theatre, San Jacinto, Cal. Entire poster in pencil was done on India board.

Northwest Manager-Angler

Below is photo of Ray Niles, managing director Chateau Theatre, Rochester, Minn., in one of his lighter moments. Mr. Niles claims he has solved the problem of recreation for the theatre manager and offers the picture below as proof, stating "that any manager who conducts his operation in a business-like manner can find plenty of time for relaxation." He further claims there is no reason for any manager to be in his theatre 18 hours a day and believes that every theatremanager should have at least one day's recreation in every seven.

Mr. Niles' ability as a hunter and fisherman proves definitely that he has pursued this policy to the limit.

started in as advertising manager of the Capitol Theatre, in Ottawa, Canada. He has managed various houses up there, having even taken a hand as lobby artist. "R. E." has been at the Mystic, at Leipsic; the Star, at Delphus, and now at the Rex, at Ottawa. There's been enough excitement up your way over the Quigley Awards, Wanamaker, to spur you on to more activity, and as we've told so many members, signing the application blank doesn't complete your job—you've got to keep us informed of your various campaigns.

HARRY D. KRIEGSMAN

is the assistant manager of the Leader Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he aids Stephen Champlin, another Round Tabler. Harry, you know you're not so far from Club headquarters that you can't stop in and make yourself personally acquainted. We are always anxious to meet as many of you boys as possible, so, on that next day off, come on in and say hello.

C. DALE PICKELL

manages the State Theatre in Oroville, Cal. Dale started his motion picture career as assistant shipper at the San Francisco branch of M-G-M. Was later promoted to head shipper and learned operating at night after working hours. Left there to operate exclusively and started in at the State, after a time Dale was promoted to manage the house which is his present assignment.

A. E. POST

There's certainly no doubt about showbusiness being Eddie's true love, for he ushered nights to finish school and the day after he graduated found him on the theatre's full time payroll. Apparently there's little around the house Post is unfamiliar with, because he tells us he has been an usher, exploiter, projectionist, stage manager, producer, scenic artist, lobby artist, checker, assistant and manager. If that's not a record, we don't recognize one when we see it! He left showbusiness to do advertising agency and newspaper work, only to find the lure of the theatre too great and he returned to the fold and is now managing the Iris Theatre, Red Lodge, Mont.

WILLIAM C. MILLER

was born in Pinedale, Wyoming, and after getting out of school, went to work for the Airdrome Theatre in Las Vegas, New Mexico. Worked there for two years and went with the New Palace in the course of completion. Bill was then put in charge of all advertising, window display, newspaper ads, programs, special blowups, etc., and has a staff under him. Drop us a line now and then we'd be glad to hear from you.

WILLARD HATCH

is in charge of exploitation and art work at the Hayward Theatre in Hayward, Cal., and scarcely needs an introduction, since samples of his work have appeared in our pages repeatedly. However, we're just welcoming him now and maybe this will remind him that he owes us something.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified.

CONSOLIDATION OF EXHIBITORS HERALD-WORLD AND MOTION PICTURE NEWS

SOVIET PROPAGANDA AIDED BY NEW YORK PRESS ACCLAIM

An Article by TERRY RAMSAYE

Two Sections — Section One

I don't want to spoil your holiday, Gwendolyn — but I'm afraid we've been double-crossed. Everybody knows we're supposed to be the big show on Thanksgiving Day. And now Warners have gone and dated in "Flirtation Walk" as an opposition attraction. It just isn't quite cricket, if you ask me.

I must say I think you're taking the wrong attitude, old girl. Personally I consider it a real pleasure to share the billing with Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien, and the West Point Cadet Corps. In fact I think we picked just the right year to muscle in on this Thanksgiving racket. With a show like that breaking the same day it looks like we're going to be in on the biggest celebration since one of those Pilgrim Papas took a pot shot at my dear old great-great-great-granddaddy!

SMASHES RIALTO RECORDS

HELD OVER FOR 2nd WEEK!

Continuous S. R. O. as Broadway reads critics' unprecedented praise

New York Times:

"Mark 'The First World War' down as a memorable and infinitely important document which should be distributed in every civilized nation. If any motion picture is assured of enduring life, this is the one."

N. Y. Daily News:

"★ ★ ★ ½ ★! An amazing series of pictures. Stallings' work in editing and explaining makes them the most thrilling of their kind."

N. Y. Evening Post:

"Not only a splendid example of dramatic narrative; it is an historical document which deserves immortality. The episodes depict with singular power the bitterness and devastation of the struggle."

N. Y. American:

"Impressive as a miracle, the Great War is waged again, and not a million history books can change the facts that confront us in this breathing, bloody massing of actual events. Laurence Stallings and Truman Talley merit decoration with a new order."

N. Y. Sun:

"Not a picture to be casually seen and lightly forgotten. This is reality. No one who reads the newspapers, who wonders what is coming next should miss 'The First World War'."

N. Y. Daily Mirror:

"The greatest of war films. Don't miss it. War is pictured with all its pitiless horror, pictured with stirring detail."

N. Y. Herald-Tribune:

"The most exciting, vitally dramatic and inescapably powerful war chronicle that the camera eye has yet recorded. The whole thing is little short of overwhelming in its power."

N. Y. Eve. Journal:

"There is much more to this picture than a harrowing camera record of carnage. It is a searing reminder, a pictorial history of a world in which history repeats itself. The picture will leave you emotionally limp. Seeing it is a terrific experience."

N. Y. World-Telegram:

"Without hesitation, I offer you 'The First World War' as the most important and powerful plea for peace the cinema has yet produced. It is a stark, grim, biting plea."

Smash Showmanship Campaign Thrills Broadway

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 117, No. 7

November 17, 1934

MR. RICE QUILTS

MR. ELMER RICE, 42 years of age, with some two decades with the stage and Broadway, one of the most able dramatists of the period, has decided to "retire from the Broadway theatre," and perhaps the theatre. He has said so in public, so there has been much discussing.

The newspapers would not have been so excited about it, except for the fact that in a lecture up at Columbia University, Mr. Rice spent eight minutes of his hour on the drama, doing some considerable damning of the Broadway critics. The reporters developed their story out of the eight minutes, and so, says Mr. Rice in a piece in the New York Times of Sunday last, got the picture rather out of drawing. News is like that, as Mr. Rice knows so well. He should not vigorously object, however, because drama, seeking punch, even as newspapers do, is like that too. Real realism on page or stage would be as tedious as living in this tedious world. If you do not believe it read Theodore Dreiser.

But we were talking about Mr. Rice, and because so much of what he has said and is said about him, pertains to the same audience and show world served by the motion picture.

Mr. Rice, it seems, has arrived at his decision by reason of the fact that dramatic art is dominated by the show business. He has found what all men come to know, that a very little art goes a long way in business. He has been annoyed by the critics merely because they were working for the business instead of the art. He ought not to blame them for that. He might well realize that newspapers are enterprises for the sale of a product manufactured from spruce pulp and ink and that the hired hands can not do much about it.

It is proper enough for Mr. Rice to quit Broadway if he wants to, and it is a lot more sensible of him to do that than to cry for the reformation of Broadway. He says: "Most of the mature people I know find it impossible to take the Broadway theatre seriously. . . ."

The point we are getting to is: Who the hell said it was important to take Broadway or the drama seriously? If the public which supports Broadway wants balogne it is entitled to it, sliced any way it likes it.

But there is no point in expecting people to buy seats in which to grow wrinkles thinking. If they want to think, they need not pay an admission price for a place to do it in.

Mr. Rice and all the amusement world should be happy that the race is so dumb. If the public was intelligent it would be very difficult to make a living. Thinking leads to pains in the neck. Let us leave uplifting, education and social movements to their specialists. This is the show business.

Our Tri-Ergon department does not appear this week owing to a lack of excitement.

MESSAGES DELIVERED

THE "What the Picture Did for Me" pages of Motion Picture Herald, written by exhibitors for exhibitors as a cooperative service, are also the pages that get the most thumb prints from Hollywood's players. Here and there among the players are persons who work at their work and study it. They will be found to be readers of "What the Picture Did for Me."

In mind at the moment is a woman character player of superior ability, who has steadily enhanced her earning power by her work before the camera. She has filed in her scrapbooks every opinion on the pictures in which she has played that has appeared in these pages for three years. She knows something about where pictures in general are tending and where she is going.

Another, a producer, experienced in the ways of exploitation and exhibition, checks every comment on his product in "What the Picture Did for Me." In recognition of favorable mention he sends out a polite form letter. In recognition of unfavorable mention he sends out a much more polite letter which is not a form but an argument and a sales talk specially written for the occasion.

The pleasing point is that the Herald does deliver the exhibitor's message—every week.

HANDBOOK — BUT WHOSE HAND?

"MOTION-PICTURE Study Groups—Handbook for the Discussion Leader," by Elizabeth Watson Pollard, is just now published by the Bureau of Educational Research, Ohio State University, in cooperation with The Payne Fund.

This document, as one might well anticipate from the title page, is a further fruiting of the labors of the Reverend William Harrison Short of the Motion Picture Research Council, an organization mainly famous for its list of ex-presidents. Its pages reflect rather more of the Short version of the researches involved than the reports of the researchers, and its citations therefore lead one more to the pages of the popular, so to speak, report of reports written, to make Dr. Short's story stand up, by Mr. Henry James Forman.

The advent of this little volume, neatly and appropriately bound in red, reminds one that the publicity endeavors of the motion picture industry might well encompass more attention to creative and positive expressions. Some excellent work is done from time to time keeping the industry out of trouble and out of print on destructive texts, but too much of the ex parte expression anent the screen is being left to persons who are serving personal causes. There is indicated an assignment for public relations counsellors. Some current research is calculated besmirch.

THIS WEEK ---

MEXICAN REVISION

Fair and liberal treatment of the film industry in Mexico in all its phases is provided in a measure drawn by the state department at the instance of President Rodriguez to amend the federal constitution, clarify other laws concerning the industry, it is reported by James Lockhart, Herald Mexico City correspondent. The bill has been submitted to the legislature. The legislation, result of long study, is expected to be highly beneficial to importers. A government censorship regulation is included. . . .

ENGLISH FIELD

In serious drama, musicals, English producers should find their production goal, last week, back in London from the United States, declared Gaumont-British production chief Michael Balcon. "I think British producers have demonstrated their ability already insofar as straight drama is concerned. . . . Where musicals are concerned, the record of British producers stands on its own." . . .

BETTER BUSINESS

Film salesmen in the midst of the new season selling report theatre business gaining in the Kansas territory, with the outlook full of promise. One indication cited by the salesmen is the fact that exhibitors are paying more for film than last year and registering no objection. Kansas was one of the states hardest hit by the recent drouth. . . .

IMPROVEMENT

Improvement in the theatre supply business, chiefly as a result of the Federal Housing Administration loans to theatre owners, partly due to improved general conditions, was cited last week by J. E. Robin, president of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association, at a New York board meeting. The next annual convention will be at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, in May. . . .

FARNOL RESIGNS

Lynn Farnol, for seven years general press representative for Samuel Goldwyn, has resigned, planning to enter the general advertising field, and is understood to have joined Donahue and Coe, advertising agency, which recently added to its accounts the Music Hall in New York, formerly handled by Lord and Thomas. . . .

DISTRIBUTION DEAL

A reciprocal distribution agreement between British International Pictures and First Division is said to have been the subject of discussions in London between William M. L. Fiske, III, who recently acquired an interest in First Division, and Arthur Dent of B. I. P. . . .

FILM AS SALESMAN

In one week a motion picture will be seen by more persons than could be reached by 1,000 salesmen in a year, it was estimated by Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists vice-president, cabling from Tokyo to New York in the course of a globe-circling trip. The estimate was included in Mr. Kelly's expressed opinion that American manufacturers and exporters "owe a debt of gratitude" to producers for opening new markets constantly for their goods. . . .

LOSSES CUT

Keith-Albee-Orpheum and subsidiaries last week reported net loss for the 39 weeks ended September 29, of $168,546.35, after all charges, which compares with net loss of $552,792.60 in the corresponding period last year, including net loss of $124,836.16 on Orpheum Circuit, declared bankrupt in January, 1933. B. F. Keith Corporation and subsidiaries last week reported net loss of $173,603.75 for the period, comparing with net loss of $354,038.53 in the corresponding 1933 period. . . .

ALL-COLOR FILM

Walter Wanger, producing independently for Paramount release, plans "Vogue of 1935," musical fashion film, to be done entirely in the new three-color Technicolor process. An all-star cast is planned for the feature. . . .

IVY LEDBETTER LEE

Ivy Ledbetter Lee, perhaps more than any other man responsible for the development in its highest form of publicity and public relations as a powerful instrument for molding public opinion, died last Friday of a brain tumor at St. Luke's Hospital in New York, at 57. More than 25 years in public relations, Mr. Lee was the counsel of big business, in the employ of such as the Rockefeller interests. . . .

THE BERN CASE

Incident to the investigation by a Los Angeles county grand jury of the official expenditures of District Attorney Buron Fitts, there cropped up last week a repercussion of the investigation last year of the death of Paul Bern, production executive, husband of Jean Harlow, which was determined a suicide. When records of the earlier grand jury were examined last week, the theory of Earl Davis, Bern's gardener, that the death was murder, not suicide, was revealed. It is understood, however, that the present grand jury has no interest in going further with the Bern case. . . .

PRICE-CUTTING

With double features, premiums and the like not permitted, Cleveland neighborhood houses are cutting prices to bolster attendance, with every indication that a price-cutting battle is in prospect. With a contract minimum of 15 cents, certain situations which can cut no farther to meet reductions by competition, are expected to carry the matter to the local grievance board. . . .

MEYER PRAISED

A statement was issued last week by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, expressing regret that the organization is losing "so able a leader as Fred S. Meyer," recently named assistant to Carl Laemmle of Universal. . . .

SHAKESPEARE ON STAGE

Beginning December 3, Marc T. Nielson of Globe Productions, Ltd., and Aaron Jones of McVickers theatre, Chicago, will stage Shakespearean plays five times a day at the McVickers, Chicago film house, in addition to feature pictures. A complete repertory is planned, a new play to be presented each week with each feature picture change. . . .

LICENSE FEES CUT

Approved by the common council of Madison, Wis., last week were reductions in annual theatre licenses ranging from $50 to $100. The new schedule: houses seating under 500, $50; seating 501 to 1,200, $100; more than 1,200, $200. Previous fees ranged from $150 to $300. . . .

FIRST ISSUE OF TIME'S TWO-REEL NEWS OPENS IN THEATRES DEC. 20

First Division To Release Dramatized Newsreel Fortnightly; Exclusive Contract to One Exhibitor in Each of 3,000 Areas

Formal announcement impended this week, at almost any hour, of the entrance into the motion picture industry of the publishing interests of Time, the weekly news magazine, and of Fortune, class monthly, with a "dramatized" newsreel released every two weeks in two reels, to be physically distributed through the new First Division exchange structure of Harry Thomas and the Curtis-Fiske-Ludington combination. Next season, the Time newsreel will be released every week, and eventually, it will be made available twice weekly, according to present plans. Original plans called for a single reel weekly.

The group comprising Nicholas S. Ludington, William Fiske III and John Curtis, known to possess able financial backing, purchased a 50 per cent interest in First Division a few weeks ago, and through their friendly relationship with the Time interests they are reliably reported to have suggested First Division to the publishers as an outlet for their reel.

25% in First Division

The contract is understood to be agreeable to both parties and counsel. When signatures have been affixed there probably will be disclosed some of the details of an agreement whereby Time acquires an interest in First Division, reputed to be about 25 per cent, with option for the purchase of additional stock.

That Time is to produce a dramatic reel has been known for months (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, August 25, page 11). It has been generally understood, too, that First Division would distribute, although, at the outset, Henry R. Luce's Time organization is understood to have approached the owners of RKO's Pathe News for outright acquisition of that property, with distribution through RKO. Paramount Publix Corporation and Warner Brothers Pictures both had conversations with the publishers for the reel.

Acquisition of the semi-monthly news release by First Division is in keeping with the ambitions of the new and young Ludington-Fiske-Curtis group as partners of Harry Thomas to build that structure to a producer of both features and short subjects with a complete branch system extending abroad. From the home office this week came formal announcement of establishment of a production subsidiary, of which Mr. Ludington is president; Henry Hobart, vice-president and producer; Mr. Curtis, vice-president and treasurer; Mr. Fiske, vice-president, and Frank Look, secretary.

As to the exact relationship between the production and distribution companies a spokesman at First Division said an announcement will be forthcoming in a few weeks.

Headquarters of First Division Productions will be in Hollywood. At the eastern executive

RUMOR HANDS HAYS' POST TO E. J. FLYNN

Wednesday morning the newspapers reissued their perennial report of a successor to Will Hays. This time the story was that Edward J. Flynn, Democratic leader of the Bronx and patronage dispenser for James Farley in New York, "appeared to be slated to be 'the new movie czar'." Other reports had it that Mr. Flynn was "weighing" an offer of $125,000 a year from RKO.

The newspaper story ignored the fact that Mr. Hays has a contract with some three years to run, and that currently there appears to be no internal excitement in his organization.

Insiders believed that the "rumor" might be traced to Mr. Flynn's joking with New York reporters.

It appears that Mr. Flynn's political activities and other interests probably would not permit him to enter motion pictures. However, Radio officials in Hollywood indicated he was traveling westward to "look over" the studio in the interests of Mike Meehan's holdings in Keith-Albee-Orpheum. Mr. Flynn and Mr. Meehan are quite friendly.

The last prior report of "a successor to Will Hays" accompanied the stories of the resignation of General Hugh Johnson from the National Recovery Administration in September. In that connection MOTION PICTURE HERALD editorially commented on the frequency of such reports whenever any public figure appeared to be unemployed, and remarked: "Succeeding Mr. Hays is likely to prove a very wearying occupation."

— T. R.

offices additional space has been taken on the 23d floor of the RKO Building in Radio City.

Curtis, Look and Hobart will fly to Hollywood in a few weeks to take initial steps in establishing studios in Hollywood. Planned immediately are eight features for 1934-35 release, shooting to begin January 1.

Mr. Hobart, a pioneer in production and direction, came to the industry from American Telephone and Telegraph and its Western Electric subsidiary, along about 1918, when he assumed general managership of William Randolph Hearst's International Film Service Corporation, producing Cosmopolitan pictures. Later he became general manager of Cosmopolitan and subsequently went to the Radio studio as an associate producer.

Time's first issue of the newsreel will appear in theatres December 20. Three test reels have been used for tryout performances in eastern cities.

Time has been conducting physical experi-

First Division Productions, New Subsidiary, To Make Eight Features for Current Season, With Henry Hobart at Studio

ments with the idea for six months. To assure its crystallization the management is prepared at once to enlist the goodwill and circulation of the weekly magazine, of Fortune, and the popular weekly radio broadcast, "The March of Time." Some $175,000 already has been expended in experimentation.

"Time Marches On" is the keynote of the newsreel, re-enacting in dramatic form the causes and results of the news of the day. (Time says it does not believe that beauty contests and baby parades are news.)

March of Time, Inc.—corporate and trade title of the product—was chartered at Albany, N. Y., on Tuesday. Cravath, De Gersdorff, Swaine and Wood, New York attorneys, filed the incorporation papers.

In the merchandising through First Division, there is under consideration a division of the country into 3,000 areas, in each of which a single exhibitor would be sold an exclusive franchise, aiming to build a later demand by limiting the supply at the start, and to give each exhibitor franchise holder full benefit of a promotional campaign planned through radio, magazines and newspapers. Said a spokesman for Time: "We are willing to gamble with any exhibitor signing a contract for the reel on the possibilities of increased business. If he is not convinced after a trial, he will be at liberty to cancel the contract."

Special Sales Force

It is expected that a special sales force will be set up. Time will use its own camera staff, and will draw upon the Fox Movietone library, also providing for office and studio space in the Movietone plant in New York. Time will pay Fox Movietone a flat weekly rate for use of all Fox newsreel facilities, including Fox's home office staff, but not including news photography coverage. This arrangement, it is understood, will make up on the Fox ledger the loss of the Hearst newsreel account. Fox and Hearst together are said to have grossed $85,000 weekly in the United States.

Heading the Time newsreel organization will be Roy E. Larsen, one of the originators of the idea, who is vice-president and in charge of promotion of Time, Inc. Mr. Larsen's job also includes the magazine's radio broadcasts. Associated with him will be John S. Martin, managing editor of Time, and Louis de Rochemont, formerly of Fox Movietone. In charge of promoting the idea will be Time's Daniel Longwell, formerly of Doubleday, Doran, book publishers. Richard de Rochemont, brother of Louis, was assigned this week to complete charge in Europe. He, too, was with Fox Movietone, for four years editing foreign versions of Fox reels. Mr. de Rochemont will sail soon to organize a European camera staff and arrange for foreign versions.

Taken from the editorial staff of Time magazine and transferred to the motion picture venture are: Dwight Cooke, Tom Orchard and Woodruff Wallner. From the short subject department of Fox Movietone Time has drawn Charles Morrison, Louise Logue, Morris Roizman, John Dullaghan and Joseph Trimarico. Mr. Trimarico has been the Movietone librarian.

"All Movietone personnel acquisitions were made in full agreement with Truman Talley, head of the newsreel," said a spokesman for Time.

SOVIET PROPAGANDA AIDED BY NEW YORK PRESS ACCLAIM

An Article by TERRY RAMSAYE

THE American screen, already burdened quite with its own sins and faced with endless problems of political regulation, taxation and general bedevilment by axe-grinders of all sorts, now unwittingly adds entanglement in the web of propaganda woven in Moscow in the cause of chaos and the Third Internationale.

And, doubtless as unwittingly, two of America's greatest and most constructively conservative newspapers, the New York Times and the New York Herald Tribune, have permitted their young men to deliver their columns to the preachment of the Red cause and its glorification—all behind the mask of motion picture criticism.

"Three Songs about Lenin," a feature length picture presented at the Cameo Theatre in New York, by Amkino, Russia's American picture agency, is their provocation and inspiration. This picture was made in Russia by Mejarabpomfilm "in commemoration of the Seventeenth Anniversary of the October Revolution."

This picture in its primitive emotional content and inept messages of state has the precise quality of a soap box speech in Union Square.

In cinematographic quality it does not compare favorably with over-night assemblies of topical film made in the newsreel editing offices of New York.

"Three Songs about Lenin," like all Russian pictures which reach these shores, was made solely for purposes of propaganda.

It is presented to Broadway and the amusement world as entertainment. It is currently a fact of the American screen, invasive of an institution which has, for the four decades of its building, held itself especially in the entertainment service of the whole people and free of all or any manner of special pleading. The American screen has in its fashion reflected change, but it has not of its own motion advocated revolution or preached the cause of chaos.

NOW comes Russia's Soviet, born of bombs and ruling by blade and firing squad, to make, in so far as it may, a forum of the American screen.

And so far they have to help them Mr. Andre Sennwald, motion picture critic of the New York Times, and Mr. Richard Watts, Jr., of the New York Herald Tribune—in the holy name of Lenin and Art.

One may wonder where Mr. Adolph Ochs's editorial overseers of The Times were nodding the night of November 6 when his paper went to press with Mr. Sennwald's corybantic ecstasies, all a-drip with sympathetic appreciation of the screen canonization of Lenin.

Mr. Sennwald's ode is presented under The Times' dull and neutral stock heading "The Screen," taking off gently in a manner to excite no copyreader, but soon goes aloft at full throttle, climbing swiftly to hang on the propulsion of his high emotion.

Employing an intricate blend of newsreels, authentic historical cinema documents and original films, M. Vertof strives to dramatize the soul and meaning of Lenin as they filter through the eyes of the peasants whom the dead prophet liberated from the Czarist chains. He visualizes, in images of warm and tragic beauty, the influence of Lenin as expressed in three folk songs from the Soviet Orient which have evolved out of the soil since his passing.

The songs to which Mr. Sennwald so tenderly refers are: "Under a Black Veil My Face," "We Loved Him" and "In the Great City of Stone," the last including a refrain "If Lenin Could See Our Country Now."

Mr. Ochs should see his paper now.

The refrain pleased the Times critic a lot, leading him to observe:

This third section is a mighty chant of patriotism which ends on Lenin's own inspiring message to his people: "Victory will be ours."

The dumb driven peasants of the cast in their ragged parades and the old time worn Soviet stock shots from their film library, rendered trite by their frequent use on the propaganda screen, really do show just what a "Victory" it has been indeed.

After reading the press accounts of this demonstration of "Victory" the spectator may possibly find in the appearance of a Lincoln and a Packard car, manufactured in these moss-back and bourgeois United States, moving through the scenes a sug-

WHAT LITVINOV SAID ABOUT PROPAGANDA

One of the official gestures in connection with the recognition of Russia was an exchange of letters on propaganda neutrality between Maxim V. Litvinov, commissar for foreign affairs, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States. M. Litvinov's letter under date of November 16, 1933, includes paragraphs defined as "the fixed policy of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics," reading:

1. To respect scrupulously the indisputable right of the United States to order its own life within its own jurisdiction in its own way and to refrain from interfering in any manner in the internal affairs of the United States, its territories or possessions.

2. To refrain, and to restrain all persons in government service and all organizations of the government or under its direct or indirect control, including organizations in receipt of any financial assistance from it, from any act overt or covert liable in any way whatsoever to injure the tranquillity, prosperity, order, or security of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions, and, in particular, from any act tending to incite or encourage armed intervention, or any agitation or propaganda having as an aim the violation of the territorial integrity of the United States, its territories or possessions, or the bringing about by force of a change in the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions.

But isn't it the current understanding that Amkino, the distributor of such items as "Three Songs About Lenin," represents Sovkino and the Russia Soviet — endorsed, supported, encouraged, controlled, picture makers? What the Russian screen says is the voice of the U. S. S. R.

NAIVE CRITICS AND STATESMEN

gestion of a jarring note that is, we submit, not perfect art, even if they did run through the worshipful fingers of Dzega Vertof.

The reverential attitude in which Mr. Sennwald placed The Times is well epitomized in his remark:

... Vertof arouses a similar emotion of heartbreaking nostalgia by his employment of the empty bench in the park where Lenin used to sit in the last days of his life.

The opinion of The Times, as set down by its ordained screen observer, is that:

Certainly "Three Songs About Lenin" is an event in the cinema, and its director blazes a trail into the infinity which represents the undiscovered possibilities of the camera medium. His technical skill in weaving this impassioned document out of a variety of pictorial strands, using the film library as effectively as he uses the studio and the open countryside, is of vast importance to the art of the cinema.

It is more than obvious that if Mr. Sennwald's report on this "trail into the infinity" were indeed correct the news editor of The Times, surely should have put it on Page One of that issue of November 7. The Times is a fancier of discoveries and it would seem that the sizeable progress into the territory of anybody's Infinity would rate as news fairly high even alongside "Little America" and the frosty chirps of Admiral Byrd.

THE attentions of The Herald Tribune also make the approach under a stock heading, a shade more positive than The Times. The Tribune flatly says "On the Screen," followed by the by-line of Mr. Richard Watts, Jr.

If only Mr. Whitelaw Reid could see his paper now.

Mr. Watts appears to have slightly more sympathy with the theme than its execution, in spots, although holding it to be quite a picture as pictures go. He says, in The Herald Tribune of November 7:

In "Three Songs About Lenin" the Soviet cinema pays its heartfelt, passionate, almost hysterical tribute to the great Russian leader. ... It is a series of victory chants, alternating with cries of mourning, demonstrating the lyric enthusiasm of the ruling proletariat for its sainted chieftain. ...

... Unquestionably it is an earnest and an often eloquent picture, replete with all that crusading zeal that makes the Hollywood films seem pallid studio exercises. Nevertheless, I am forced to doubt that "Three Songs about Lenin" is quite the masterpiece that some of its enthusiasts have termed. ... The account of the picture that

Soviet Approves MacArthur-Hecht Plan to Make Feature in Russia

Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht, young American producers under contract to Paramount for a series of features, will bring to the screens of this country a firsthand motion picture record of life as it is lived in Red Russia.

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Josef Stalin, High Commissar, already has given its approval to the producing of the features and there remains only the question of remuneration for the pair before they travel Europeward.

The Soviet will work "very closely" with Mr. Hecht and Mr. MacArthur to be sure that its economic machinery and social life are depicted as running strongly and smoothly. The hero probably will be Paul Muni (Muni Weisenfreund) and the heroine, Helen Hayes, who in private life is Mrs. Charles MacArthur.

Confirmation of the negotiations—which were known to have been under way for some weeks—was made Tuesday in New York by an assistant to V. I. Verlinsky, head of Amkino, the motion picture distribution agency in the United States.

The general impression along Broadway is that other American producers also will travel to Russia to engage in Soviet-sponsored production.

Some of the so-called "new tendencies" in Soviet film production are explained in Kinematograph Weekly, London trade journal, by Huntly Carter, staff writer. He describes "Love," one of the newest Russian films, as depicting the passion that was formerly personified by the "Five-Year Plan." In the picture, explained Mr. Carter, the daughter of an eminent Soviet scientist refuses to accept a Bolshevik with whom she is in love because she thinks he is too deeply in love with the Plan. To her it is the man who personifies love, not the Plan—and therein lies the "new tendency" in Soviet screen entertainment. In other words, according to Mr. Carter, they are taking sex out of the Plan and its machinery and putting it into human beings—truly a radical departure for the U. S. S. R.

Mr. Carter had interviewed on the Continent M. Chujin, head of Mejrabpomfilm, one of the Soviet-controlled production subsidiaries, and out of the discussion came evidence that the Soviet is substituting its old idea of a closed market for its films with a new plan for widespread trade in motion pictures with principal countries.

Mr. Carter added that "the mass agitation picture ... seems to have dropped out of future Soviet program schedules."

The Soviet is most "interested in the sale of their pictures abroad," said Kinematograph's writer.

has been set down in the Cameo theatre program reveals much of the mood of the work, and I can do no better than quote it. It says: "First Song—'Under a Black Veil My Face.' The East. A veil of darkness. Then slowly—light. Out of ignorance and superstition toward the new culture the East is moving. Second Song—'We Loved Him'—Death has come but Lenin cannot die. The people of Russia remember. Third Song—'In the Great City of Stone'—Lenin has given us life. He has given us courage. He had led us to victory." The new Russian film is a striking motion picture, but it is not as good as Ambassador Bullitt thinks it is.

Which reminds us that Ambassador Bullitt, the New Dealer tied up with recognition of Russia, Mr. H. G. Wells, whose business is making copy, and Mr. Will Rogers, whose business is making cracks at any cost, have all been quoted in advance publicity as considering "Three Songs about Lenin" a great achievement. As economists and statesmen, we know them, and as experts on the motion picture they are nearly as naive as Mr. Sennwald.

NOW appertaining to Mr. Watts and his subdued criticisms, it is to be observed that he says "I am forced to doubt." There are evidences currently at hand to indicate that this phrase is, in his use, no mere stereotype. He seems to have doubted against his will. We find revelation of his spirit and intent, by turning to page 14 of the November issue of New Theatre, organ of The League of Workers' Theatres. The generally acute and unbiased intelligence of the editorial policy of this publication is keynoted in the same issue by a scream which classifies "No Greater Glory" as "Columbia's pro-war film."

In the New Theatre Mr. Watts writes, with considerably more boldness than in the Herald Tribune, under the title of "Hollywood Sees Pink." He thrills his readers with the charge that: "The most frank and vicious anti-radical propaganda

COMEDY OF PATHOS

I have found in the films for several years was in a Fox picture called 'I Believed in You.'

Just fancy Mr. Watts spending "several years" looking for "frank and vicious anti-radical propaganda" and finally coming up with the perfect specimen like that!

But Mr. Watts is sure that he sees "shifting styles" in the treatment of the Soviet Union and that the producers of Hollywood are making desperate but ineffectual efforts to keep pace with "what they see as popular sentiment in the matter."

Mr. Watts is so generous as to observe to the readers of New Theatre that he feels that while the California producers are "heartily if sometimes furtively on the side of the established order," it is because of instinct rather than of "intentional malice."

"Furtively on the side of the established order." Turn that one over.

Now could it be possible that Mr. Watts is furtively employed by The New York Herald Tribune? From other departments of that paper one from time to time discovers passages which tend to indicate that it is not quite furtive about the continuance of the United States.

If Whitelaw Reid could read his movie boy, now.

MAY it be noted, however, in behalf of the press that one great newspaper, the New York Sun and its critic, Miss Eileen Creelman, have been able to look at "Three Songs About Lenin" without incurring spasms. In the Sun of that same November 7, Miss Creelman writes:

These Russian pictures require a very special audience, one more intent upon digesting propaganda than seeing fine drama. Whatever their quality, however, they are always sure of lavish applause from one well-publicized source or another. The advance cheering which greeted the advent of "Three Songs About Lenin" is a strong example of the way in which enthusiasm for an idea can influence the viewings of a motion picture.

This Cameo picture, more even than those preceding it, requires an audience that will meet it half way. It has, to one not carried away by the theme, almost no merit as entertainment of travelogue. It lacks continuity, characterization, story, technical skill or even the excitement of fine photography. . . . "Three Songs About Lenin" requires of its spectators the same fanatic enthusiasm that must have gone into its assembling. It bored this movie-goer thoroughly.

Apparently the newspaper of the Great

Dana, Mr. Chester Lord and William T. Dewart is still in the United States.

The unintended comedy of pathos in the mid-section of this inspired Soviet film-tract has not had attention from the reviewers. It is conveyed at its best by subtitles written to convey the prayerful appreciations of the new Russia in quotation of the workers in the immaculate chord of "My farm . . ." "My collective farm." "My collective farm."

It leads one into delightful vistas of phrase adventure. Why not—"My collective children,—my collective wife,—my collective fireside,—my collective eyebrow."

While "Three Songs About Lenin" is hardly worth discussion as a motion picture, it does make it germane to observe that in this as in other screen pabulums the Soviet, for all its forswearing of the old order, quaintly finds itself using the ancient devices of emotionalism in its endeavors to make a new savior and saint out of Lenin, it tries to tap the spirit of "Home Sweet Home" for collectivism, and when it would stir the heartbeats of the faithful, its bands have to be recorded in the military march tempos that have rung in the ears of the race for ages. The tune isn't new, after all. And there is naught but the skull tossing technique of the medicine men of all primitives in the parading on the screen of the corpse of Lenin—the petrified idol of that great stone "tent" in the Red Square of Moscow.

There could be real drama in a sequel sequence to the New York presentation of "Three Songs About Lenin." It would be pictured close-up, somewhat after the manner of Vertof but done with Hollywood skill, recording the gorgeous emotional play across the wily brain pan of one Stalin when his secretary lays before him clippings from the New York Times and the New York Herald Tribune of November 7, 1934.

Perhaps two young men will be decorated. The Soviet, you know, has adopted the old technique with decorations, too.

My collective elbow!

New York Independent Combine Seen Dropped

New York exhibitors are giving little response to the plan to combine about 100 independent theatres into one strong booking and buying circuit. The indications are that the plan will be discarded. A number of members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, although the plan was not supported by the organization, saw in the idea a weapon to break down the protection demands by the major circuits.

See Possible Fox Sale of Gaumont Stock in Kent Trip

The unexpected sailing of Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, for London Friday night was reported in New York film circles to have a bearing on a possible sale of Fox Film's 49 per cent holdings in Gaumont-British.

From London came word that Mr. Kent has placed a price of $3.75 a share on the Fox company's stock in Industrial and Bradford Trust, Ltd., holding company of Gaumont-British, with the report that one obstacle to any sale has been inability to reach a middle ground on the trading value of the stock. In London circles the Fox holdings are said to be linked with a possible deal with John Maxwell of British International.

American Gaumont British now has set its sales organization for 90 per cent of the United States, according to Arthur Lee, general manager. John W. Weeks, general sales manager, has named J. L. Franconi sales manager at Dallas, and Jack Groves salesman; Sam Levine booker-salesman at Buffalo, and George Wheeler at Pittsburgh; H. Russell Gaus salesman at Oklahoma City and Marcel Mekelburg salesman at Albany. A. C. Hayman has booked Gaumont British product at first-runs in Buffalo and Niagara Falls, and Elmer C. Rhoden of Fox Midwest for first-runs in Kansas City and 60 other spots.

Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager for Gaumont-British in England, is expected to return to New York early in December, according to Mr. Lee, bringing with him eight new releases, for the second half of the season's program.

Kansas-Missouri Owners Ready to Fight Tax Measures

Exhibitors in the Kansas City territory are flocking to the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association in the hope of building up a unified front in anticipation of a fight against restrictive legislation this winter.

A consumers' tax bill, which will hit theatre admissions, is expected to be introduced in the Kansas assembly when it convenes in January. The Missouri legislature meets in the same month and several measures affecting theatres are looked for, including one to increase the present sales tax, levied on admissions, from one-half of one per cent to at least one per cent, as well as a censorship bill and another to impose a reel tax.

Legislative committees of the KMTA are lining up exhibitor sentiment to counteract legislative moves already under way. John C. Stapel, president of the KMTA, is in charge for Missouri, and R. R. Biechele, secretary-treasurer of the organization, has the Kansas situation in hand.

Eastman Declares Dividend

Eastman Kodak Company has declared a regular quarterly dividend of $1 per share on its common stock and $1.50 on the preferred, payable January 2, to stockholders of record December 5.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME"

THE YOUNG MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY inherited from the stage of the drama the old practice in theatricals of adopting strange names to take the places of the original family names of its principals upon whom the spotlight of public attention continuously is centered. Nor is this heritage a strange one when we consider the requirements of the marquees for brevity in billing and the necessity of greater ease of pronunciation as an aid in the popularization of the professional.

Obviously the largest number of changes are made in the names of those who are engaged in the creative branches of motion pictures and it was from these that we gathered most of the 450 changes from family names which are presented on these pages. Many are familiar with the hidden family names of some wellknown professional folk, but the majority are not, and so we have incorporated those few real names that had been heard by some before. Name changes that came with marriage were avoided so far as possible.

"NAMES MAKE HEADLINES"

*I*N an early issue there will appear several hundred names of well-known persons in production, distribution and exhibition whose family names are public information but whose surnames are not. An investigation was made deep into the archives to learn what these first-name initials stand for and the results were most interesting, unearthing as they did many rarities linking the holders to fine old historical and professional personages after whom they were named. The screen names on these pages are in alphabetical order.

Postmen Delivery Of Program Aids Theatres' Grosses

The new plan offered on November 1 to theatres and local merchants by the United States Post Office Department, whereby letter carriers may be used on their regular routes to make house-to-house deliveries of advertising matter, programs, announcements and the like without the formality of addresses affixed thereon, and at no extra cost beyond regular third-class mailing rates, is bringing additional business to motion picture theatres, according to word received from the field this week.

Harry M. S. Kendrick, of the Enright theatre at Pittsburgh, reported that he adopted the plan immediately following publication in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, on November 3, of the details of the idea, and that it resulted in increasing his business. The postmaster had advised Mr. Kendrick that his theatre was the first in the Pittsburgh area to make use of the mail plan.

Mr. Kendrick wrote: "Due to the splendid alertness of MOTION PICTURE HERALD in advising exhibitors and managers of the new postal regulation permitting unaddressed programs, etc., to go through the mails, I placed the plan in use at once, and it resulted in an unusually fine gross."

In the story which appeared in the HERALD on November 3 describing requirements under the plan and its method of operation, the statement regarding cost appears to have been open to misinterpretation by some exhibitors. While the cost is at the basic rate of three-fourths of a cent per ounce, as was stated, postal regulations require a minimum of two ounces in this classification, and in the event a piece for mailing does not weigh two ounces, then the sender is charged for two ounces regardless. This would place the cost at one and one-half cents, minimum, per piece of two ounces or less, and one and one-half cents for each additional two ounces or fraction thereof. This rate is the same which applied to regular third-class matter before.

The point regarding costs of mailing unaddressed matter under the plan for house-to-house deliveries by regular letter carriers, was raised this week by R. G. Hewitt, of the Star theatre, Milford, Mich., and by E. E. Blair, who operates the State and Ohio theatres at Ulrichsville, Ohio.

CITY JOINS FILM MEN IN LABOR PEACE MOVE

Kansas City Citizens Form Council for Industrial Har- mony; Canton Picketing Suit

Kansas City citizens took the lead late last week in a plan to maintain peace between employers and employees, especially those unionized. Exhibitors are active participants in the unique movement.

Working quietly while labor troubles continued in countless large industrial centers, and involving exhibition along with scores of other lines of business, well known residents of Kansas City completed organization of the Kansas City Citizens Protective Council, Inc., the aims of which, as publicly announced in full-page advertisements in local newspapers, are: (1) To arouse a unified public opinion to the necessity of preserving the industrial and business peace in Kansas City; (2) To insure every citizen the right to work without fear of coercion and brutal force being used to compel him to join organizations against his wishes; (3) To keep labor "racketeers" and Communists out of Kansas City, its industrial business affairs and the ranks of labor; (4) To show clearly that Kansas City is for preserving the industrial peace it has enjoyed for 15 years and that it will not tolerate either the exploitation of workmen or business by professional agitators.

Other cities in which theatre owners and projectionists and stage hands were fighting over labor issues and working conditions were Canton, Ohio, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, New Orleans and New York.

Theatre Leaders Among Members

Among members of the large executive committee of the new Kansas City Citizens Protective Council are L. J. McCarthy, district manager of Fox Midwest Theatres; Edward Dubinsky, president of Dubinsky Brothers Theatres, and George S. Baker, manager of the Publix Newman.

The local exhibitors' organization—Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City—deferred action on accepting an invitation to join the council. Jay Means, president, said his organization may name a representative. It was pointed out that both the ITO and Mr. Dubinsky's circuit have been embroiled in various disputes with the projectionists' local.

Council spokesmen denied the expressed opinion of local union officials that the new unit is an "employers' association" formed to combat labor unions. The council let it be known that the group is purely a civic enterprise. A membership campaign already is under way and funds are being raised.

Picketing Suit in Canton

Labor trouble in Canton was climaxed by the filing of an injunction suit in common pleas court by the management of the Windsor, a neighborhood theatre, to restrain the local branch of the IATSE from picketing the Windsor.

Local No. 150 of the IATSE, in Los Angeles, was named defendant in a suit filed by Angeles Theatre Corporation, owner of the Leimert theatre, which asks damages of $180,000 for alleged libel, following statements that the theatre was not paying its employees living wages.

In the same city, a protest was filed by the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California with the local NRA compliance board charging the local projectionists' union with attempts to use the labor provisions of the NRA code as "an instrument of oppression" to enforce a "closed shop" at all Los Angeles theatres. There are pending many complaints against independent houses charged by the compliance board with violating the code's wage scale.

Service Strike in Milwaukee

An unusual union dispute was raging in Milwaukee where members of the new Cashiers, Ushers and Doormen's Union were engaging in an unauthorized strike at the Riverside Theatre. Projectionists, stagehands and musicians refused to join the strikers.

In Washington, complaint was withdrawn and appeal dismissed "without prejudice" in the case of Local 38, IATSE, of Detroit, against the Eastown theatre there, involving discharge of union members.

"I look forward to each new issue and believe me, my copies are well finger-marked before they are filed away for future reference. I should certainly not want to do without the Herald."

That's the word from M. R. Harrington, resident manager of the Avalon theatre at Clatskanie, Oregon, who has found that Motion Picture Herald serves, whether he be in a large metropolis or a small town. Formerly at the State in Portland, Ore., Mr. Harrington writes:

"My sole work is now with the Avalon, which, by the way, is my first experience in a small town. I find it very interesting, largely because conditions in a small country town are vastly different than I had been accustomed to working with in the larger cities.

"Has me guessing at times, but I can generally find some new angle, suggested in the Herald, to help me out. I look forward to each new issue and believe me, my copies are well finger-marked before they are filed away for future reference. I should certainly not want to do without the Herald."

SMPE's East Coast Section Convenes

The Atlantic Coast section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers met Wednesday at the Studio Theatre of RCA Photophone, Inc., in New York, to watch a demonstration of RCA's improved system for noiseless recording, developed by the company's engineers.

The new system, first demonstrated several months ago, is said to make it possible to increase the volume range to a considerable degree without introducing distortion and, at the same time, to reduce ground noise to a minimum.

Germany Imposes Drastic New Tax On Importations

The complete withdrawal of American film companies from activity in Germany is seen as a probable result of the imposition this week by the Reich's film chamber of a new permit tax of 20,000 marks (approximately $8,000) on each feature imported into Germany. The import permit tax guarantees only the admission of the film into the country. It is possible that after entrance, a film may be banned entirely by the German censor board.

Heretofore the import tax ranged from 4,000 to 5,000 marks per picture, the new scale amounting to more than a 400 per cent increase. Only American films with certain wide appeal would stand any chance of returning a profit to the producer under the new tax.

Foreign managers in New York this week were unanimous in their expression of opinion that the move appeared a deliberate effort to crowd American films out of the German market. Universal disposed of its German business some time ago, while Warner has been liquidating its interests there since the early days of the Hitler regime. The belief was expressed that the German action may influence similar procedure in neighboring Austria and Hungary.

School Fight Bars Newsreel Theatre

Residents of the borough of Brooklyn in New York on Tuesday witnessed the unusual situation of the city refusing to grant a permit for the erection of a newsreel theatre because of its possible effect on nearby students, and this despite the protests of the sponsors that the newsreel is generally conceded to have some educational value.

The fight over the license had been waged for years, finally ending, at least temporarily, early this week when New York City's license commissioner, Paul Moss, refused to permit construction of another Trans Lux newsreel house on a site adjoining Erasmus Hall High School.

"The argument that this theatre will have only newsreels is not cogent," declared Mr. Moss, whose decision is thought to be the first of its kind made anywhere. Pointing out that the high school principal had objected strenuously to the proposed theatre, Mr. Moss said: "A theatre so easily reachable from the school will tempt young people at luncheon hour or on leaving school, no matter what the showing."

Commissioner Moss indicated that he expected the sponsors of the project would appeal his decision in the courts.

Mr. Moss said a permit for a theatre on the site first was sought in 1921 and that it was denied at that time. In March, 1926, another application was made, but not pursued when the principal objected. Later in that same year a third application was marked approved.

STUDENTS ON RADIO IN STORY-FILM TIEUP

Radio, schools, educational societies and the motion picture industry are scheduled to join hands in a novel radio presentation Friday when a dramatization of scenes from Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations," a current Universal picture, is to be presented on a nationwide NBC hook-up.

Player participants in the broadcast are students from the Weequahic high school in Newark, N. J. The program is a part of the program of the Women's Radio Review, of which Mrs. Claudine MacDonald is director.

Prior to the dramatization Dr. William Lewin, of the high school's English department, will describe the progress made in teaching young folk to make critical evaluations of motion pictures. The Weequahic high school was the scene of the initial experiment to determine the feasibility of teaching photoplay appreciation as part of the regular curriculum.

The dramatization of "Great Expectations" over the air coincides with the delivery of study guides on the film to pupils in 18,000 high schools, all of whom in the next few weeks will have the opportunity of studying "Great Expectations" in film and novel as a part of their classroom work — using as their laboratories neighborhood theatres playing the picture.

PRODUCT INCREASED FOR ITALIAN HOUSES

355 Films for Next Year; Commendatore Freddi Heads New Board Controlling Industry

By VITTORIO MALPASSUTI

Rome Correspondent

Increase of more than half a hundred pictures over the 1934 total is indicated by announced plans for distribution in Italy next year. Of the 355 planned, there will be approximately 30 Italian films.

Product listed tentatively, by companies, for 1935 release is as follows:

Barbieri, 5; Caesar, 9; Colosseum, 22; Consorzio Eja, 22; Curioni, 4; Filmimpero, 35; Fox, 28; Grandi Films, 8; Malpieri, 5; Manderfilm, 10; Manenti, 5; Metro Goldwyn, 28; Minerva, 10; Monogram, 8; Onmisfilm, 6; Paramount, 24; Pittaluga, 53; United Artists, 11; Universal, 11; Warner First, 25; Tirrenia, 6; other companies, 35.

Following is a tabulation, by years, of product availability since the introduction of sound:

Year	Films	Italian
1930	410	4
1931	319	14
1932	270	20

Under a new plan of application of the centralized control, approved by the Italian Council of Ministers at the suggestion of the prime minister, the under-secretary of state for press and propaganda will take over the duties now held by the home office and ministry of corporations in connection with governmental supervision of films and furtherance of national cinematographic production.

A special office for general direction of cinematography was established, with the object of concentrating in it the full state control of the motion picture industry. The director of this office will be Commendatore Luigi Freddi, friend of Mussolini and executive of the newspaper Popolo d'Italia. Comm. Freddi was with Italo Balbo on the decennial flight to America last year. He is a well known Fascist, a young man of talent and splendid possibilities.

Industry Heading Back, Says Laemmle

"We are all on the road back. All we need is the same courage we used to have when this business was younger," last week declared Carl Laemmle, Universal president, in a statement issued in Hollywood. "The whole motion picture business has reason to be happier today than it was a year ago, two years ago, or three years ago," the statement said.

Pointing out the improved situation, Mr. Laemmle said, "The large producing companies which have suffered the torments of the damned during the past few years are now reorganizing, and doing it smartly and successfully." He praised the efforts of

Sidney Kent, Fox; Merlin H. Aylesworth, RKO; Adolph Zukor and George Schaefer, Paramount, in the reorganization, of which he said, "These companies are direct competitors of Universal, but to me they are more than that, they are a part and parcel of the recovery of the whole industry."

Reaction Varied To Warner Plan For Designation

In an early issue MOTION PICTURE HERALD will present in the Release Chart a complete classification of features as to whether they are for general audiences or for adult patronage.

Varied reaction is being registered in the field to the Warner plan of designating pictures shown in its Philadelphia theatres with an "A," for adult, and "F" for family attractions. Only mild interest has been displayed in the Cleveland territory, where exhibitors have long made a practice of running "family night" programs on Friday and Saturday. Results have been reported as only fairly satisfactory.

The plan has met with little favor among exhibitors and managers approached on the subject in Kansas City. The majority local sentiment seems opposed to "herding" pictures and branding them for different audiences. On the other hand, Fox Midwest is acquainting patrons with the policy and C. A. Schultz, president of the Commonwealth Circuit, believes wholeheartedly in the idea, planning to adopt it widely.

Fox West Coast, in Los Angeles, is seriously considering adoption of the policy, with the plan confined to subsequent run houses of the circuit if adopted.

The Grant, Philadelphia neighborhood house, is the first independent to follow the Stanley-Warner method of designation. It is expected that many of the 60 other neighborhood houses which advertise in the Evening Ledger may follow suit.

A generally favorable reaction was reported in St. Louis, where Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, was enthusiastic.

Circuit heads in San Francisco took the position that reviews, advertisements and the like give sufficient indication of the character of each picture, making designations by letter unnecessary. Several organizations of parents and teachers in the city issue weekly bulletins advising members concerning types of pictures.

There is no movement in the direction of designation of pictures in the Pacific Northwest territory, it is indicated from Seattle, and no indication that such action will be taken in the near future. The plan devised by Warner was characterized as entirely unnecessary by Frank L. Newman, general manager of the local Evergreen circuit.

Fox West Coast Bankruptcy Now Near Liquidation

With the petition by the trustees of Fox West Coast in Los Angeles last week to Referee S. W. McNabb to accept a bid by National Theatres Corporation for a private sale of the circuit the liquidation of the Fox West Coast bankruptcy appears certain by the first of the year. National is the new corporate name of the circuit for the purposes of the reorganization.

National would assume all obligations and continue operation, paying 100 cents on the dollar to creditors. The transfer will require the purchasing company to expend approximately $15,000,000 and assume another unadjudicated Paramount claim of $11,000,000 involving theatres the day the sale is authorized by the federal court in Los Angeles. Included in the $15,000,000 is a sum of $581,538, for commissions to receivers, trustees, legal counsel and the referee for services. Trustees Charles P. Skouras, William H. Moore, Jr., and Charles Erwin will receive $230,769 jointly, a similar amount going to O'Melveny, Tuller and Myers, attorneys for the trustees. Referee McNabb will receive $75,000, Charles P. Skouras and John Treanor, as receivers, $15,000, and there will go $25,000 to the law firm for services as attorneys for the receivers. Bailie, Turner and Lake will receive $5,000 for filing the preliminary papers in bankruptcy.

The Paramount-West Coast arrangement calls for Paramount receiving 37 per cent of the net earnings on six Paramount houses in the Northwest, with the Paramount claim expected to work itself out from future earnings.

The court will pass on the bid November 19, when creditors will have an opportunity to register objections at a hearing. Charles Skouras returned to Los Angeles from New York late last week after completing plans for the rehabilitation of 400 theatres in the circuit. A five-year contract for Mr. Skouras as vice-president in charge of operations is ready for signature. Spyros Skouras is a party to the agreement.

Columbia Pictures was granted permission by Federal Judge Martin Manton in New York last week to file a supplemental claim of $2,500 against Fox Theatres Corporation. Columbia's original claim of $500 was among those of creditors who petitioned for reorganization of the company last August. Judge Manton granted the law firm of Watson & Willguss, former attorneys for the Fox Theatres receivers, a final fee of $10,000. Hearings on claims against Fox Theatres Corporation, in equity receivership, will be held November 23 and December 7 before Special Master Cortland Palmer in New York.

Although the 60-day limit for the filing of a reorganization plan for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses in New York expired Tuesday, no plan was submitted at the Tuesday hearing in United States district court. The failure to submit a plan was due partly to the illness of Morton G. Bogue, chairman and counsel for the bondholders' committee. A 30-day time extension was allowed by the court for the filing of a claim.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of grosses, compares the business done during the month of October, 1934, with the receipts for the same month in 1933 and 1932. For each of the twelve cities shown, the white bar (100 per cent) represents the 1932 figure; the shaded bar indicates the 1933 figure; and the black bar gives the gross for the current year. In the chart which appeared in the November 3rd issue, due to a typographical error the average weekly gross for 1932 was listed as the 100 per cent base. The 1933 average weekly receipts were taken as 100 per cent in the November 3rd graph.

New RKO Loan Seen Blocked by Debenture Issue

It was indicated last week that second liens on the RKO collateral securing the $1,425,000 of gold notes outstanding may prevent the trustee from negotiating a bank loan with which to retire the full amount of the notes at one time, in accordance with the instructions of Federal Judge William Bondy.

The collateral on the notes, which are held by Consolidated Film Industries, has a book value of $50,000,000, and represents almost the entire RKO investment in its subsidiaries. In approving the RKO-Consolidated agreement for extending maturities on the notes from next January 1 to May 1, 1938, Judge Bondy instructed Irving Trust Company, trustee, to negotiate a bank loan to retire the notes at one time and effect a saving in interest.

It is pointed out now that under the terms of RKO's $11,600,000 debenture issue, such action may not be possible, since the debentures are a second lien on the collateral securing the gold notes. RKO has been unable to negotiate a reduction of interest on the gold notes through Consolidated. The agreement recently approved, however, provides that RKO may accelerate retirement of the notes at its own convenience, the retirement period ending May 1, 1938.

Exhibitors Drop Suit

Acting on the request of four complaining exhibitors, the federal court at Lincoln, Neb. this week dismissed four actions against large producers who were sued for $217,000 by Clarence Kramer, Stanton; C. N. Robinson, Blair; Eric Wesselman, Pierce, and G. Griffin, of Plattsmouth, all in Nebraska.

Apple Annie, Once Publicity Aide, Dies in New York

A gust of wind blew through a small furnished room in Lower Manhattan one night last week, extinguished the flame of a gas heater, and Mrs. Helen McCarthy, 70, and her husband, Thomas, were asphyxiated. That was more than a week ago, and the two bodies rested in the morgue for several days, with the strong possibility that they would eventually repose in Potter's Field. But detective Henry White, of the Missing Persons Bureau, searching for possible relatives, suddenly discovered that Helen McCarthy was "Apple Annie," who peddled fruit from a basket for years in Shubert Alley on 45th street in New York. The newspapers got the facts and "Apple Annie," in death this time, was once more swept back into newspaper headlines, where she had been in September, 1933.

Damon Runyon, prolific writer, had woven a short story about "Apple Annie," and Columbia Pictures Corporation had made that story into a motion picture, called "Lady for a Day," and starring May Robson. Then publicity representatives Lou Goldberg and Leo Freedman went to work.

A real "Apple Annie" was found, in the person of Helen McCarthy, and really made a "lady for a day," with all the trimmings, including a sumptuous hotel suite, the finest clothes, a chauffeured limousine and the like. Then she returned to the Alley.

That was all that was heard, or thought of "Apple Annie" until a detective, on routine assignment, discovered who she was. Whereupon Columbia Pictures assumed the cost of a dignified funeral for Helen McCarthy and her husband, Thomas, and the story was in the newspapers again.

50 FROM HOLLYWOOD IN BRITISH PICTURES

And Raid Is Spreading, with Indications the Number Will Top 100 by First of Year

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

That British producers for some time have been conducting a consistent and determined raid on Hollywood brains is a commonplace, but it is doubtful if, even in Hollywood, it is generally realized to what a pitch the campaign has now been carried.

Hollywood celebrities are at the present moment engaged in British production in such numbers that any attempt to compile a complete list of names is bound to fail; arrivals and departures make it obsolete as soon as written.

This is, in itself, a very significant fact. A very few years ago, the presence of one Hollywood star in a British studio would have been a front page story.

A Matter of Course

Today we take it as a matter of course that CLIVE BROOK and MADELEINE CARROLL, both British, but both Hollywood stars, should be playing in "The Dictator" for Toeplitz; that ERNEST LUBITSH should have signed a director's contract with the same company; that JOHN BARRYMORE should be scheduled for a film for London Film Productions.

Here are a few of the many other stars and directors who at the moment this is written, are actually engaged at the studios:

LUPE VELEZ is at Twickenham, well away with her scenes for "The Morals of Marcus" under the direction of Miles Mander.

BUSTER KEATON has returned to the States after making "The Intruder" for British & Continental, with LUPITA TOVAR opposite.

PHILLIPS HOLMES is playing in "Ten Minutes Alibi" for British Lion at Beaconsfield; Bernhard Vorhaus directs.

PAUL ROBESON and NINA MAE MCKINNEY are playing in "Bosambo" for London Films at Elstree.

JOE ROCK and RALPH CEDER, as producer and director, are permanent members of the Leslie Fuller production organization.

Heads Unit, Wife Stars

IRVING ASHER is chief of Warner-First National's British unit at Teddington, and his wife, LAURA LA PLANTE, is one of the contract stars.

REGINALD DENNY has just been signed by Warner, and RALPH INCE is directing one of their current productions, "Murder at Monte Carlo."

THORNTON FREELAND is directing "Brewster's Millions" at British and Dominions studio, Elstree, and LILI DAMITA is also on the British & Dominions list.

WILLIAM BEAUDINE is another at Elstree, for B. I. P. He is directing "Dandy Dick."

Also on the B. I. P. lot are NILS ASTHER and ADRIENNE AMES, both in the cast of "Abdul Hamid," while HELEN CHANDLER has just returned to America after completing her scenes in two films.

GEORGE ARLISS completed his first British production, "The Iron Duke," for Gaumont-British and is to return for two more at a later date.

LOTHAR MENDES is directing for Gaumont-British, his big picture being "Jew Suss" ("Power").

BERTHOLD VIETTEL is another Gaumont-British director from Hollywood.

ROWLAND BROWN and AL SANTELL, after disagreements with London Films and Toeplitz, are still in London and may tie up with other studios.

MICHAEL WRIGHT, designing costumes for B. I. P.'s "The Old Curiosity Shop," comes from the MGM and Paramount studios in Hollywood.

And Music Writers

MAURICE SIGLER, AL HOFFMAN and ALBERT GOODHEART, authors of "Little Man, You've Had a Busy Day," are British captures from America in a subsidiary but important department of production. They are writing special music for Les Allen, the British broadcasting crooner, who is to star in "The Code" for Gaumont-British.

The names of FREDERIC MARCH and CHARLES LAUGHTON are among those with Hollywood associations appearing in the announcement of future London Film plans, and London's raid on Hollywood, due to its star exchange agreement with Twentieth Century, is likely to go much further. MAURICE CHEVALIER and RONALD COLMAN are early probabilities.

JACK OKEY, studio architect, is here planning the new London plant.

This list pays no attention to such long established Hollywood immigrants as T. HAYES HUNTER, director, CHRIS VAN ENGER and GLEN MCWILLIAMS, cameramen with G-B, and to various experts in studio, laboratory and sound recording departments who are either American or have American experience, but whose work does not bring them into the publicity.

A complete "Hollywood in London Who's Who" probably would run well above 50 names, and all the indications are that it will top the hundred in 1935.

Warner, Sears and Smith To Coast for Conferences

Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner Brothers, and Gradwell Sears and A. W. Smith, Jr., left New York for Hollywood Thursday by airplane to confer with Jack L. Warner and other production heads.

The first object of the trip is to set up arrangements for the release of six new pictures: "Bordertown," "Sweet Adeline," "Sweet Music," "Devil Dogs of the Air," "Gold Diggers of 1935" and "The Right to Live."

Mrs. Gilman Is Guest

Mrs. Robins Gilman, motion picture chairman of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, will be guest at a luncheon this week at the Monteleone Hotel, New Orleans, in the course of an eastern and southern tour.

Wirelessed Newsreel

Gaumont-British News

Gaumont British claimed a newsreel "scoop" for all times when they wirelessed eight feet of film from Australia to London, at a cost of $30,264, showing a glimpse of Scott and Black as they alighted at Melbourne to win the international race from England to Australia. The quality of the telephoto reproduction was, as can be seen in the photo above, roughly equivalent to that of televised still pictures as reproduced in newspapers. The center figure in the reproduction is Aviator Scott, who was photographed talking to Jean Batten, the Australian woman flier, just as he alighted from his scarlet Comet which carried him and Captain Black over the 9,000-mile course in 71 hours. The reproduction above is understood to be the first to be published in this country.

Salt Lake Group Sponsors Films

The Salt Lake City Council of Parents and Teachers this week inaugurated its new policy of sponsoring weekly one complete day's showing of films selected for their character-building values by the organization.

The Capitol theatre was selected by the Council as the most suitable location for the experiment. Perry Rockwood, Utah State Better Films chairman, will select special subjects for children. The organization has received the cooperation of Mayor Louis Marcus, theatre man.

McAdoo's Daughter Weds Film Actor

Ellen Wilson McAdoo, granddaughter of the late President Woodrow Wilson and daughter of Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, was married Saturday in Albuquerque, N. M., to Ralph Lopez de Onate, motion picture actor.

Allied Legislative Program Ready; Three Units Elect

Allied States Association is prepared to move forward with its three-point legislative program, it was indicated last week by Sidney Samuelson, president. The national exhibitor organization of independents seeks to remove the music tax imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, a complete revision of the code and Code Authority organization, and the elimination of block booking. However, Mr. Samuelson did not outline plans to the New Jersey unit at its regular meeting this week, as was expected. Directors of the national organization will meet in New Orleans early in December.

Four cities, New Orleans, Milwaukee, Memphis and Los Angeles, are bidding for the 1935 convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in the spring.

Ray Branch, Hastings, was reelected president of Allied of Michigan at its convention at the Durant Hotel in Flint last week. Other officers named were: Frank Wetsman, Detroit, vice-president; William Schuttenhelm, Detroit, treasurer; Barney Kilbridge, Detroit, secretary.

Directors elected include Samuel Brown, M. J. Chagot, Fred Delodder, E. E. Kirchner, William London, James Ritter, F. H. Schneider, Alec Schreiber, J. E. Stocker, Lew Wisper, all of Detroit; A. Eiseman and James Minter, Flint; G. A. Cross, Battle Creek; W. A. Cassidy, Midland; Allen Johnson, W. E. Goodrich, Roy Taylor, all of Grand Rapids; J. C. Peck, Fenton; P. C. Schram, Kalamazoo. The convention went on record against the ASCAP music taxes.

The Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, of which Charles W. Picquet is president, will hold its 22d annual convention at the Hotel Charlotte in Charlotte, N. C., December 9 and 10.

Allied of New Jersey held a beefsteak dinner at Irvington, N. J., last week.

Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, in annual convention on Tuesday at the Hotel Kirkwood, Des Moines, elected E. O. Ellsworth president, succeeding Clifford Niles. Lester Martin was reelected secretary-treasurer, and the following were named directors: E. C. Potter, New Hampton; Wayne Dutton, Manchester; A. J. Swanton, Emmetsburgh; Leo Wolcott, Eldora; H. A. Larson, Oakland; Tom Brown, Iowa City, and Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Niles. Members agreed to subscribe to a "war chest" of $50,000 to investigate the reasons why exhibitors are refused "timely pictures" and to delve into the block booking and subsequent run problems.

In Washington, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the District of Columbia reelected A. Julian Brylawski president for the tenth time. Other officers, also reelected, included: Sidney Lust, vice-president; Nat B. Browne, secretary; William Herbst, treasurer, and the executive committee composed of Charles Olive, J. William Cleveland, Nathan Stiefel, John Payette and Louis Bernheimer. Mr. Lust was also named representative to all national MPTO meetings.

The Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City decided this week to reconsider possible affiliation with Allied.

EXHIBITORS PROTEST CLEARANCE DELAYS

Charge "Deliberate Stalling" as Kansas City Schedule Is Turned Down by Distributors

With the motion picture Code Authority apparently getting no place quickly in enacting standard clearance and zoning schedules, well informed sources in New York distribution circles said this week that exhibitors suspicious of the delays are now expressing themselves in charges of "procrastination" and "deliberate stalling."

Some distributors are reported to be opposed to any standard form of clearance arrived at in open discussion and in subsequent public hearings. They hold that it is the privilege of a distributor to bargain privately with his exhibitor client and to sell protection along with the product, both having a direct bearing on the rental. This is said to be the real story behind distributors' protest against clearance and zoning schedules brought to New York for a hearing before adoption.

Schaefer and Golden to Kansas City

The Code Authority late Tuesday named George J. Schaefer of Paramount, chairman of the Authority's clearance and zoning committee, and Edward Golden, general sales manager of Monogram and an alternate for W. Ray Johnston on the Authority, to travel immediately to Kansas City to attempt to iron out the difficulties in that schedule.

The Kansas City schedule was brought before the Code Authority for approval Tuesday and was returned when distributors objected to certain passages. Exhibitors, with the general feeling that the Kansas City schedule would be a test, saw the entire clearance and zoning structure under the code in jeopardy.

Refusing to be identified because of his position, an important distributor spokesman who believes there are benefits for both distributors and exhibitors in standard clearance schedules, said Tuesday: "If theatre owners everywhere fully realized what unlimited clearance resulting from the non-existence of standard schedules means to them, there would be wholesale protests by the carload."

The Code Authority promises action as soon as the Kansas City situation is disposed of on November 22, after hearings in that city over the weekend. Appeal hearings will be held by the Authority in New York on schedules for Atlanta, Jacksonville, Birmingham, Cleveland, New Haven, Hartford, Bridgeport, Memphis, New Orleans and Dallas. Others that have been appealed from decisions of Local Clearance and Zoning Boards are the schedules for Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Columbus, Dayton, Buffalo, Indianapolis, San Francisco, San Jose, Detroit, Portland, Seattle and Provo, Utah. It is expected that these schedules will be made to conform with the model that will be developed out of the Kansas City conflict.

Numerous Grievances Before Boards

The question of admissions and their relation to protection continued to be one of the sore spots standing in the way of the schedules, exhibitors contending that an admission basis is the logical consideration, whereas distributors want to "sell" protection.

Complaints filed by exhibitors against competitors and against exchanges were on the calendar of virtually every Local Grievance Board, while the Code Authority in New York was considering two dozen appeals. Complaints involved, principally, price cutting, overbuying, "bank nights," alleged breaches of contract, forcing of short subjects with feature sales, premature advertising and other clauses on trade practices.

Formal discussions pointed toward prohibition of premiums in some sections.

A court fight loomed in Kansas City when premium manufacturers and the minority exhibitors decided to ask the federal courts to rule on constitutionality of the ban. Proponents of premium giveaways in that city charged that the voting was not conducted properly and that the required 75 per cent of owners did not participate in the balloting. Some exhibitors indicated they would defy the prohibition.

From Washington came word that instalments of serial motion pictures are not "short subjects" within the meaning of the term as used in Part 5, Division D, Article 5 of the code in limiting the proportion of shorts a distributor may require an exhibitor to purchase in contracting for features.

Producers' Assessments Effective

The National Recovery Administration at Washington announced Friday that the bases of contribution to code administration for producers and distributors and for exhibitors had finally become effective, adding that the Code Authority is operating under an approved $260,000 budget for 1934. Of that amount, $180,000 is to be contributed by producer-distributors and $80,000 by the exhibitors.

Members of the production-distribution division will be assessed amounts ranging from $120 for members whose gross domestic revenue in 1933 did not exceed $12,000, up to $23,000 for members whose gross for 1933 totaled more than $20,000,000. Classification of producers and distributors into 14 groups is made to determine the assessments, which in their final form are as follows:

Not over $12,000.....	$120
$12,001 to $25,000.....	142
$25,001 to $50,000.....	215
$50,001 to $100,000.....	350
$100,001 to $250,000.....	700
$250,001 to $500,000.....	1,000
$500,001 to $750,000.....	1,575
$750,001 to $1,000,000.....	2,000
$1,000,001 to $2,500,000.....	3,250
$2,500,001 to $5,000,000.....	6,250
$5,000,001 to $10,000,000.....	12,000
$10,000,001 to $15,000,000.....	17,500
$15,000,001 to $20,000,000.....	20,000
Over $20,000,000.....	23,000

The NRA at Washington appointed Charles P. Melton, of National Cinema Service, Inc., St. Louis, the Administration's representative on the Code Authority of the reduction machinery division of the Machinery and Allied Products Code.

J. Buckley Russell and Mrs. George Henry Hines, clubwoman, succeeded Larry Steers and Mrs. Lydia Hopkins, respectively, on the grievance and compliance board for the extras committee in Hollywood.

Tri-Ergon Seeks Permission To Sue in New York Court

The American Tri-Ergon Company acted this week to obtain authorization to sue the Paramount-Publix trustees in the United States district court in New York following refusal last week of Judge Marcus B. Campbell in Brooklyn federal court to allow that procedure there.

PARAMOUNT PLAN IN TWO WEEKS: COHEN

Production Executive Confirms Belief No Important Executive Changes Will Be Made

The Paramount Publix management and trustees and the vast array of legal talent are now beginning to assemble the last loose threads preparatory to submission of the final formal plan of reorganization.

That the date for the announcement, while still undetermined, cannot be very far off was indicated Monday when Emanuel Cohen, vice-president in charge of production, arrived back in Hollywood and said: "I am happy to find that reorganization of Paramount has reached the final stages with actual plans to be announced within the fortnight."

Final Problems

Understood to be among the final problems before the plan of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. will be ready are: Allied Owners' $23,000,000 claim, Electrical Research Products' claim of $1,800,000, and some internal complexities involving stock transfers, said to have resulted in a minor division within the principal stockholders' group, the committee headed by Duncan A. Holmes and representing some 50 per cent of outstanding Paramount shares.

Taking Mr. Cohen's prediction, together with unofficial expressions, it appears that the plan will be completed by December 1, which could result in a reorganization by January 1.

Mr. Cohen, interviewed at Albuquerque, New Mexico, on his way back to the studio, confirmed the general belief that there will be no important executive changes.

Both Mr. Cohen and the management itself publicly denounced publication in Hollywood of reports that a complete upheaval of the executive production force was imminent.

Sales Drive Starts January 1

In the distribution division, salesmen and branch managers, bookers and division and district officials were preparing for a three months special sales campaign starting January 1, with $10,000 to be awarded. All employees of the winning exchanges will share.

The United States district court for the southern district of New York will rule November 21 on a recommendation filed Tuesday by special master John E. Joyce, that applications of Paramount counsel, trustees and others for services and allowances in the amount of $720,000 be reduced to $350,000, and so paid.

Application of Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine for an allowance of $350,000 was reduced to $225,000. The firm is counsel to the trustees. Application of trustees Charles Hilles, Eugene Leake and Charles Richardson was reduced from $300,000 to $97,000. Mr. Joyce recommended reduction to $97,000 because he believes the bankruptcy law restricting trustee allowances to 2 per cent of all monies paid out by them on behalf of the bankrupt estate should prevail in this instance.

Other reductions recommended by Mr. Joyce were: application of Price Waterhouse and Company, accountants, reduced from $15,228 to $10,000; application of Rosenberg, Goldmark and Colin, counsel for Paramount Publix, cut from $7,500 to $3,500; application of Barrow, Wade, Guthrie and Company, special accountants for the trustees, pared from $21,870 to $10,000.

Mr. Joyce recommended numerous additional smaller allowances for services and disbursements between April, 1933, at the end of the equity receivership, and June 16, 1934, when Paramount became a debtor corporation for reorganization under the new bankruptcy law.

The management and the trustees were progressing with reorganization of the Olympic Theatres circuit in New England, which may be completed in a week.

An agreement on E. V. Richards' reorganized Saenger theatres was reached Wednesday, clearing the way for immediate reorganization of that circuit. The revised plan, after terms of the agreement have been inserted, will be filed in New York for federal court approval. Mr. Richards' stock ownership in the new company will be reduced, it is understood.

The scheduled hearing in New York federal court on Wednesday in the Paramount trustee suit against the so-called $13,200,000 creditor banking group was postponed to November 21. A settlement of the bank claims has been reached but cannot be made effective until the reorganization plan is completed. Meanwhile the trustees retain their cause of action.

Screen Guild To Get Own Charter

Further study of the publicly announced proposal of the Screen Actors Guild of Hollywood to join Actors Equity Association resulted Tuesday in both groups agreeing to place the Guild with the Associated Actors and Artists of America, as a chartered unit, rather than make it a direct affiliate of Equity.

The move was made suddenly following a series of conferences at Equity headquarters in New York participated in by President Frank Gillmore and other Equity officials and Kenneth Thomson, Guild secretary, and Lawrence Beilenson, counsel.

The original plan calling for establishment of the Guild as the film branch of Equity, Thomson and Beilenson left Thursday to submit the new plan to Guild members.

Equity's council voted not to oppose the Guild's application to join Associated Actors and Artists, which, when accepted, will give the Guild autonomy in the motion picture field. AAAA is the international organization of all actors, exercising jurisdiction over the entire field for the American Federation of Labor. Issuance of a charter to the Screen Guild would place it on a par in the AFL with Equity, although both the Guild and Equity would be tied in through an arrangement whereby any stage player engaged for motion picture work would first be required to join the Guild, and any screen player engaged for the stage would have to take out membership in Equity. Also, in the event of a strike in either branch, the players belonging to one group would not be available for work in the division on strike.

THE BROADWAY STAGE—1920 TO 1934

The Broadway stage, representing the drama in this country, is staking its future for many years to come on this new show season of 1934-35. The so-called "legitimate" production long since gave up the ghost as a serious competitor to the motion picture, and, regardless of its progress henceforth, it is generally considered unlikely that the stage ever will be resurrected in a form that will cause the motion picture exhibitor any concern.

Taking their cue from the results of an investigation into the present status of the drama as just announced by the Billboard Theatrical Index, students of the professional stage and old observers along Broadway have formed the opinion that the present season will tell the tale. Some progress, even if slight, has been registered at the beginning of this season, in September, October and November.

The legitimate stage reached the lowest business level of modern times during the season of 1932-33. The season 1933-34, recorded in the latest analysis, had been confidently looked to as the one to lift the theatre out of the slough in which it had languished since the combined effect of the general business deflation and the advent of talking pictures had sent it sliding down the descent. That the past season failed to do what was expected is evidenced by the compilation detailing the performance structure of the stage as outlined above.

It was agreed that more money was made by stage attractions during 1933-34 than during any season since the beginning of the depression—but virtually all branches of the amusement structure reported healthier grosses last season than for the previous three years. Regardless, the theatrical business is confronted with the able fact that the total number of commercial premieres on Broadway dropped even below, though slightly, the low level of the preceding year. Employment in the theatre also dropped—and severely.

Probably the most encouraging sign that the theatre had held forth in the last six years was found in the investigation made by the Billboard Theatrical Index on rebirth of the road—and it is in the "road" show that the motion picture exhibitor is mostly concerned as a competitor.

The total number of players and stage workers and staff members actually involved in 1933-34 stage productions, exclusive of chorus folk in musicals, was 2,726, or 1,384 less than the number engaged in 1932-33.

The 154 plays produced on Broadway last season embraced the efforts of 118 stage directors, 59 scenic designers, 50 lyric writers and 57 composers, 19 librettists, 14 dance directors and 18 sketch writers.

"Men in White" had the longest run of the season, playing to 357 performances. "Music in the Air" was the musical leader, playing to 342 performances. "Strange Orchestra" closed after a single show.

Warner Plans to Use New Stages for Cosmopolitan

Four new stages, being constructed at the Warner studio at an estimated cost of $400,000, will be used for the Cosmopolitan Productions and Marion Davies unit, which move from MGM to Warner on January 1. E. B. Hatrick, Hearst Cosmopolitan representative, declared on his return to New York this week that Cosmopolitan will not make its usual quota of six, usually including two with Marion Davies, because of lack of time on the current release schedule. MGM is now releasing "Evelyn Prentice," the last Cosmopolitan film to be made on the MGM lot.

Tom Mix in a Serial

Tom Mix will return from the circus and rodeo to motion pictures in a 15-chapter serial for Mascot Pictures, Nat Levine announced. Scheduled to start on December 1, the serial will be called "Texas Ranger." Mix's horse, Tony, will appear with him.

Hornstein Quits Warner; Independent Supply Agent

Joseph C. Hornstein resigned last week as purchasing head of Warner Bros. and president of Continental Theatre Accessories. On Monday Mr. Hornstein's duties were taken over by Herman Maier, head of Warner's construction and maintenance department, who will combine the two posts.

Mr. Hornstein announced that he will re-enter the independent theatre equipment field as an independent agent.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

Hollywood Correspondent

FIRST to realize the commercial and entertainment value of sound, with "The Jazz Singer" resulting; first to exploit the gangster in talking picture and make him a box office asset, and first to revive the girl glamorous and spectacular musicals, Warner Brothers is again in the vanguard, this time with Shakespearean production.

A few months ago, Max Reinhardt landed in Hollywood and to the accompaniment of one of the greatest showmanship exploitation campaigns ever waged, staged "A Midsummer Night's Dream." With the personnel of the motion picture colony lending unstinted assistance, the intelligentsia as well as the general patronage responded enthusiastically.

The triumph being repeated in the San Francisco bay area, producers began to believe that maybe there was something to this Shakespeare stuff. But while others dillied and dallied, Jack Warner was the one who got Mr. Reinhardt's name on a contract.

Now, with acceptance of the Charles Kenyon and Mary McCall adaptation of the century-old comedy, the studio is in a turmoil getting ready for its production. Reinhardt will direct. William Dieterle and Henry Blanke will supervise. The original Mendelssohn music, rearranged and modernized by Erich Wolfgang Korngold, famous German composer, will be featured. Max Ree, who was costume designer for many of Reinhardt's European successes, will do the costumes. Anton Grot, also previously associated with the director, is heading a corps of artists and mechanics creating and building the sets.

Only one actor, Mickey Rooney, who played the role of Puck in the Hollywood Bowl presentation, has been signed to date. But the producers are finding no trouble in locating individuals who would like to play; their effort is escaping volunteers.

The strange part of the ambitious player hysteria is that many don't seem to care whether a salary is paid or not. All they want is the honor of playing Shakespeare. Adolphe Menjou says that the Warners shouldn't worry whether or not they make a nickel on the production, but he'd like to share in the prestige they will gain. Frank McHugh, on the stage and in pictures for 25 years, but never any closer to the Bard of Avon's shows than reading about them, would sacrifice any role for the chance.

And with the new Hearst affiliation, it appears that Shakespeare will at least be publicized to the masses.

On His Own

Busby Berkeley is now a 100 per cent director. "Gold Diggers of 1935" will be his first sole responsibility. When the industry and its patrons had a look at "42nd Street," with the spectacle and beauty of its intricate dance ensembles, credit sheets were consulted, revealing that Busby Berkeley had created and directed them. Sure they remembered him; he had done the same thing for two or three Eddie Cantor pictures, "Whoopie," "Palmy Days" and "Kid From Spain."

Then came, in succession, "Gold Diggers," "Footlight Parade," "Roman Scandals," "Wonderbar" and "Dames," all to pile up great grosses.

Berkeley is a Los Angeles boy born of a theatrical family. Reversing Horace Greeley's advice, he went east and got himself an acting job in New York. Never a star, he went all the way through training school, however, to blossom as a director and be associated with Sigmund Romberg, Rudolph Friml and Oscar Hammerstein operettas. Then came success with the "Connecticut Yankee," which ran for 20 months in New York, and with an Earl Carroll show.

News Flashes

Vaudeville is popping up in Hollywood each Sunday night at the Wilshire Ebell theatre, where for the past five Sundays Jack Osterman and Irving Strouse have presented a balanced bill of variety acts from talent here engaged in, or seeking, picture work.

Last Sunday night the Masquers presented their first Revel, to which the public was invited at box-office prices. The Masquers intend making the Revel, which is really eight or nine acts of vaudeville, a monthly feature.

Denies Producers Withdrawing

Spiking persistent rumors that several producers plan withdrawing their membership from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to permit the creative talent to negotiate collective bargaining more freely, Frank Lloyd, the newly elected president, scoffed at the reports and said:

"I am more convinced than ever, particularly in our new setup, that the functions of the Academy would be materially handicapped without the producer members."

Mr. Lloyd declared that while past decisions of the Academy have been more than two to one in favor of the employee, the producers have accepted these verdicts and are willing to continue as minority members in consideration of the peaceful methods and recognized benefits which the Academy is conferring on the industry.

The studio publicity directors at their semi-monthly meeting in the local Motion Picture Producers' Association office unanimously went on record as refusing any further cooperation to the Movie Humor and Real Screen Fun publications because of their practice of tying up semi-nude Broadway show girls with studio production stills, giving the impression without reading the captions that such objectionable art is emanating from the motion picture studios.

Film Fun was also up for discussion for similar practices, but upon assurance from that

Seven Features Started

With the total of pictures in work taking a slight drop, seven new features were started during the week and six were completed. Universal and Warner each had two of the new starters, and Paramount, MGM and Mascot one each. Columbia completed two and Paramount, Universal, Fox and Mascot account for the remaining four.

Both the new Universal productions are dramas, a quality readily read into the explicit titles. The first, "I Murdered a Man," will feature Charles Bickford, Helen Vinson, Onslow Stevens, John Darrow and Dudley Digges. In its companion piece, "Rendezvous at Midnight," Ralph Bellamy, Valerie Hobson, Catherine Doucet and Irene Ware are starred.

Sophisticated romance drama is the trend at Warner. In "North Shore" Barbara Stanwyck, Genevieve Tobin, John Arledge, Dorothy Tree and Claude Gillingwater will be seen. "Living on Velvet," which marks Kay Francis' return to the screen, will feature George Brent and Warren William in support roles.

Paramount's new activity is "Ruggles of Red Gap." This new version of Harry Leon Wilson's story, which will be given a comedy music tinged twist, stars Charles Laughton and presents Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts, Roland Young, Leila Hyams and Maude Eburne.

With "The Winning Ticket," MGM starts a series of down-to-earth comedies for its forthcoming program. The picture will be directed by Charles Riesner, maker of "Politics" and "Caught Short," in collaboration with Jack Cummings. Cast for the new feature are Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healey, Louis Alberni, Irene Hervey and James Ellison.

Mascot's special, "Little Men," a Louisa M. Alcott classic, was put in work. Adults featured include Erin O'Brien-Moore, Ralph Morgan and Phyllis Fraser. Juveniles are Cora Sue Collins, Frankie Darro, Trent Durkin, David Durand, Buster Phelps, Dickie Moore, Tad Alexander and Ronnie Cosby.

Varied Films Finished

On the completed side of the ledger, the entertainment trend is widely varied. First of Columbia's finished pair, "Quicksands" is a western. Tim McCoy is starred and the supporting cast includes Jacqueline Wells, J. Farrell Macdonald, John Darrow, Charles Middleton, Erville Alderson, Steve Clark and Wheeler Oakman. "Mills of the Gods," a family-business drama, has its cast headed by May Robson.

At Paramount "Me Without You," formerly titled "One Hour Late," a comedy romance, features Joe Morrison, Helen Twelvetrees, Conrad Nagel, Arline Judge and Toby Wing. Among the support are Ray Milland, Edward Craven, Ray Walker, Charles Sellon, Gail Patrick and Jack Mulhall.

"Strange Wives," the completed Universal feature, is a comedy romance drama in which Roger Pryor, June Clayworth, Esther Ralston, Ralph Forbes and Hugh O'Connell will be seen.

The Fox feature, "Bright Eyes," is one more for Shirley Temple. James Dunn is again her leading man and the cast includes Judith Allen, Lois Wilson and Theodore von Eltz.

Mascot completed "Marines Are Coming." Featured are William Haines, Esther Ralston, Conrad Nagel, Hale Hamilton, Edgar Kennedy and Armida.

'WILL MAKE STUDIO LEAP WITH GLEE'

Is Comment of DeCasseres on "Personal Opinion"; Four Plays Analyzed for Picture Content

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

PERSONAL APPEARANCE

Brock Pemberton as a producer is seldom heard from. But he suddenly fell athwart Broadway with a whirlwind of a hit—the first blown-in-the-bottle comedy smash of the season.

I do not exaggerate when I tell you that the laughter that greeted this play by Lawrence Riley—a play that satirizes a "famous picture star" and razzes the Hollywood game to a fare-you-well—fairly rocked the Henry Miller theatre to the coalbin in the sub-cellar. Over and over it stopped the show—while the audience howled, bellowed, guffawed, and at the final curtain (which descends on a naughty-naughty word that can not go into the picture version) it whistled, stamped and rose as if to assault with kisses everybody concerned in "Personal Appearance."

"Personal Appearance" is good till next fall, I think—with the picture jack bellowing to get into Mr. Pemberton's pocket.

Although "Personal Appearance" is a Hollywood spoof, it is all laid in the Struthers household, on Route Six, between Scranton and Wilkes-Barre.

It opens with a picture in a theatre in Scranton—a Benjamin Z. Fineberg Production. The heroine of this old-hat love scene is played by the great and only Carole Arden, a combination of Mae West and Connie Bennett.

Carole then makes a personal appearance. (In private life she is the wandering wife of Benny Fineberg himself.) This "personal appearance" is uproariously funny.

On the way to Wilkes-Barre for another "pussional," the Rolls-Hispano-Isotta puts into the Struthers yard for gas, for the Struthers run a Socony station.

The car is decidedly out of order. The great star has got to put up in the Struthers household. She is in a rage at this—when the young man who runs the gas station walks into the room and changes the complexion of everything.

She tries to get this young man to Hollywood by making him believe that he has a great invention to revolutionize the camera. For a while this threatens to bust up a romance between the boy and his girl.

The press rep. has got to maneuver Carole out of this sex-ditch (part of his job). So, cleverly, he tells her the girl is about to have a baby. Touches her heart, etc.

And when Carole discovers that her press rep. has lied she utters that forbidden word, and all blow out on their way to Pittsburgh, leaving the Struthers—boy and all—where they were. But they have had the day of their vanal lives.

Gladys George did superbly as the Big Noise of Pictures. She has hit the trail for high honors. Her attempts at highbrow English are—well—well!

The dialogue is sharp as a tiger's tooth, the lines on Hollywood merciless. It will make the picture lots leap with glee.

Picture value, 90 per cent.

WITHIN THE GATES

In spite of the two-year tomtom beating by the Immaculate, the Omniscient and the Incorruptible George Jean Nathan of Sean O'Casey's "Within the Gates," I must record with broken voice and tear-blotted eyes that this play is one of the hollowest, one of the most meaningless, one of the most inflated and blowsy that I have ever seen.

And for pictures—hardly anything as it now stands.

All the more is this to be regretted because the O'Casey is a man of supreme talent in the theatre. He has written two masterpieces, "Juno and the Paycock" and "The Plough and the Stars," the latter containing great—even sublime—picture material.

"Within the Gates" is an "up-to-date" (?) morality play laid in Hyde Park, London. Although the producers (George Bushar and John Tuerk) gave it a fine cast—with Melvyn Douglas staging it—including the moon-blossomy beauty, Lillian Gish, and the convincing Moffat Johnston and the competent Mary Morris and the romantic-looking Bramwell Fletcher—with incidental anemic dances and music—the "morality" part of it was ancient, a kind of a mixture of "Pilgrim's Progress," "The Harlot's Progress," a pinch of Bernard Shaw and a load of the seraphic Channing Pollock.

Why, boy, there's more real life, blood, flesh, and comic (or dramatic) meaning in 10 minutes of Mae West than in this whole bag of stuffed dummies in the O'Casey-Nathan "masterpiece."

The core of the antics in this what-is-it is Shall the Church, in the person of the Bishop, reclaim the soul (yowzir, the soul!) of the street-walker or shall it go into the Gay Hereafter of the Dreamer, a pagan bum of purest mush serene?—who when La Gish lies stretched out hard-breathing with the death rattle beckons her upward and onward to diviner sexual catching in some celestial and poorly policed Hyde Park.

The "drama" is further artificially bolstered up by the fact that this street-walker is a daughter of the Bishop, a product of his early rambling youth.

Now, as to a picture, I advise (if a picture is ever considered) that the O'Casey script be handed over to Ben Hecht and Charlie MacArthur for a complete rewrite, with W. C. Fields directing.

Picture value, 12 per cent.

HIPPER'S HOLIDAY

This is a crazy "snatch" story by John Crump (Marian Carter producing).

It didn't get very far with the Broadway audience, not because, I think, a good kidnaping drama or farce wouldn't go, but because this kind of kidnaping was shaky in the hams and had too much stale beer in its innards. In a word, bad construction.

It would not surprise me, however, if some bright and blustery day when I wander into a picture-house between two ale-stops I should see a screen version of this master-work of pure botching, which, however, let it be recorded, contains a good central picture situation.

Tough guy on street suggests to another fellow not quite so tough, who runs a soft-drink stand, that they buy a toy pistol and stick up a rich fellow—oh, any fellow who looks in the mon will do.

The orange-squeezer needs some loose jack because he is going to become a father. So let's go!

They truss up a miscellaneous fellow, then, in the apartment of an ex-speak-easy proprietor. The soft-drink guy has charge of the gold-fish in this apartment.

They want $1,000 to release the kidnaped man; but he hasn't got it. And he's as mum as a 10-year-old debt.

And here's the gentle laugh. It turns out that the kidnaped man has fifty thousand dollars in a little chamois bag underneath his shirt, and thereby hangs a tale of a South American gun-deal. (Good Chaco sequence here for picture product—by the way, how is it there are no Chaco newsreel shots? Or have I missed them?)

Well, there's a lot of excitement in which a goldfish gets shot.

Upshot? A South American, who barges in to rescue his daughter when the kidnaped man telephones her his whereabouts, is so glad to get his fifty thousand back again that he gives the kidnapers the thousand they had asked for!

The man who owns the apartment returns unexpectedly and is arrested by the police.

Here you see—I repeat it—is the gizzard of a good laugh-maker for the films.

Picture value, 50 per cent.

CONTINENTAL VARIETIES

A swell bunch of entertainers culled from every nation (almost) in Europe by Arch Selwyn and Harold B. Franklin was put over successfully at a $5.50 top.

I believe Lucienne Boyer, the Parisian star of this outfit, will hear the Hollywood dinner-gong soon. She is beautiful; she has—ze wat do you call heem?—ze man-nair! Besides, she can sing exquisitely (and to pound your heart) those wonderful little French chansons, and her English has that enchanting Chevalieresque tang and bite that only the cultured French person learning our language can give it.

Then there is De Roze, the most astounding and valuable sleight-of-hand operator that I have ever seen, for out of a pitcher of water he can produce—right down in the audience—beer, champagne, gin, whisky, or any cordial or kind of wine that you can name. These drinks are then handed out free ($5.50 top covers all).

Picture value (Lucienne Boyer only)—but why put a percentage on such a charming person?

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Of extreme importance to hundreds of independent motion picture theatre owners is this week's single question-and-answer about the rights of an exhibitor under the code in connection with his inability to obtain a license to play motion pictures, and it is for the reason of its importance that both question and answer are detailed at such length in this 25th instalment of the Code Question Box.

No. 89—COMPETITIVE BUYING AND THE MOTION PICTURE CODE

QUESTION—In the year 1921, Mr. A, property owner and business man, entered into a contract with Mr. B to furnish Mr. B with capital with which to erect a motion picture theatre in a small town, on one of Mr. A's vacant lots.

Mr. B immediately built a beautiful theatre and started operation, and did a marvelous business, paying back the borrowed money much faster than the contracts called for. After a period of some four years a certain railway company elected to build a new passenger station in this town, and the site of this station was to be three blocks from the then present station which was located one block from Mr. B's theatre. At this time there were several vacant lots in the neighborhood of the proposed location of the new passenger station, and the property owners of said lots put on a "booster" campaign to pull the general trend of business to their section of the town, even going so far as to erect new stores and the like, including a new theatre—which, by the way, was a decidedly inferior theatre to Mr. B's house. Bear in mind that there were no highways leading into the city at this time, and it was necessary for people to use the trains to get in and out of the city, even though they were traveling but two or three miles away.

Therefore the new theatre prospered and Mr. B's theatre began to lose money, or, at any rate, Mr. B was not able to continue to meet his obligations to Mr. A, the financier, forcing Mr. A to take the theatre back from Mr. B.

Mr. A then entered into a contract with Mr. C, whereby Mr. C, who was also the operator of the second and newer theatre, was to lease Mr. A's theatre, and operate it at least three days per week. Mr. C had been making efforts to lease the theatre of Mr. A's from him for a year previous to the actual leasing.

This lease between Mr. A and Mr. C worked nicely for a short time, and then the depression hit the city hard. Mr. C was complaining to Mr. A that he would be unable to keep the lease unless Mr. A would let him close Mr. A's theatre and only operate the second newer theatre. Naturally Mr. C would wish to operate the second theatre since it was he who had induced the people in that neighborhood to build it.

Mr. A agreed to let Mr. C close Mr. A's structure until such time as business would warrant the operation of the two properties. However, Mr. C subsequently refused to open Mr. A's theatre at Mr. A's request, and tendered the lease back to Mr. A.

The property of Mr. A had depreciated badly during the period it was closed, and Mr. A was forced to either open the house, or change the building into some other sort of business. Due to the nature of the construction of the building Mr. A found that it would be practically impossible to change the building into any other type, for business purposes or otherwise. Therefore he went into partnership with me and we opened the theatre, spending some $10,000 cash for revamping and alterations.

When we opened the theatre we were able to secure 30 pictures from one distributor that had not been sold to the town, 30 pictures from a second distributor, all of the product of an independent company and all of the product of a fourth distributor, which gave us a very nice line of pictures on which to operate.

We re-opened the theatre to capacity business, and have continued to do a paying business since then.

Now, Mr. C, at the time, or previous to the time of turning back the theatre to Mr. A, entered into a buying arrangement with another party in a large city in this territory, this party controlling the picture situation in his town. The deal provided that this party would buy product for Mr. C's theatre. They purchased some 385 pictures for the 1933-34 season for Mr. C's theatre and they had inserted into the various contracts a clause that gave them permission to bring back for a second run any or all of the product that they contracted for. This, of course, made it impossible for us to secure any pictures for the theatre in which Mr. A and myself are partners, either first or second-run product, from any of the major companies, other than that of an independent and the product of one of the smaller majors. We were offered the product of a large company, but Mr. C and the party who buys for him went to the exchange and stopped the deal, buying part of the block that had been offered to us by the large company, and inducing the distributor not to sell us the balance.

Since we had enough pictures to take us up to the new buying season, we were not concerned over the situation at that time, thinking that we would surely be able to buy plenty of product, either first or second-run, for the 1934-35 season.

After the 1934-35 season was well under way (the sales season), and no salesmen had called on us, we visited the exchange center in our territory to call on the major companies. They informed us that they would have to sell to Mr. C and the party with whom he is associated in the buying of product, due to their large buying power. We then asked for second-run pictures, and one of the large companies sold us such product rights. Another large distributor refused to sell second-run and would give no reason. A third large distributor likewise refused to sell second-run, saying that the town was too small for two theatres. A fourth large company agreed to sell second-run if Mr. C and his buying partner would permit them to change the town's contract to read 25 cents minimum admission instead of 15 cents, which was tantamount to a refusal, since Mr. C's buying partner would not do that. A fifth large distributor, which has not sold the territory as yet, said they might entertain a proposition for second-run, after they had sold Mr. C's buying partner, first-run.

As previously stated, we were able to buy the product, second-run, of one large distributor, and the product of one independent, first-run, for the coming season—and that is all. Since we are making four changes per week, it is necessary for us to have 208 pictures, and Mr. C and his buying partner are doing everything in their power to stop us from getting pictures of any nature. You can readily see, therefore, that it will be impossible for us to continue in business for very long without pictures.

We filed an overbuying charge with the Local Grievance Board, and they ruled that Mr. C and his buying partner had not overbought,

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

which obviously they had. Then we were advised by the secretary of the Local Grievance Board to take the case to the Code Authority in New York, telling them that we had been treated unfairly by the exchanges in our territory. We did this and they ruled that Mr. C could not play second-run in our town, and also ruled that the companies be released from their contractual clause that gave Mr. C the right to bring back any or all pictures second run. However, this ruling did not relieve us, since the major companies still refuse to sell us second-run, even though they cannot sell their pictures second-run to the opposition theatre operated by Mr. C.

This is obviously a "freeze-out" situation, and since we are making money and our weekly payroll is around $80 per week and our profit above all expenses is about $100 per week, we feel that it is not the intention of the code to deprive a paying business of at least some sort of product on which to operate, be it first, second or third-run. We have shown a profit on what few second-runs we have been able to buy from the single large distributor.

Naturally, since we are forced into second-run playing time, due to the fact that Mr. C and his buying partner have contracted for all the major product for the coming season, we would like to get the better pictures second-run.

This we will be unable to do, due to the fact that the exchange managers in our territory positively refuse to sell us any pictures on any kind of a contract.

The large distributor which told us that they might entertain a proposition has not sold to Mr. C and his buying partner, and say they don't intend to, but they are asking us prohibitive prices and at that they only have a few pictures that would not keep us open for long.

I realize that this is an unusual situation, and that it may be hard for us to overcome the buying power of Mr. C's partner, but, somehow, I feel that you can give me advice that will give us some relief. (For obvious reasons a deviation is being made from the usual policy of the Code Question Box in not mentioning here the state from which the inquiry emanated.)

ANSWER—The situation described by the exhibitor, while quite involved, presents, primarily, a question of competitive buying power between two directly competing theatres.

The motion picture business, like other businesses, is conducted on the basis of free and open competition in the buying of suitable pictures for exhibition in theatres. Quite unlike other businesses, however, it deals with a copyrighted article, and what is actually purchased by the exhibitor is a limited license under copy-

QUICKSAND

Columbia

Although the title might suggest otherwise, this is a typical western story. Following the established formula, the yarn includes all the familiar elements that go to make up this type picture.

The original story and screen play are by Harold Shumate, credited with many western stories, several of which have featured Tim McCoy, who is starred in this picture. Direction is by David Selman.

Photographed entirely out of doors against beautiful desert and mountain scenery, it is the adventurous story of a man who, first having to prove he is not a killer, rounds up the gang who would pin the crime on him and thus come into possession of a vast ranch. To the tempo of many hair-raising sequences the objective is accomplished. Running along with the dramatic tone of the picture is a story of conflicting romance which has the hero in conflict with his youthful protegee for a girl's love. After the hero has either wiped out or jailed his foes, McCoy philosophically takes possession of the ranch, while the boy wins the girl.

Supporting McCoy are Jacqueline Wells, seen in "The Black Cat" and "Loud Speaker" recently, and John Darrow, featured in "I Like It That Way" and "Monte Carlo Nights." These two carry the story's romance. Among the better known names are Charles Middleton and J. Farrell Macdonald. Others are Erville Alderson and Steve Clark.

Aimed at the western fans and also the youngsters, picture should be given the exploitation commonly accruing to an action packed western.

LOTTERY LOVER

Fox

In this picture the elements that make good potential showmanship and popular entertainment appear to be novelly and effectively combined in both theme and production as well as personalities. Basically it's a comedy with music. Located in Paris, the story and atmosphere are essentially American. Elaborately presented in both settings and dress, it is a consistently light, airy music tinged yarn of 40 naval cadets in Paris. A garter belonging to the reigning stage favorite falls from an airplane. The cadets draw lots to see who shall lay siege to the lady's heart. The most bashful boy in the group wins and then follows a series of unique and colorful romantic situations, sparkling with fun and music and something gay happening almost every minute.

The story, reflecting the glamorous gay side of Parisian life, is an original by Siegfried Herzog and Maurice Hanline. The screen play is by Franz Shulz, author of "Two Hearts in Waltz Time" and Billie Wilder. Sam Hellman, noted humorist and short story writer, assisted in the dialogue. In addition to the thematic musical background, three song numbers, all of which seem destined for popularity, were contributed by Jay Gorney and Don Hartman. Direction is by William Thiele, noted on the Continent for musical productions of this character. Dance sequences are handled by Jack Donahue, evi-

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

dences of whose work were seen in "Music in the Air."

To substantiate the showmanship of the story and production, the cast offers unusual opportunity to do something different. Peggy Fears, noted New York actress and producer and stylist, makes her film debut. The gowns which she will wear are almost sure to be the last word in fashions. Another newcomer is Walter Woolf, a graduate of the metropolitan vaudeville and musical comedy stage. Included among the more familiar names are Lew Ayers, "Pat" Paterson, seen in "Call It Luck" and "Love Time"; Sterling Holloway, now in "The Merry Widow"; Reginald Denny, featured in "The World Moves On"; Alan Dinehart, currently in "The Cat's Paw"; Eddie Nugent, starred in "Girl of the Limberlost"; Nick Foran, outstanding in "Gentlemen Are Born"; Rafaela Ottiano, and Skippy, the dog who made a hit in "The Thin Man."

At this time, production appears to be an exploitation feature that will permit adaptation of practically every kind of tieup and contact.

CAPRICE ESPAGNOLE

(Tentative title)

Paramount

While this may not be a showmanship asset, it is not irrelevant that this picture will be the last on which Josef von Sternberg and Marlene Dietrich will be mutually associated. The reason is that both, particular Von Sternberg, who was the star's sponsor in American films, feel that their last picture, "Scarlet Empress," was not what the public wanted. Consequently in this picture, which will be given a showmanship title, both will combine to revive that down-to-earth yet alluring type of entertainment similar to the atmosphere of "Morocco," Dietrich's first American starring picture.

The locale of this story is Spain. It deals with a capricious young woman who likes to love 'em and leave 'em. A dancer, she has plenty of opportunity to choose and when she finally does discover a man whom she can love and is faithful to, she finds so much that is unlikeable about him that she returns to the man who has hurt and humiliated her most.

Beside directing the picture, Von Sternberg also is photographing it. As the script calls for a specular Mardi Gras carnival and a bullfight and consequently great crowds of people, it can be expected that there will be some unusual camera work. Marlene Dietrich again will sing several songs, the music for which was written by Ralph Rainger and Andrea Setaro, with lyrics by Leo Robin.

The two important men in the star's screen life are Joel McCrea, now in "The Richest Girl in the World," and Lionel Atwill. Supporting players list Edward Everett Horton, Alison Skipworth and Don Alvarado in featured roles. Minor parts are played by Tempe Pigott, Lawrence Grant, Luisa Espinal, Edwin Maxwell and Hank Mann.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP

It should be evident from a commonsense point of view that this version of "Ruggles of Red Gap" is neither a reissue nor readaptation of the feature produced a dozen or more years ago. True, the story is that by Harry Leon Wilson, noted Saturday Evening Post writer and novelist, but the present production has been so completely rearranged, given an out-and-out comedy flavor, that the two will be entirely different.

For the forthcoming production, the screen play was prepared by Humphrey Pearson and Arthur MacRae. An indication of how the story and adaptation will be treated is seen in the selection of Leo McCarey, who made "Belle of the Nineties," as the director. Furthering the departure from the original is the inclusion of a group of musical numbers by Ralph Rainger, with lyrics by Sam Coslow.

Further indication of the effort to which Paramount is going to assure the picture being both entertainment and box office is noted in the cast assignments. In them the trend toward comedy is strongly emphasized. Charles Laugh-ton, who is currently in "Barretts of Wimpole Street," but who demonstrated his talent for comedy in "The Private Life of Henry VIII," plays the lead role. In support are Mary Boland and Charlie Ruggles, now teamed in "Pursuit of Happiness"; Zasu Pitts, Roland Young, Leila Hyams and Maude Eburne, who plays the important role of Mrs. Pettingil.

While a new generation of motion picture theatre goers has grown up, the prestige of the original "Ruggles" has endured. Therefore, while capitalizing upon the box office strength of the cast, more than the usual amount of attention might be exerted toward convincing every one, young and old, that this production is entirely different.

right for the exhibition of a motion picture in a specific theatre for a specific number of days.

In the ordinary course of the business, the licenses granted are exclusive in certain respects; that is, a license for first-run exhibition guarantees the exhibitor contracting for such exhibition that no other theatre in the competitive area will be licensed to exhibit the particular picture specified first-run in that city. Hence, when such a license agreement is made, the distributor is not in a position to license the first-run exhibition of that picture to any other theatre. Consequently, the distributor must decide which one of two or more exhibitors he will license, as he cannot license more than one first-run exhibition.

Naturally, each distributor endeavors to make the best deal possible for the exhibition of his pictures, not only in a particular city, but in all the cities and towns and hamlets throughout the country. Ordinarily, the decision of the distributor as to which account he will license is final.

In order to overcome possible unfair competition by an exhibitor who may endeavor to license more feature pictures than is reasonably required for the operation of his theatre, with the intent and purpose of depriving his competitor of motion picture attractions, the "Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry" prohibits such practice and established, for that purpose, Local Grievance Boards in each exchange center to determine the facts in each specific instance on their merits as to whether or not more pictures had been licensed than were reasonably required for the operation of the theatre.

The inquiring exhibitor advises that the exhibitor has already filed a complaint under this provision of the motion picture code, and that the exhibitor had a rehearing and determination of the complaint by his Local Grievance Board in his exchange city. And, according to the information supplied, this Grievance Board decided that his competitor had not bought more first-run pictures than were reasonably required for the operation of his theatre, and also ordered the competing theatre to release second-run exhibition rights that the competitor had acquired but could not use on these pictures.

The question of the inquiring exhibitor negotiating with each separate distributor for the exhibition rights of these pictures is a matter of private bargaining and negotiation between the inquiring exhibitor and each individual distributor. Neither the motion picture code, nor the laws of the land, as far as we know, compel any distributor, acting solely on its own responsibility and business judgment, to license its pictures for exhibition at any particular theatre. The individual distributor, acting alone and not in conjunction with any other distributor or exhibitor, unquestionably has the right to select his own customers and to refuse to do business with any exhibitor that he considers an undesirable account for any reason, which reason the distributor is under no obligation to disclose.

In conclusion, it might be said, again, that bargaining for exhibition rights for motion pictures is entirely a matter of private negotiation between the individual exhibitor and the individual distributor. Whatever deals or bargains they may make is nobody's business but their own, except where such agreements may injure a third party. We do not know of any way that the "Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry" could be used to force a distributor to license the exhibition of his pictures at a theatre if the distributor did not desire to make such a license agreement.

The United States courts once said that a distributor may refuse to sell the licensing rights of his pictures to an exhibitor on the simple grounds that the exhibitor had red hair and the distributor did not like red hair.

Returning to the possible participation of the Local Grievance Boards in such matters, the boards are interested solely in the question as to whether the competing theatre has actually overbought. And, unless the board is convinced that the other house has bought more pictures than it reasonably requires, even the Grievance Board is not in a position to reallocate pictures between the two theatres.

On the face of it, this may seem a little harsh, but, to exaggerate the situation, suppose three or four theatres were opened up in the town—which is a small one. In that case it would be just plain suicide for all of the theatres, including the one or two which were there originally, either to divide the first-run product four ways, or to have a first, second, third and fourth-run in a town of extremely limited population, as is the case in this situation, each of them charging lower admission until the last one charged, figuratively, one penny.

structing an investigation of his regime. Joking, the new commissioner's sweetheart, while the city is horrified by a tragic subway disaster, calls him and informs him that she killed the man. When the girl realizes her joke is a serious matter, the commissioner is forced either to arrest her for the crime or find the slayer. With a silver fox dress figuring largely in the circumstantial evidence, he finds the guilty woman and establishes the motive.

The Gaetano Fazio play was adapted by Ferdinand Reyher; the screen play is by Gladys Unger and direction by Christy Cabanne.

The cast interpreting the yarn is composed of a host of wellknown players and two or three who are comparatively new. Ralph Bellamy and Valerie Hobson, seen in "Life Returns," her actual American screen debut, are teamed in the romantic leads. Arthur Vinton plays the role of the murdered commissioner. Purnell Pratt is the mayor. Irene Hervey, seen in "Let's Talk It Over" and featured in "Night Life of the Gods," plays the role of the murderess. Others are Catherine Doucet, who appeared in "Little Man, What Now" and "Wake Up and Dream"; Helen Jerome Eddy; Kathryn Williams, heroine of the old "Adventures of Kathryn" serial, Vivian Oakland, Edgar Kennedy, William Arnold and Katherine Hall.

Timed to the present, located in New York, the story offers unusual opportunity for tricky exploitation. The significance which the silver fox plays in the solution of the crime, as well as the fashion angle, automatically suggests much that is out of the ordinary in whetting public curiosity, besides the intriguing title tone.

THE WINNING TICKET MGM

Several years ago, MGM met with considerable popular and financial success with such semi-rowdy comedy as "Reducing," "Politics" and "Caught Short." Then, with the growing fame of Marie Dressler, that line of entertainment was dropped. Now feeling the necessity for something of that caliber on the company's future programs, this story is the first of a new series.

With down-to-earth comedy that borders on the nonsensical and a light romance accompanying, "The Winning Ticket" is the story of an Italian barber and his family. Holder of a ticket that wins one of the capital prizes in the Grand National Sweepstakes, it is packed with potential fun in action, dialogue, gags and situations.

While there is no team, such as was the Marie Dressler-Polly Moran combination, the story is being directed by Charles Riesner, who made "Caught Short" and "Reducing." Association with him in a cooperating supervising capacity is Jack Cummings, who recently has been handling MGM short subjects.

Leo Carrillo is starred as the barber and in a character similar to that which was his in the stage play "Lombardi, Ltd." In support will be seen Louise Fazenda, Ted Healy, Irene Hervey and James Ellison, who carry the story's romantic love interest angle, and Louis Alberni.

Situations should be productive of both topical and gag exploitation. One sequence portrays the running of the Grand National, which because of recent news stories relative to Americans winning fortunes on its outcome should be a cinch for tricky showmanship. Another, in which dozens of plaster parrots are broken up in search for the lost ticket and a city is thrown into turmoil until it is found, should suggest plenty that is novel and ingenious to active exploitation minds.

Pettijohn, Pickford Guests At AMPA Weekly Luncheon

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, William R. Ferguson, president, was to have as guests at its weekly luncheon-meeting Thursday at the New York Motion Picture Club Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the MPPDA; Mary Pickford, receiving a scroll of honorary membership; which was to be presented by Arthur Brisbane; Sir Gerald Campbell, K.C., M.G., British Consul in New York; Clarence Brown, Metro director; Jack Pearl, Broadway comedian, and Frank Buck, producer-explorer.

Also on the dais were to be Jimmy Savo, comedian who has just finished a feature for Hecht-MacArthur (Paramount); Gregory Ratoff, "Wee Willie" Robine, of the Broadway Capitol "Family"; Nick Lucas, "Uncle Don," radio performer; Major Edward Bowes, of Metro; Benita Hume, Harry Hirschfield, Paul Yawitz, New York Daily Mirror columnist; Lillian Carmen, radio performer; Buddy Walker, Elaine Jordon, and Roy Ford and his orchestra.

The First World War

(Fox)
Pictorial Record

For something like ten years Mr. Truman Talley, variously newsreel editor and more latterly production chief of Fox Movietone, has been at work on what he, with some provocation, has held to be the world's biggest story. Here and there by ingenuity, enterprise and—may we say—luck, he has been acquiring bits of a screen mosaic which were to tell this big story.

Somewhere near to the time that Mr. Talley was near to the completion of his mosaic, Mr. Laurence Stallings—"What Price Glory"—edited for publication to the book trade by Simon & Schuster his all-picture volume called "The First World War." The stories of printed page and the stories of those unprinted rolls of motion picture negative had a deal in common, with—if we care to be forgiven a prejudice—somewhat the advantage in narrative value to the motion picture.

In time Mr. Talley, riding his warhorse hobby, brought Mr. Stallings to bear upon his film war archives and we have in consequence the outstandingly important war-screen document, "The First World War," conceived by Mr. Talley, assembled and interpreted by Mr. Stallings, the ex-Marine officer and war specialist and dramatist, and recited the while by the sonorous Mr. Pedro de Cordoba, with a voice as stately as empire itself, the while laden with the poignancy of his story.

In sum the picture indicates that the human race, the cause and course of nations, the flow of historic events are not as dominated by intelligence as they might be if someone had sense enough to do something different.

It is all a very big show, being made with a cast that started with Bismarck 'way back yonder, and it ends with a montage that tends to indicate pictorially that one way and another the world is still in quite a mess with a number of storm clouds on the horizon.

There have been several assemblies of war films from the archives, but none so comprehensive or so well prepared and correlated. Also "The First World War" includes not a little official film which previously has never been available for public exhibition.

In this production Mr. Talley and Mr. Stallings have been zealous in the pursuit of authenticity, with, it would seem, a complete success, since one learns that the picture has had high approval from representatives of all the foreign governments involved. The producers have refrained from the use of any studio made inserts, which could have added somewhat to the dramatics but very little to the history. Despite this adherence to the record films made on Europe's playground of intrigue and its battlefields, the picture has flow and finish, an unwavering adherence to the bitter story being told.

The picture is addressed, one may fear, to persons who think, but it also, after all, is full of the drumbeats and enthusiasms which sweep the millions, too. So many of those who only sit and take it, who like to feel and never think, can have a good time, too.—T. R.

Distributed by Fox Films. Produced by Truman Talley, in association with Simon & Schuster. Edited by Laurence Stallings. Narrated by Pedro de Cordoba. Running time, 78 minutes. Release date, Nov. 23, 1934.

Babbitt

(Warner)
Comedy

While the picture "Babbitt" smartly eliminates practically all the barbed satire which characterized the book from which it is adapted, it retains and embellishes all the humor and comedy. The quality of homespun fun, even as it is applied to the dramatic tinged situations, is the element motivating all action and dialogue. It carefully avoids ridiculing and thus should bring no objection from those large bodies of men who take their civic and fraternal activities seriously.

In the story, Babbitt is a staid small town business man; successful, big hearted, proud of his town, family and his lodge, the Zebras. Ambitious, however, to mingle with the big shots, he is first, after a gentle ribbing by his lodge brothers, elected Grand Ringmaster. Quite a popular character, he's just the type that conniving politicians and bankers like to use as a front. Invited in on a land purchase deal promising big profits, his wife Myra being absent on an errand of neighborly mercy, Babbitt, succumbing to the common failing, would like to do a little philandering. Talking too much to the blackmailing widow, Tanis, he finds himself in a spot. The woman talks herself and Babbitt's air castles come tumbling down.

But his downfall is only the opportunity for Myra to be a heroine. A woman, she's wise to all the wiles and arts of femininity and with the help of son Ted, she frustrates the land-grabbing schemes of the real estate sharks, and in presenting Babbitt before the investigating attorney, makes his situation look as though he had been acting with high-minded and unselfish civic consciousness to protect his town. Then follows reinstatement in the minds of his fellow townsmen and lodge members with Babbitt a wiser man, but still pretty important figure in his own estimation.

The production offers many features that should add materially to its commercial value. The Sinclair Lewis book, though now quite a few years old, is still a showmanship value. In the leading roles, the picture presents Kuy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon, the stars of "Big Hearted Herbert," and while Babbitt is the big figure, upon whom attention continually is focused, there is also a spirit of youth to the picture.

The picture can be sold as all-around substantial family entertainment, with much to amuse both the more mature as well as the younger elements.—McCARHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by William Keighley. From the novel by Sinclair Lewis. Adapted by Tom Reed and Niven Busch. Screen play by Mary McCall. Photographed by Arthur Todd. P. C. A. Certificate No. 349. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 75 minutes. Release date, Dec. 8, 1934.

The Gay Bride

(MGM)
Dramatic Romance

For usual commercial purposes, this is a different kind of gangster story. The fact that the story was a Saturday Evening Post yarn, is showmanship material, plus adaptation of some of the suggested potential exploitation possibilities.

Essentially the story is modern dramatic romance, colored by the usually alluring atmosphere of gangsters and gangsterism. As it opens, Mary, a woman wise to the affairs of the world, is ambitious for a little power and security as well as money in the bank. She makes friends with the mob, and Shoots appears to be the easiest pickings. Married to him, she starts consolidating her position. As Dingle gets ambitious, he figures that bumping Shoots off will ease the path. But as Shoots' romantic life is short, so is Dingle's, as Mickey, coming under the charm of Mary's magic, erases him. Then the picture settles down to its real romance of conflict between Boy and Mary, with an eventual reformation and regeneration all around and Mickey peacefully eased out of the picture.

To counterbalance the melodrama, there is quite a bit of comedy in both dialogue, situations and action, this element reaching its climax in the chase finale.

While not of outstanding values, the picture does offer some chance for tricky title idea adaptations, use of the marquee power of several of the cast names and accentuation of the comedy color. By assuring the patrons that there's a laugh or smile for every theatric thrill, local exploitation should do more for the picture than it will do on its own strength.—McCARHY, Hollywood.

Wild Animal Story

From prior publicity, practically every one in the show business knows that this is a native wild animal picture. But what comes up on the screen, in relation to that which is either known or surmised, is so vastly different that the picture's successful marketing most likely will prove a problem and undoubtedly a pleasure for real showmen.

"Sequoia" is filmed entirely against the beautiful Sierra Mountain scenery, an asset of which expert photography has taken remarkable advantage. Its stars are two animals; Malibu, a deer, and Gato, a puma. Wonderfully trained, they are great actors. Wearing neither makeup nor costumes other than those given them by nature, and everything done being the result of patient and understanding training, from the standpoint of creating and maintaining human interest, they actually give many an enameled Hollywood clotheshorse fact lessons in natural acting.

As the picture is unusual, it is difficult to describe it in an ordinary manner. As it unfolds upon the screen, a strange but understandable "humanness" predominating, it runs the scale of natural drama, romance, comedy, tragedy, spectacle, thrill, conflict, menace. There are times when the action of the animals provoke howls of glee. Then it becomes vividly exciting, a quality counterbalanced by soft tenderness. Its tragedy is tinged with sadness, and the whole is climaxed by a stalking chase and villain-man hero-puma fight, in which the deer revenges himself upon the would-be killer. Topping off the finale of the deer-puma palship came the most enthusiastic burst of applause heard in months.

Here are the entertainment and showmanship highlights. Toni Martin, refusing to believe that it is contrary to natural law, adopts and mothers Malibu, an orphaned fawn, and Gato, a puma cub. Fun for the audience marks the antics of their childhood days; only Gato, as he grows to maturity, gives any indication of reverting to type as he raids chicken coops and hog pens.

Human necessity causes their release to the forest. Then the pair become the whole show. Gato crouches to spring on a drinking deer, but recognizes Malibu and both drink and play together. There's romance in the spring time. No human ever made such tender love as Malibu to his doe mate. There is tragedy as the mother is killed, but Malibu leads his fawn to Toni's cabin for shelter. Chinese Baby Feng Soo and the fawn, tethered together, are menaced by a rattlesnake. The baby would play, but Malibu dashes up and kills the snake. Hunters come to kill. Guide Bergman leads them nowhere. Desperate, he raids the government game refuge. Stalked by Malibu, he leads the herd to his corral. Malibu shows his kind how to escape. Then comes the big punch, Bergman trailing Malibu, and Gato stalking Bergman. About to fire on Malibu, Bergman is hit by a bundle of enraged puma fury. Malibu watches. When Gato is exhausted Malibu rushes in and pushes Bergman over a cliff to death. In the finale the two friends, though natural enemies, are playing with each other.

In this picture, animals interpret the elements considered screen essentials. Other than Jean Parker, Paul Hurst and the Chinese baby, the humans are inconsequential. Therein is the picture's big problem. It is not unsolvable, for, judging by the preview audience reaction, the two animals provided more satisfactory entertainment than most humans could hope to. That the picture has appeal to every nature lover and friend of wild animal life goes without saying. Likewise those who understand and appreciate beautiful scenery and artistic photography should find much in it to interest them. But for the ordinary rank and file, even the intelligentsia, the picture makes it possible to sell everything from sex-appeal to the triumph of virtue. If possible, see the picture before playing it; otherwise watch the type of campaign the producers create. At any rate, pay more than ordinary attention to the picture, as it should create unusual word-of-mouth publicity. —McCARTHY, Hollywood.

3 Songs About Lenin

New Technique

Out of the state-controlled motion picture production of Soviet Russia, and via the directorial effort of Dzega Vertov, comes what is heralded as a new technique, an unusual presentation of an idea, pictorially and musically, on the screen. This "new" technique, if such it be, can be said to hold little or nothing of interest to the average American screen patronage. In theme, manner of presentation and technical quality, the result must be considered far below American production rank.

To certain class audiences, in large metropolitan centers, where something of an interest in this type of foreign and unusual treatment is in evidence, the film may be offered as an interesting experiment in the conveyance of an idea, interpreted on the screen via sound and picture.

As the title indicates, the film offers what is virtually a pictorial accompaniment to three separate and distinct musical scores, meaning to depict the manner in which the great leader of Bolshevism, Nicolai Lenin, is worshipped in death as a god by all the Russians of the modern communistic state.

The film must be reckoned propaganda. In the picturization of communities, the collective farms, the workers' apartments and clubs in the cities, the gigantic industrial projects, used as visual accompaniment to the music, one finds the production pointing with a bursting pride, and seeming to say to the world, "Look what Lenin has wrought."

Smiling, happy workers the film constantly shows. There is a certain strength in the music at times, but when, in a certain sequence, the visualization almost in its entirety is devoted to picturing Lenin in his coffin, viewed by sorrowing thousands, the weighty repetition of the theme takes on a deadly monotony.

Certainly in the generally accepted sense of the word, as applied to motion pictures in America, this film is not entertainment of general appeal. —AARONSON, New York.

Mystery Melodrama

Mystery melodrama is both the entertainment and showmanship of this picture. However, as the climax is approached and to the tempo of pulse quickening thrill, an atmosphere of romantic love interest is worked in. Short in running time, the show naturally is constantly active and exciting. Nevertheless, the attraction makes no pretense at being anything other than straight-away commercial program entertainment. Built upon an often used melodramatic premise, it utilizes mystery, intrigue, love interest and thrill. With only minor character and occasion establishing sequences excepted, the entire action takes place aboard a train bound from Paris to the Near East.

Continental police being baffled by a series of gem thefts, the insurance company decides to try its own hand at solving the riddle. One gang, headed by Londais, buys legitimately, to report later that it has been robbed. Another, bossed by Baron von Kampf, is an out-and-out collection of wily, stop-at-nothing thieves. Between the two are Count Trentini, agent of the Surete, and Odette, insurance company detective.

Londais making a big purchase, romance is developed between him and Odette as he expresses his regrets that it was necessary to outbid her for the gems. So smartly, however, are things mixed up that anticipating who is real and who phoney sets the stage for what is to follow. With locale shifting to the train, all the old-fashioned melodrama gets under way.

Attempts are made to steal the real jewels, paste diamonds are substituted. No one knows whether the real or make-believe gems are hurled from the train. There is a murder or two. The desperate but temporarily foiled Baron makes his big play. He threatens to cut the car off from the rest of the train and dash all to destruction, only to have Pierre shoot him.

In the climax the mystery of all the thieving and killing is unraveled. The Baron and his gang get their just desserts. The heroic thief, Pierre, is let off easily, and the threats to Europe's gem merchants being eliminated, Odette is glad that she's very much in love with Pierre.

Story content and action make possible some unique exploitation. Likewise the title can be adapted in many tricky ways to advertising copy. The natural appeal being to the mystery-thrill fans, plenty of effort should be exerted toward stimulating their interest by challenging them to solve the story's problems. —McCARTHY, Hollywood.

That's Gratitude

(Columbia)

Comedy-Drama

Frank Craven, Broadway stage player of ability, wrote the story and screen play and directed this rather engaging and light comedy-drama, comedy predominating and all done rather in the manner of the Broadway play than the motion picture. Action, as such, gives place to dialogue and situations, with the comedy lying therein. The result is pleasing if not of outstanding values.

The entertainment lies principally in the handling of his role by Craven with an easy naturalness and a fine sense of the value of small touches here and there. It is perhaps true that Craven's name will mean little or nothing to the regular run of motion picture patronage, but it seems equally apparent that a buildup of his name for the future would be worthwhile.

The others in the cast are familiar, but not of special box office drawing quality, including Mary Carlisle, Arthur Byron, Sheila Mannors and Franklin Pangborn in a minor comedy role. The title offers the opportunity for attention-attracting copy selling lines, for the phrase which is the title is commonly used. The situation which finds a newly found friend welcomed in the house, until he long outstays his welcome, is not new but can be and in this case does make entertaining comedy material. A suspicion of romance and a hint of dramatic seriousness have places in the plot development, but not to any large extent.

Craven, down and out show manager in a small town, in order to insure peace and quiet and a night's sleep in his hotel, straightens out a neighbor whose fondness for the bottle is obvious. The stranger, in maudlin reaction, is eternally grateful to Craven, inviting him to his home. Broke, Craven goes, is greeted effusively, stays longer and longer, until the family, and Byron, who extended the invitation, are more than fed up.

Miss Mannors is the unattractive daughter engaged to Charles Sabin, who in turn plans to go through with the marriage out of gratitude for the assistance of Byron, but who is really in love with the younger sister, Miss Carlisle. Craven is completely entertaining in his stony reaction to the hints about leaving which drop about him thick and fast. Miss Mannors is ambitious to go on the stage, but her father frowns on the idea. With money borrowed from Sabin, who sees that way of getting out of his engagement, Craven takes Miss Mannors with him to the city, has her "revamped," and the result is beauty and some talent.

To satisfy a personal desire, Craven takes his successful road company to the home town for one night. After the show, he tells the assembled family he intends asking Miss Mannors to marry him. At that moment a note arrives from her indicating she has eloped with the show's leading man, bound for New York and "better things." Craven shrugs off his keen disappointment, and the "that's gratitude" theme rings its final note in the story. Though the youngsters might not enjoy it to any extent, it is family entertainment.—AARONSON, New York.

Flirting with Danger

(Monogram)
Comedy-Drama

This independent production has satisfactory value for situations where too much is not demanded, and where a reasonably lively dialogue and an emphasis on comedy may be found entertaining by the average patronage. The rather scattering story is not especially convincing, and not too effectively executed, concerning as it does the adventures of three devil-may-care dynamite mixers in a powder plant, in romance and in their dangerous jobs.

An emphasis on comedy and the indication of two kinds of danger implied in the title may be used to some effect in the selling of the film. Robert Armstrong, William Cagney and Edgar Kennedy share the lead as the three inseparables, with Kennedy supplying the greater part of the comedy. Additional opportunities the story basically contained for real action and an engagingly light comedy atmosphere seem to have been lost, the result having something of the development of short product. Marion Burns has the feminine lead.

The three mixers have a propensity for attempting their own mixtures in the dynamite plant, with often disastrous results for the company's property, and for becoming entangled in the meshes of feminine charm, Cagney being the worst offender. Kennedy's chief contribution is his tale of woe relative to the Spanish girl he once married in the Philippines.

Kennedy and Armstrong are seriously disturbed when Cagney forms more than a passing attachment for Miss Burns, an important employee of the company, and devise a scheme to break up what looks to be a certain marriage. A forged letter to Miss Burns, written by Kennedy and signed with Cagney's name, mentioning a wife somewhere in Ohio, does the trick, and Miss Burns tells Cagney what she thinks of him, mentioning a fictitious husband in the past.

The three are sent to South America to work at the company's plant there. Armstrong is attracted to Maria Alba, a Spanish dancer, and Kennedy, who speaks Spanish, primes him with a phrase by which Armstrong proposes marriage without knowing it. The boys celebrate the acceptance of a new formula worked out by Cagney, and are not exactly sober next morning. Miss Burns, meanwhile, has been assigned to the foreign plant, as well. The experimenters succeed in very nearly blowing up the plant, as they believe, then discover that it was the manager, with his own ends in mind, who was guilty.

Cagney and Miss Burns are reconciled when the letter is explained, Armstrong must marry his dancer, and Kennedy's laugh is cut short when the long forgotten wife, son in tow, turns up beside him.—AARONSON, New York.

Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round

(United Artists)
Musical Comedy-Drama

There is real entertainment in this elaborately and well developed screen yarn, located entirely aboard an ocean-going liner bound from New York to Europe. It has a most happy combination of drama, which shades variously from misunderstanding to deepest tragedy; comedy which is invariably entertaining; romance which is ingenuous and attractive. Considerable suspense adds punch to the story, while the whole has been kept moving at a lively pace.

The exhibitor in addition has names to sell. Gene Raymond and Nancy Carroll have the romantic leads; other names are Mitzi Green, Ralph Morgan, Sid Silvers, and there is future value to be had by extending oneself to unusual lengths in selling the name of Jack Benny to his public. Benny is the master of ceremonies of a very popular radio program, a performer of naturalness, intelligence and genuine ability. Having an important role in the film, he makes the most of it. Frank Parker, also of the air, gives a song or two effectively.

The picture is, in a sense, a "Grand Hotel" aboard an ocean liner. That idea is not new, of course, but the fact remains that this production contains its full quota of live and attention-holding entertainment, and is worthy of the exhibitor's best selling effort. The novel idea has a company of entertainers giving programs aboard ship which are supposed to be broadcast to and via stations on land. Murder, mystery, blackmail and theft are spotted through the story, enveloped in an atmosphere of gayety and song and dance.

A smart variation of the flashback technique has been employed to good advantage. The film opens with the windup of a stage presentation aboard ship, a man enters a cabin, a shot is heard, then the film goes back to review the circumstances beginning 48 hours before.

It boils down to this: Raymond, thief, is aboard with his aide in the person of Silvers, acting as a steward. Miss Carroll is chief entertainer for Benny, master of ceremonies of the boat's show, who is vainly in love with her. Carlyle Moore is her brother, also part of the show, and under the thumb of the gambler, Sidney Blackmer, who also has a hold on Miss Carroll. Sam Hardy is Blackmer's come-on man. Blackmer is pursued aboard ship by Shirley Grey, jealously in love with him, and her husband, Morgan, thoroughly aware of what is going on, follows his wife, bent on vengeance. Robert Elliott, New York detective inspector, is bound for a vacation.

Raymond crosses Blackmer and Hardy when they entice him into a game, and Raymond falls in love with Miss Carroll. She returns the feeling, but is in fear of Blackmer. A criss-cross game of complication goes on, with Raymond stealing a bracelet from Miss Grey, Elliott suspecting him, and Silver trying his best to hide the jewelry. Blackmer pursues Miss Carroll and she, fearing for her brother, dares not repulse him completely. Thinking to clear her brother, she permits him to enter her cabin. The shot is heard, and Blackmer is found dead. Several of those suspected attempt to assume the blame, each seeking to shield someone else, until Morgan is discovered to be the murderer, as he finishes the job by killing his wife as well. Raymond turns straight and he and Miss Carroll complete the film on a note of all's well that ends well.—AARONSON, New York.

There's Always Tomorrow

(Universal)
Drama

There should be a selling point in the merchandising of this picture in the fact that it is taken from a more or less recent novel by the notable Ursula Parrott. Particularly in the larger situations, her name and the title of the film, the same as that of the book, should be known to many. In that it is a simple story of an ordinary family, simply told, lies an indication of comparatively wide appeal, though chiefly to adults of all ages. It is essentially a human story, and its basic premise, at least, might be duplicated in almost any home where there are several children.

By reason of the continual and tumultuous demands which have completely occupied and engulfed the mother, father is the forgotten man of the household, someone to look to when things need doing but otherwise to be considerably ignored. That is the thought, and it suggests direction of exploitation toward parents.

A good part of the effectiveness of the adaptation is due to the work of Frank Morgan as the father, a sympathy-exciting role which Morgan handles in an intelligent manner. The right of a husband and father to seek elsewhere, when opportunity offers, the companionship which he cannot find at home is the question posed by the picture. Presenting this question in turn to the potential audience may be found an effective selling device.

In support of Morgan are Binnie Barnes and Lois Wilson as probably the only known names. The cast, therefore, offers comparatively little drawing power, the necessity being apparent of selling emphasis elsewhere.

A completely average, rather staid business man, Morgan is by way of being a man-servant in his own home, to his five children. His wife completely ignores him, so great is the pressure of attention required by her grown but demanding offspring. When the young folk have a party on his anniversary, Morgan finds his wife much too busy to use the tickets he has purchased for a show. Pushed about in the tumult, he finds himself on the porch with his newspaper.

Miss Barnes, whom he recognizes as a former secretary, asks information of him, obvious to everyone but Morgan as a mere pretext to talk with him. She readily learns the conditions

A ritualistic Thursday night appointment is Morgan's attendance at lodge meeting, and on one of those nights, during the winter, the children take the car for a party, the father takes the street car to his lodge. Accidentally the children see their father, follow him and discover he is visiting a woman. They wait outside until he leaves, find the car frozen and are invited inside by the woman, Miss Barnes. Realizing who the children are, she tells them the story of her love for Morgan, using no names, pretending she does not know who they are.

The children, bitterly disillusioned and upset, plan drastic action the following Thursday evening if the father attempts to leave the house. As he does, Miss Barnes enters, is introduced, and on a pretext, conveys the thought to Morgan that she is going away, since a continuation of their meetings will endanger the happiness of too many lives.—AARONSON, New York.

365 Nights in Hollywood

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

With a title which is far more attention-attracting as a selling line in itself than it is indicative of the story of the film, this is a mixture of comedy, romance and drama resulting in a moderately entertaining picture. It is indicated as being in the nature of an expose of a Hollywood "racket" involving dramatic schools, where young hopefuls from the sticks, with lots of ambition and the necessary coin of the realm, are promised development into motion picture "players."

There is generally selling value in this so-called expose type of story, if the theme is made general rather than in the nature of negative publicity on the film industry. The selling might better be devoted to concentration upon the romantic, comedy aspects of the story and upon the cast names.

James Dunn is popular and has a following, making the selling of his name an obviously strong sales point. In support are Alice Faye, opposite, and the knock-down-and-drag-out slapstick comedy team of Mitchell and Durant. The only other name which may be familiar is that of Grant Mitchell, an old trouser whose performance, here as elsewhere, is an asset to the picture.

A melody or two and a suggestion of girl chorus dance ensembles add a musical touch which serves to brighten the film.

Dunn, as a former young but extremely prominent film director, is down on his luck and completely broke. Grant Mitchell comes to him with an idea for mulcting the aspiring picture players. Mitchell will be directing head of a dramatic school, Dunn the dramatic instructor, John Bradford, ineptulous player, star "graduate," and shining example. Business booms, with Bradford and Mitchell collecting the money of the gullible and Dunn doing the work.

To the school comes Miss Faye, hopeful but awkward. Dunn browbeats her in an effort to get results, and the two are in a constant state of argument. Mitchell and Durant, local icemen, indulge in their antics, hopping in and out of the film to provide often amusing comedy. Miss Faye is pursued by a bumpkin, Frank Melton, with much more money than any idea what to do with it. Mitchell sells him the idea of making a picture, directed by Dunn, the plan being that half of the money put up be used for the picture and the rest pocketed by the three. Miss Faye is to star, of course.

Dunn agrees, goes to work with every intention of giving value for the money, though the other two do not know it. Bradford, playing the masculine lead, forces himself upon Miss Faye, and nearly wrecks the production by refusing to appear for the final sequences. Dunn replaces him, the story is altered to permit of the substitution and the film is successfully made. Dunn and Miss Faye clear their misunderstanding, Mitchell is requested to visit the district attorney and Bradford is involved.—AARONSON, New York.

I'll Fix It

(Columbia)

Drama

A lively combination of romance, drama, comedy and strong moral tone, this story is satisfactory entertainment and rather unusually adaptable to the family audience, since its central theme is as much concerned with a small boy—big brother circumstance as it is with the romance of a big shot and a strong-willed but attractive school teacher. Right triumphs in a large and eminently satisfactory manner, but that does not mean the picture is a stodgy piece of moralizing, the moral entering rather more by implication than direct preachment.

The strong and widespread following of Jack Holt makes emphasis on his name in the leading role logical. In support are Mona Barrie as the attractive and intelligent school teacher, Jimmie Butler as the capable small boy brother, and Winnie Lightner as Miss Barrie's roommate, who with the employment of a forthright slapstick variety of comedy injects considerable amusement into the picture.

In the plot development which finds a budding romance between a "hard guy" with a softer side, and a conscientious teacher, and a graft investigation getting to the root of crookedness in local politics, there is ample material to interest the adults. The other element in the plot, concerned with the development of the character of a small boy, makes the film worth while for children, and forms a provocative invitation to parents.

Copy selling lines may be developed about the title, with the implication that the man who could always "fix it" found something he could not fix, and was a better man for that.

Holt dominates the small city in which he is the big shot, with police, politics and legislation under his thumb, and "legitimate graft" in large quantities. His soft spot is for Butler, his young and motherless brother, on whom are lavished all sorts of gifts and attention. Jimmie is told by his teacher, Miss Barrie, that until he improves in his algebra he cannot resume his position on the baseball team. The boy is heartbroken. Holt brings the usual pressure to bear, but despite persuasion and bribery he cannot win his point.

Eventually he causes Miss Barrie to be fired from her teaching position, after she has failed Jimmie in a special examination because he cheated. The boy tells Holt he did not cheat, Holt taking his brother's word against Miss Barrie's.

At this time a local editor begins to bear down in an effort to expose Holt for his grafting, and Miss Barrie is chiefly instrumental in bringing the situation to a head. Their mutual liking is broken into.

When an investigation is about to start, Holt would run out on the quiz, despite Miss Barrie's effort to stop him, but when Jimmie is injured, he stays to see it through. Cleverly on the witness stand Miss Barrie succeeds in clearing Holt, Jimmie finally and voluntarily admits he cheated, and sees the error of that lie, or any other.—AARONSON, New York.

PASTOR CALLS UPON CITY TO SEE FILM

CALLS PATRONAGE TEST OF GOOD TASTE

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

The attached editorial strikes me as containing a bit of timely horse sense—from the old "Home Town." Especially interesting coming from a gentleman of the cloth.

The Rev. William Rainey Bennett is pastor of Elgin's Universalist Church, a speaker of national reputation and trouped the Redpath Chautauqua circuit with the Silver-Tongued Orator. He knows what it is all about and carries considerable weight in this vicinity. The attached was entirely unsolicited.—RUDY BORN, City Manager, Publix Great States Theatres, Inc., Rialto Theatre, Elgin, Ill.

The editorial by William Rainey Bennett appeared in the Fox Valley Herald and said, in part:

"... The human mind is supposed to be able to choose. . . .

"... I claim that the people have just as good talking pictures as they deserve. If pictures are rotten, and still survive, it is because there are people who like that kind. Pictures good and bad live on patronage. When the box office receipts fall down, that picture goes into the morgue.

"The main trouble with the so-called 'better element' is that they do not support the best when it is offered to the public. Besides, there are many who wail and weep about the bad pictures who down deep in their natures actually love the lavender. Their 'culture' is like a diamond stud in a dirty shirt-front.

"But good taste can be cultivated as well as bad. . . .

"... There is coming to this city soon the finest singing picture ever produced, and it is taking like wild-fire. Grace Moore, grand opera star in 'One Night of Love,' has captured the movie world. Even the green-eyed stars of Hollywood were actually thrilled to the limits of emotional endurance with that singing love-story. . . .

"Well, if you want good pictures, patronize 'One Night of Love.' Make good things pay. I am not interested in the box office of the Rialto, but I am greatly enthused in the fact that fine pictures do draw at the door. You will cry and laugh at the characters in this picture. It is the greatest production of the season. This is not an 'ad,' but a little essay on 'Taste' and I'm betting that the people of Elgin have good taste. We'll see!"

STAGE SHOW RETURN UP TO COMMUNITY

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

What about stage attractions?

Are they necessary? Do they build business? Do they increase goodwill? Have they a definite place in the motion picture theatre? These are pertinent questions, questions which are in the minds of many theatre managers at this time.

From many quarters we hear the dire cries of vaudeville agents, bookers and out-of-work actors. "People are tiring of movies alone," they warn. "They want something different. They want flesh. They want stage attractions."

Vaudeville Almost Obliterated

Let us look at the situation of the stage, particularly vaudeville, as it exists today, and see what truth, if any, there is in the above remarks. In the first place, vaudeville as it was originally has become almost entirely obliterated from the American stage. Houses featuring stellar acts alone are gone. Even the New York Palace has added motion pictures to its stage attractions. Perhaps the singular paradox is true here that motion pictures were added to "save" vaudeville. Or perhaps they were added to cut the enormous expense entailed in providing an all-star stage program.

In the average city theatre featuring vaudeville as a regular attraction in conjunction with motion pictures there has been built up a "regular" following, a following which is lured more by the fact that there is a stage show than by the usual film fare. This does not mean, however, that others will not be attracted by a picture of unusual strength.

The situation in the small city or town where stage attractions are presented only occasionally or not at all is quite different. And it is with the thousands of theatres located in small cities and towns that we are most concerned. In these places the drawing power of a stage attraction is furnished either by the novelty of "flesh" entertainment or the desire to see in person a "name" act.

There is only one method with which to test the box office value of stage shows and that is to try them. Your particular community may react favorably to any sort of stage attraction, or it may go for only "name" shows. Or still further, it may be cold to any type of "flesh" show."

Radio Adds "Names"

In recent years radio has contributed much to the supply of "name" acts available to smaller communities. Many excellent attractions work out of nearby stations. These units, after some time on the air, have surprisingly large followings. It is true that many standard vaudeville turns will fail to do business in a small community, yet some radio acts of doubtful merit will pack them in. It is a tribute to radio's tremendous power, and the alert showman should not only acknowledge it, but should attempt to capitalize on it.

Poor acts have ruined the possibility of future stage shows in many instances. Patrons, in these cases, have come to believe that the added attraction is some "cheap act" or that it is on the bill to bolster a weak picture program.

In the final analysis, the motion picture theatre is a place for the exhibition of motion pictures. Whether it should be used for purposes other than that depends upon the following factors:

The previous status of stage attractions in the community, the availability of good acts, audience reaction and box office value.—WILLIAM M. SHOLL, manager, Comique Theatre, Camden, Maine.

PICTURE REPORTS "QUITE A HELP"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

I have been following the "What the Picture Did for Me" department quite closely and have found it to be quite a help. Incidentally, I feel guilty for taking advantage of the other fellows' contributions, and not doing my bit—therefore I am going to try to make amends by doing a little contributing myself.

Exhibitors know that the most difficult kind of a picture to sell is one dealing with the industries or conditions of their immediate vicinity, because audiences want to forget their surroundings. An exhibitor in the Niagara Falls district realizes his patrons do not want to see pictures of Niagara Falls. . . . they'd rather see pictures of the African jungle. When an exhibitor does get a picture dealing with his own territory and can make his audiences go out of their way to stop and say a nice word about the picture, it must be a winner.

And that's exactly what happened to us with "Eskimo." Folks were skeptical here. They had met all members of the cast, they had seen conditions such as depicted in the picture, but the idea of making a picture out of it all, well, they were skeptical. But they came out of curiosity and for the first time in years we didn't have a single walk-out.

They've laughed and jeered at nearly all Alaskan pictures, because nine times out of ten some darn idiot would be walking away with a poke of gold dust worth $25,000—juggling it as if he were carrying a few feathers. Why don't they ever stop to figure out the weight of $25,000 in gold. And there are other incidents just as ridiculous.

But "Eskimo" was technically as flawless as a picture could be. True, there were a few double-exposures, but the idea as presented was in its complete form correct.

Van Dyke and his crew had no easy task—it was a tough grind and they all deserve a world of credit. We, of Alaska, have nothing but praise to offer to them. They've turned out a mighty fine picture.

Incidentally, I'd like to thank Van Dyke for transforming Myrna Loy from a sinister siren into a lovable female. His "Prizefighter and the Lady" did that. We have always been great admirers of Miss Loy and Mr. Van Dyke—our hats off to them.—DON ADLER, Empress Circuit, the Lathrop Company, Fairbanks, Alaska.

HARBINGERS OF BETTER TIMES

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

The writer has just returned from his vacation, and being of observant mind, made some observations, which in my modest opinion are harbingers of better times for everyone.

In many small towns, along the route from the Canadian Border to my home town (New York City), I observed every night crowded stores for evening shoppers; and many small movie houses displaying S. R. O. signs.

The streets were cluttered with autos, and in conversation with the local traffic cops, all made the same remark: "We have not seen these conditions since I was sucker enough to drop all my money in the Wall Street Boom."

The average movie executive can foresee the future about as well as the average theatre manager—and in this respect I feel we in the industry are on the eve of a healthy expansion. This does not mean that poor product will sell itself, but with improvement in output from the major studios, and liberal and constructive cooperation on the part of the directing heads of the industry, the movie theatres of the country will again be near their gross of the days before what we all remember as the Great Depression.

A general raise of the admission prices in all theatres would be strongly recommended by me.—J. S. SALMON, Manager, Riverside Theatre, Broadway and 96th Street, New York City.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

QUESTION NO. 248.—(A) Name some of the more important points in care of the commutator. (B) Suppose you have a horizontal type motor generator and one of its bearings becomes hot. What line of procedure would you adopt if you could switch to another MG set? If you had no other set and must use the one in service or shut down the show? (C) What constitutes undue heatings in coils, etc., of a motor or generator? (D) By whom is the maximum temperature fixed?

Answer to Question No. 242

Bluebook School Question No. 242 was:
(A) Is it possible almost to duplicate d. c. results in screen illumination with an a. c. arc? (B) Suppose you are to be employed in a large theatre under construction, would you advise taking current from 110 volt d. c. lines through rheostats, or would it be best to install two motor generator sets at a total cost of $1,200? Current 6 cents per kw hour; to operate 10 hours daily, including Sunday. There will be an 80 ampere M. P. projector arc and a 75 ampere spot, the latter used one hour and forty minutes daily. Part of money for installation to be borrowed at 6 per cent. What advice would you give? (C) What advantages have motor generator sets over mercury arc rectifiers?

The answers were mostly not very satisfactory this time, except for a limited number. Even some of those were not so hot. The following varied from fair to good: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; A. F. Sprafke; T. Van Vaulkenburg; C. Oldham; H. Edwards; G. A. Artley; M. C. Mellinger and H. Pitchkey; B. Diglah and P. Jackson; E. J. Felton, L. F. Erwin and K. Erwin; G. Johnson and N. T. Kane; O. Thum and I. D. Ackerly; S. F. and W. Love; H. D. Schofield, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; C. F. Davis and C. Conforti; C. and J. Hawken; D. L. Sinklow; L. and F. R. Russell; R. Wheeler and R. Suler; D. U. Granger; D. Stellegos and G. Wayne. J. T. Seiler—an excellent answer, but too late to be considered for publication.

(A) G. E. Doe says:

"That depends upon just how the word 'duplicate' be defined. If the definition be strict, I would answer with an emphatic no, for the reason that the character or tone of a. c. and d. c. light is basically different, due I suppose to difference in character of the carbons used.

"Using the old style a. c., it is possible to put on essentially as brilliant a picture as could be projected with a 60 ampere d. c. arc (I have done it myself.—F. H. R.), but not beyond that limit, I believe. However, the appearance would be very different, for the reason that a. c. light is, or perhaps I might better say was, so far as has to do with its use in projection, very harsh. It had a not very pleasing bluish white tinge.

"The new a. c. light source has a more pleasant tone or color, but I don't believe it has power to produce as much light—to illuminate a screen as brilliantly as would or could a 60 ampere arc.

"Everything considered, I don't believe the question could be answered by a flat yes or no, but if I were compelled to reply with one of the two words, it would be no."

(B) Because of the fact that I am working almost night and day on the new Bluebook, I cannot spare time to figure all this out. What seems to be the most simple, understandable answer is by Brothers Rau and Evans, but they have set M. G. efficiency entirely too high. Few exceed 70 per cent when new and at their best. However, Messrs. Rau and Evans have, anyhow, laid down correct lines upon which to make the computation.

"Ten hours a day, seven days a week, equals 3,650 hours a year. Disregarding change-overs, we will say a projection arc is used 3,042 and a spot 608 hours per year. Arc voltage of both spot and projector at 75 and 80 amperes (see table 24, page 400, Vol. 1 of Bluebook) from 60 to 63 volts. For the purpose we therefore will take 60 as the arc voltage. Therefore, through rheostats (110 line voltage) we would have $110 - 60 = 50$ volts to be broken down in resistance if rheostats be used.

"The yearly waste when using the projector arcs therefore would be 80 ampere times 50 volts times 3,042 hours equals 12,168 kilowatt hours, and if the current be 6 cents per K. W. H., then $12,168 \times 6$ cents equals \$730.08, which represents the loss from that source each year.

"Similarly the yearly waste for the spot would be 75×50 times 608 hours, equals 2,280 K. W. hours, which at 6 cents would be $136.80, or a total loss of $136.80 plus $730.08 equals $866.88.

"On the other hand, the M. G. set costs $1,200, which if borrowed at 6 per cent would cost $72 per year. If these generators be of a type requiring no ballast resistance and having an efficiency of 80 per cent (I know of nothing quite that good.—F. H. R.) then for every 100 watts paid for, only 80 watts would be of use, so that a projection arc needing 80 amperes times 60 volts, it figures out that 6,000 watts of power must be taken from the lines and paid for, the yearly loss being 1,200 watts times 3,042 hours or 3,650.4 K. W. H. loss, which at 6 cents means $219.02.

"Similarly the spot requires 4,500 watts, which figures out on the same basis as giving a loss of 1,125 watts, or 684 K. W. H. per year, amounting to $41.04 in coin of the realm. The total yearly M. G. loss, then, is $72 interest, plus $219.02 plus $41.04 equals $332.06.

"The loss when using rheostats was $866.88 and $866.88 — $332.06 equals $534.82 in favor of the M. G. sets, which on that basis would pay for themselves in a little more than two years and thereafter save money at the rate of $606.82 per year, interest payments having of course ceased."

I have shortened the answer a lot, but retained all its vital features. However, ballast-resistance should have been included in the M. G. set loss.—F. H. R.

(C) I guess I find I must also award first prize to Messrs. Rau and Evans on this section also. They say:

"The advantages of motor-generators over mercury arc rectifiers are:

"(1) A motor generator may be had in any desired capacity, whereas mercury arc rectifiers for projection work are not made to deliver more than 50 amperes.

"(2) Motor generators may be temporarily over-loaded to twice their capacity, whereas mercury arc rectifiers will not stand much overload. This of course gives the M. G. set a larger advantage at change-over when two arcs must be burned for a short time.

"(3) The current delivered from a commutator is less pulsating than that delivered by a mercury arc rectifier, therefore the M. G. current is more suitable, in theory at least, for projection.

"(4) The motor generator is more reliable. While mercury arc rectifier tubes have frequently been known to give good and faithful service over long periods of time, there is always the possibility of one 'letting go' at any moment—possibly five minutes after it is installed; possibly five months or perhaps a year thereafter, while a motor generator set properly handled and cared for is not likely to fail and when it does it usually gives ample warning."

WHO WILL BE

CHICAGO

The sparkling success of the Film Relief Dinner Dance at the Medinah Michigan Avenue Club should live long in the memory of the more than 1,000 present—not alone as an evening of outstanding fun and merriment, but as a source of personal pride among all those in the industry for its splendid execution. Beyond anything else it proved that folk hereabouts can and will cooperate. It was a great affair.

Fred S. Meyer of Milwaukee was greeted by a group of friends as he stopped off here on his way to the West Coast, where he has taken up his new duties as assistant to Carl Laemmle.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer takes over operation of McVickers theatre on December 3. The house is being renovated and redecorated and will play a policy of Shakespearean plays in connection with first-run pictures.

Russell Lamb, who operates the Oregon theatre, at Oregon, Ill., is building a brand new playhouse to seat about 500 at Aurora.

The Riverdale theatre at Riverdale, Ill., has been opened by Pat Wilson.

Phil Dunas, Columbia branch manager, is reported improving nicely following his recent operation.

R. J. Whitehead has opened the Midtown theatre at East Chicago, Ind.

Ed Sapiro has joined the sales staff of Superior Pictures and is traveling in the country territory.

Max Stahl, former manager here for United Artists and recently branch manager at Minneapolis, is understood to have resigned and to have been succeeded by Ralph Cramblett, who was office manager.

Capt. John B. Craig, producer of "The Sea Killer" is making personal appearances around town, amplifying his picture with some interesting fighting and sea stories.

Harry Thomas, president of First Division Pictures, was in town Monday.

Funeral services were held last Saturday for the father of George Gehring of the Rosewood theatre.

Henri Ellman of Capitol Film Exchange announces release the first week in December of the serial "Chandu the Magician."

D. Lolly, west coast producer, is in town arranging distribution for a new line of product.

Erwin Fensin of General Seating Company announces that his firm has established representatives in all parts of the country, handling seating problems.

George Liberman has opened offices at 1018 S. Wabash Avenue representing his father with a line of advertising flags and silk valances for theatre use.

HOLQUIST

Columbia Managers Meet

All Columbia eastern branch managers have been called to New York late this week for conferences at the Hotel St. Moritz concerning the selling of the new Frank Capra-directed "Broadway Bill." Abe Montague, general sales manager, will preside.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week to November 10, 1934, from 104 houses in 18 major cities of the country, reached $1,139,536, an increase of $78,844 over the total for the preceding calendar week, ended November 3, when 105 houses in 18 major cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,060,692.

J. C. JENKINS--His COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

If we felt sure that Chic Sale would read this, we'd be inclined to write him an open letter, because we saw him recently in a one-reel picture when the veterinary told him he couldn't cure his dog Shep and for him to take him out and shoot him.

We knew that Chic wouldn't shoot old Shep. He just couldn't shoot the old family dog, his mother didn't raise him that way, and when he took his gun and told his old pet Shep to come along, he played it so strong and made it seem so real that a fellow grabbed us by the arm and said, "Say, Colonel, he won't shoot old Shep, will he?" and when the old family pet curled up in a hollow stump and looked up at Chic when he pulled up the gun to shoot him, we wanted to yell right out loud, "Hold on there, you old rheumatic Hoosier, don't you shoot that dog."

Well, he didn't shoot him. If the director of that picture had let Chic shoot old Shep we'd have grabbed our shotgun and taken the next train for Hollywood. Chic pointed his gun up in the air and pulled the trigger and "bang" she went, and then he and Shep went back home, and when Chic saw Ma looking at old Shep going across the lawn, he said, "Ma, I missed him."

More Power to Chic Sale

We have always thought a whole lot of Chic, but when he shot up in the air and took old Shep back home we resolved that if we ever went to Hollywood again we would buy Chic an all-day-sucker and Shep two dollars worth of beefsteak.

Not counting his mother, the best friend a boy ever had was his dog. It doesn't matter what kind of a dog it is, he may have a pedigree a mile long or he may be just an ordinary cur that is only part dog and part skyoodle, just so he is a dog, but Chic's dog Shep had some royal blood in him, he wasn't just an alley cur, he evidently had been raised on Jersey cream and huckleberry pie, and he knew every telephone pole in the neighborhood that the cats roosted on. Any one could tell by looking at him that he was a dog of intelligence and had been raised by one of the best families in the neighborhood. His ancestors came over in the Mayflower, there's no doubt about that, and his father was one of the "dogs of war," but it didn't make any difference to Chic, he didn't care if Shep had royal blood in him nor if he had mange and was covered with fleas, he wasn't going to shoot him, and that's why we are stronger than ever for Chic. If you exhibitors haven't shown this one-reel picture you better get it, and if you don't find it a more interesting picture than any "hug 'em on the sofa" picture you ever played, then the sow is yours and we'll throw in the pigs.

We saw a picture at the Moon theatre last night—in fact, there were two of them, but we didn't stay to see all of the first one because we would sooner stand out on the corner and watch the cars go by. If the second one wasn't any better than the first one it must have been awful. In the first picture there was a man and a woman trying to determine who murdered the teacher in a high school, and the way they went about it convinced us that they had just come out of a coal mine or one was the district attorney and the other the chief of police. We knew a couple of kids once who tracked a 'coon three miles and found him up a blackoak tree, but this pair couldn't solve a mystery if they saw the guy shoot the girl. When it comes to long-headed work you can leave it to Hollywood every time.

Out of a spirit of justice and fairness we presume we shouldn't say anything about it, but if the doctor will permit us to travel it is quite likely that by the time this gets in print we will be circulating around with the Sooners down in Alfalfa Bill's domain, and after they run us out of there we will horn in on the Longhorns down in Ma Ferguson's pasture. We are mentioning this because of the joy it will bring to this northern country to learn that we are going to a climate warm enough for us to take a bath once in a while.

We note by a recent issue of the HERALD that one Mr. Arthur Caesar says that the reason why people are going more to the movies now is because they want to see "what they cut out." We presume that Mr. Caesar knows what he is talking about, that he is a man of excellent judgment, but it is our opinion that the reason why there are more people going to the movies is not to see "what they cut out," but rather "what they left in."

We met Gertie McFadden on the street yesterday and she asked us how we liked her new hat. We asked her what hat, and she said, "Why, the hat I have on," and we replied, "Oh, is that a hat? We supposed it was the cover off of one of your mother's stewpans." We'll betcha that Gertie chews gum and works crossword puzzles while her mother is washing the dishes and dusting the furniture.

Somehow it seems that every time the rain comes down on the cornbelt section the wheat, corn, hogs and cattle come down on the Board of Trade. Must be that those gamblers down there are trying to "get in out of the wet." Personally, we know that every time we take a wet bath our standing in the community goes up.

If you guys can get your minds off the depression for a while you might sound off in letters to the HERALD. Harold Stettman of Chandler, Okla., puts in the most of his spare time gossiping with the neighbor ladies. Phil Rand of Salmon, Idaho, used to write some mighty interesting stuff before the state went Democratic; Bert Silver of Greenville, Mich., used to tell us all about it after he was elected mayor of the town; Andy Anderson of Detroit Lakes, Minn., says he would write oftener, but that he has to play golf with Bennie Benfield of Morris, Minn., and Bennie says that the exchanges at Minneapolis didn't even leave him his typewriter; Joe Hewitt at Robinson, Ill., might be governor of the state if he would write a little oftener;

P. G. Estee of Parker, S. D., says he is going to get a job watering trees on the Government's "Shelterbelt" project. So there you are. They've all got an alibi of some kind. And besides that, why don't we hear from that lady down in Goose Creek, Texas, any more? She used to write some pretty interesting stuff. And then there is Reeve of Maynard, Texas. We don't hear from him any more, but then that's probably because the deer and turkey season is open down there, and besides that, he probably was making a lot of campaign speeches and is excusable for his neglect. Anybody who has the nerve to make a campaign speech is excusable every time (if somebody don't shoot him). But speaking of Goose Creek, Texas. We are reminded that we were down close to that place a couple of years ago and would have gone over there but we were told that there wasn't any bridge over the creek, and the geese had all gone down to Corpus Christi. Betcha that will get a rise from Goose Creek.

If Joe E. Brown keeps on making as funny pictures as "The Six Day Bike Rider" we are going to take the matter up with the NRA and see what can be done about it. Frank McHugh helped Joe do some of the bike riding, and Frank isn't slow himself.

There was a fellow in the picture they called "Colonel Jenkins" and we couldn't determine whether they were trying to make fun of us or not. He was the father of the girl Joe was stuck on and if Joe butts into the Jenkins family we'll have an action for damage. Anyhow, it is a mighty funny picture, just as Joe makes all of his pictures. Better get it and give your customers a good laugh.

Milliken Talks to Women's Club and Owners in Delaware

Carl Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, addressed several hundred members of the City Federation of Women's Clubs at Wilmington, Del., and managers of local theatres advising them of their importance to the industry and to the morale of their community through the medium of motion pictures.

"It is the business of organizations, such as your own, to set the fashion for motion pictures," he said. "Therein lies your importance to the industry, but your greater responsibility lies in safeguarding the atmosphere that surrounds your children, the youth of today."

Eton Four Signed

Columbia Phonograph on Tuesday signed the "Four Eton Boys," vocalists, to an exclusive recording contract, starting immediately with "Rock and Roll" and "Oh Lee," both from United Artists' picture "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round." The Four Etons—Charlie and Jack Day, Earl Smith and Art Gentry—have appeared variously on the stage, radio and screen.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BLACK MOON: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—This is a big picture, but one of those horror pictures that don't do any business, as most of them after the first show tell the folks it is good, but don't go and see it. I can't see why they rate this kind of story as good entertainment. The people out our way have had all the horror they can digest in their everyday life, in the past few years, and they just won't buy it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

NINTH GUEST, THE: Donald Cook, Genevieve Tobin, Hardie Albright—A good mystery picture with a good cast and plenty to keep an audience entertained. Running time, 69 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

NINTH GUEST, THE: Donald Cook, Genevieve Tobin—After the first reel everything is in one room. Eight single murders, one by one, by an unseen hand until finally he is outwitted and the picture ends. I would call this a fair program picture. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: George Breakston, Ralph Morgan, Lois Wilson, Frankie Darro, Jackie Searl—I could not make this picture click for me. It lacked something. It pleased only about 50 per cent. May go over all right in some spots. Personally, am sorry to say that I did not care for it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Oct. 7.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—Failed to do average business for us. It's a fine picture but I doubt now, as I have always doubted, if operetta will go in small towns. I personally don't like operetta any more than my customers. Musical comedy with plenty comedy is what they want. Their idea of singing is Bing Crosby singing "It's Only a Shanty in Old Shanty Town." They will make straight opera next, and what a flop it will be.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

RUSTY RIDES ALONE: Tim McCoy, Barbara Weeks—This Western is O.K., but it looks like the good old western stars are getting sissy; at least that's what my patrons say. They love a good fist fight and it looks like they just can't get one. Why doesn't somebody put out some honest-to-goodness old-time Western pictures? Running time, 60 minutes. Played Oct. 26-27.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Town and rural patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy—A good action picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt, Lila Lee, Allen Jenkins, Donald Cook, Jean Arthur—A very good picture with a good story and plenty of action.—J. C. Darst, Dante Va. General patronage.

First National

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Here is a knockout. The guy that wouldn't like this should have his head examined. Aline MacMahon has been awfully good in some of her former roles but she's the best yet in this one. In fact, the entire cast is good. Boost this one to the skies and you'll be glad afterwards. Played Oct. 21-22.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Chalk up another hit for Joe, and he more than makes up for whatever shortcomings there may have been in "A Very Honorable Guy." Business both for Sunday and Monday was above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE, THE: Warren William, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—This is a very good picture of the mystery type, from the story by Van Dine. William plays his role excellently, but is not as good as William Powell. There are plenty of mysterious situations, with the necessary comedy and a slight touch of romance. The trailer sold the show for us and will do the same for you. Warner's trailers are the best produced. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Oct. 27.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE, THE: Warren William—Did a little experimenting with this. I played it on a Saturday instead of the usual western. Result was all the usual western fans turned out, and it brought lots of folks I never see in my theatre on Saturdays. A dandy good mystery show. Played Oct. 20.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

In this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson—I consider this Robinson's best to date, but was a disappointment at box-office. Why, I am unable to say. Played Oct. 16-17.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess—Fair picture of its kind. I played it with a vaudeville act and it seemed to satisfy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak, Helen Lowell—This is a very entertaining picture. Story good, acting fine. A mighty good picture for any theatre. Played Oct. 25-26.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess—A dandy good show will please in most any spot. Played Oct. 9-10.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Of course, Shirley Temple is the whole show. A great picture. Fox should also take a bow for their pictures in 1934. They seem to please in our little village. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—Another good one by America's Little Sweetheart. Not as well liked as "Little Miss Marker" but we can't get too much of this new star, but why must there be crooks, stealing, in her picture. Our mature audience has fallen hard for her but think haven't given her the ideal story yet. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 12-13.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—If you want something to please the family, don't fail to use this one. I think it is better than a Rogers for drawing and pleasing the entire family. Played Nov. 2-3.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Personally, I liked this one, but a lot of my patrons didn't. Pleased about 75 per cent. Lloyd didn't make a very strong comeback. Played Oct. 14.—Lawrence Cleary, Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Okla. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—A good picture for the whole family. Drew good business on first day. Only kick was that Harold Lloyd was hard to understand in spots. Played Oct. 7-8-9.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. College camps patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Everyone glad to see Lloyd back in such a good picture. Hope he makes more like this and not so long between. Can win back the older patrons and make new fans of younger ones. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Oct. 3-4.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—This one seemed to give them something they were not looking for, but they were well pleased and some extra business second night. Played Oct. 19-20.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers, James Dunn—Personally I thought it as good as the usual Gaynor-Farrell picture, with not nearly so much sweet stuff in it. James Dunn and Ginger Rogers good.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—Very good entertainment. Oland plays detective and is plenty good. Will please anybody who likes this type of story. Played Oct. 24-25.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Well liked by our Friday-Saturday crowd, children ranchers, cowboys. Had "She's My Lilly," "Mountain Melody," "The Lost Race," and "Lullaby Land" (U. A.) on program and people are still talking about the good show. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Oct. 19-20.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien, Mary Brian—As clever a comedy drama as you would want, drew well, and pleased. Played Oct. 23-24.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Very good picture. Believe best of Rogers' pictures. It pleased them all. Satisfactory business. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Oct. 24-25.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Here is an ideal picture for a small town. Our audience always likes Rogers. Satisfied the box office and also the cash customers. What more can anyone ask? Played Nov. 3-4.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Went over better than any Rogers to date. Not that the picture was any better than the others, but there seemed to be something about it that drew better than the others.—Jack Greene, Genesee Theatre, Genesee, Ill. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—Always like Will Rogers, even the children. Each one is better than the last. If our farmers could sell their hay would see more of them for these good down-to-earth pictures. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Oct. 7-9.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Pleased most of my patrons and did extra business. Played Oct. 12-13.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—Here is a little picture that had the audience roaring with laughter most of the time. Mitchell and Durant are absolutely sure fire laugh provokers. Business good first night and above average second night. Will please everyone who sees it. Played Oct. 2-3.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. Small college town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans, James Dunn, Shirley Temple—They started out to make the year's masterpiece but it seems that they took in too much territory as it seems pretty much disconnected but at that there is a lot in it to entertain. Shirley Temple in her number with James Dunn is good enough and important enough to advertise. Business on this was above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Majestic

SCARLET LETTER, THE: Colleen Moore, Hardie Albright, Henry B. Walthall—An old classic, well done. A tieup with the schools would do well to help put this over, especially with the English departments. Majestic may well be proud of their work on this one. Business satisfying.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MGM

BARRETT'S OF WIMPOLE STREET, THE: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Charles Laughton, Maureen O'Sullivan—An excellent picture. Be sure to play this one. Satisfied all of my regular patrons. Played three days to satisfactory business. Running time, 109 minutes. Played Oct. 28-29-30.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—The stars held up this story by good acting. Proved a good draw. Running time, 74 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Does business and pleases.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—A very good picture. Pleased all that saw it. Metro has been delivering the goods this year. Played Sept. 30.—Lawrence Cleary, Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Okla. General patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—A splendid picture. Gave satisfaction to all that saw it here. Some said Miss Crawford's best, but all of her pictures are satisfactory and that goes for Clark Gable, too. Played Oct. 28-29.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—One of the best baseball pictures we have ever had. Combined with comedy and suspense it makes a good bill. Running time, 72 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—A good baseball story. Nat Pendleton and Ted Healy get a lot of laughs. Plenty of murders go with this one. Played Oct. 7.—Lawrence Cleary, Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Okla. General patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—They liked Harlow in this and I have no unfavorable comments. Metro gave us a good picture here and it goes to show you can build up a star in clean pictures. Running time, 74 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn—A dandy little program picture that will please. Showed on 10c nights to good business. Played Oct. 31.—Lawrence Cleary, Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Okla. General patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—A bang-up good show. Show it. Play it up big. Played Sept. 16.—Lawrence Cleary, Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Okla. General patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Hersholt, Elizabeth Allan, Otto Kruger—Did not see the picture myself, but had many favorable comments on the picture. Did no extra business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Oct. 2-3.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—This is a splendid picture, clean and entertaining. Gave splendid satisfaction. War pictures don't draw much business, but this one satisfied all the customers we got in to see it. Played Oct. 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer—This pleased all the Shearer fans but don't consider it a good bet for a small town. Played Oct. 7-8.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

STORM AT DAYBREAK: Kay Francis, Nils Asther, Walter Huston, Phillips Holmes, Eugene Pallette—Although Kay Francis is very popular here, she failed to please in this one. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Oct. 2-3.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Charles Butterworth, Jimmy Durante—A very good picture, but Jimmy Durante is like putting smallpox on your box-office. Business far below normal. Played Nov. 4.—Lawrence Cleary, Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Okla. General patronage.

VIVA VILLA!: Wallace Beery, Leo Carillo, Fay Wray, Stuart Erwin, Donald Cook, Joseph Schildkraut, Katherine DeMille, Henry B. Walthall—One wonderful picture that drew and pleased. Running time, 103 minutes. Played Sept. 27-28.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

JANE EYRE: Colin Clive, Virginia Bruce—This was well received by our teachers, school children. Made a good program picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Oct. 10-11.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine De Mille, Duke Ellington and his orchestra—A good picture, with clean and well balanced entertainment for everyone. Although this picture gave an interesting portrayal of life of the Nineties as lived then, it failed to draw. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Oct. 21-22-23.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

ANOTHER QUARTET OF CONTRIBUTORS

The Far Northwest and West have it this week in new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me."
Members of the quartet are:

Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Oregon

Lawrence Cleary, Rex Theatre, Eldorado, Oklahoma

Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah

Don Adler, Empress Theatre, Fairbanks, Alaska

New contributors every week tell the story of the steady growth of the department.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine De Mille, Duke Ellington and his orchestra—By far the worst Mae West vehicle to date. And what a drop she has taken this time. Business way off. I advance two reasons how Mae might become what she "used to be." 1. Have a real writer turn out a story for Mae, and tell her to keep her hands off. 2. If she's got to fall in love, and therefore become sentimental, have her do so in the last reel, instead of the first. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 22-23.—Antonio C. Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine De Mille, Duke Ellington and his orchestra—Don't think the show business realizes yet what a wonder Mae West is. She is the greatest showman of us all. She is a genius as an actress. If I headed Paramount I would have her stick her head in on every set of every picture turned out in Hollywood. My hat is off to her. I would like to have her tell me her ideas of running a theatre. I would sit quiet and listen with my large ears.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—The crusade for better pictures is having its effect even in small towns, as this didn't draw as well as her other pictures. Our patrons were curious to see her once but unless she can make different pictures will be out for country towns. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Sept. 30-Oct. 1-2.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Henry Wilcoxon—All the newspaper controversy about what Cecil DeMille thought could go into a picture made people curious to see this one. Drew ordinary business and pleased most of them. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Oct. 21-23.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino, Lona Andre, Toby Wing—This picture pleased the Friday-Saturday crowd even though it was run late. Played Oct. 5-6.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

CRIME WITHOUT PASSION: Claude Rains—The universal verdict is that this is the poorest picture ever seen in this town. They held their noses and walked out on it the first night, and the second night nobody came in. The title is terrible, and the picture is worse.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN: Cary Grant, Frances Drake—This is not as good a box office as Cary Grant usually draws. A good picture of its kind. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Oct. 26-27.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LAST ROUNDUP, THE: Randolph Scott—The only time it has rained here in six months was the day I played this, but in spite of the rain did a very nice business. Played Oct. 13.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—A very pleasing picture. Good midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Gracie Allen, George Burns, George Barbier, Joan Marsh, Veloz and Yolanda, Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians—Received many more favorable comments on this than any other such picture in some time. It pleased greatly.—Jack Greene, Genesee Theatre, Genesee, Ill. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen—A very funny comedy. Didn't do much, due to tough competition.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—This picture proved to be the most pleasing picture I have screened for some time. The patron comment was unusually good and the draw was the biggest surprise I have had for weeks and weeks. Standing room only on Saturday is the answer to any exhibitor's prayer. The story was faithfully portrayed by the leads in this picture and Pauline Lord and Fields as well as Zasu Pitts have certainly carved a niche in screen fame in this picture. Congratulations, Paramount. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Oct. 26-27.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Jack Oakie—A spectacular musical production. Fair Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—Had several favorable comments on this one, to my surprise, as I did not think so much of the picture. But it was okay with me if it pleased the patrons. Played Oct. 23-24.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields, Baby Leroy, Judith Allen—Title, in my opinion, kept folks away. People don't want old-fashioned things, including pictures. The picture was one of the best from a comedy angle that ever played here. Fields is about as clever as it is possible for a human to be. Those who were here laughed till their sides ached. Real belly laughs.—Jack Greene, Genesee Theatre, Genesee, Ill. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Ben Bernie, Jack Oakie—Good entertainment. Fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SIX OF A KIND: Six of 'em—This picture is so darn silly in spots that it actually gets funny. Will satisfy those looking for something to laugh at. Played Oct. 25-26.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—Like all Zane Grey stories, this one did a wonderful Saturday business for me. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Sept. 29.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—Ran this a little late, I am glad I did, as it drew at box-office and most important of all it pleased the patrons. Second day better than first, which is unusual. Played Oct. 4-5.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Caviar to the local Muziks. How they gobbled it up. And a fine picture it is. If your public likes horses, here is a roundup of business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—This very good action outdoor picture drew extra business for a small town Friday-Saturday show. Scenery and story extra good. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Friday-Saturday, Sept. 28-29.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby—Entertaining musical comedy. Fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard—I would call this just a fair picture, and I think that was about everybody's opinion. Did a fair business for two days. Played Oct. 29-30.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, Ethel Merman, Leon Errol—A swell picture and am sorry that I did not use this one earlier. Did a very nice business for the second night to be raining. Played Oct. 30-31.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, David Holt—Nice little picture to not so nice business. The kid is good but not great.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa. General patronage.

RKO

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin—This is a pleasing comedy drama. Fair Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin, Rochelle Hudson, Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher—This is a very interesting and clean picture, far above the average run of pictures. Pleased everyone who saw it. Stuart Erwin could take the part of Will Rogers and do a right good job of it. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 24-25.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR: Otto Kruger—Another "perfect crime" story. Otto Kruger is very good.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, Ned Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—This is the poorest excuse for a big musical that I have ever seen. The general opinion of the patrons was that it wouldn't even make a good two-reel comedy. Business poor. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Oct. 12-13.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. College town patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—There is good business left in this old timer. Don't be afraid of it if you have to run it.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—As a rule Dix is not a big hit but this one proved a satisfactory offering. Running time, 70 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding, John Boles—They don't go for Harding here and they are off the "Back Street" story, having heard it frequently. Suffering from late playing, too. John Boles, an excellent and magnetic actor, has been killed here by prior crummy production under directors in name, who are farmhands in fact. Too bad.—John is mighty good.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—Another great love drama that brought tears to practically all the patrons, but only fair business at the box office. Played Oct. 1-2.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. College town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn, Joan Bennett, Paul Lukas, Frances Dee, Jean Parker, Edna May Oliver, Douglass Montgomery, Henry Stephenson, Spring Byington—Ran this year late because of reasons exhibitors can guess. The point is that it grosses like nobody's business yet. Exhibitors should give it their best dates and advertise it like blazes and forget its age. Running time, 107 minutes.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—A very funny picture; gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Norman Foster, Marian Nixon—This is certainly an action picture. Just a little overdone to be entertaining. No one can accuse Jimmy of being lazy on a picture, but my customers said it made them dizzy to look at it. I don't know what they mean; they must have liked it, as they stuck through it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summer-ville—Just fair. This team did not draw usual business and the reaction proved it caused no extra comments. Not as funny as their previous pictures. Running time, 68 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Karen Morley, Edward Arnold—This is just another RKO picture that is lacking in action, but 100 per cent talking. The story makes very poor entertainment and walkouts were plentiful. It deals with a very personal subject, and for that reason very few patrons will like it. RKO should buy better story material if they continue producing pictures. Played to late show Saturday night to only fair business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 27.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, Buster Crabbe, Edna May Oliver—Too much high pitched women's chatter in this to be real entertainment. Didn't please. Running time, 71½ minutes. Played Oct. 5-6.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

United Artists

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Was afraid of this for small town but it did better than expected. Has such a remarkable story and directed it so well, held them spell-bound, and the ladies, young ones, too, think Robert Donat good. Some remarked not an actor in Hollywood could have played Dantes like him. Running time, 113 minutes. Played Oct. 28-30.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

SORRELL AND SON: H. B. Warner, Hugh Williams—A great story. But those English pictures just cannot go over somehow. Folks don't get the lingo; hard to understand English actors. Recording may have had something to with it. As it was, it was poor entertainment.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

Universal

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray—Just another program picture that will get by if you're not expecting too much. Played Oct. 18-19.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris—Fairly good comedy drama.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan—Not so bad as I feared. Did average Sunday business. Women turned out to see Sullavan, and the men stayed away. I would like to see her in a good story some time.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE CAPTIVE, THE: Nils Asther, Gloria Stuart—A below average feature. Played on double bill. Running time, 61 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—Usual western. Rather slim Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—This is a good western and drew well for me on a one day Saturday showing. Played Oct. 6.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—First class comedy and pleased 100 per cent. Pleases all classes. Running time, 60 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—This is very good entertainment of the comedy type and should please any audience. It is straight comedy, fast moving, with spicy dialogue and comedy situations. It is typical family entertainment and will make an excellent family day picture. In addition to the stars, there is a great supporting cast that adds to the entertainment. Played one day to good business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Oct. 31.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—This is a very good musical comedy, but not up to the Warner standard set by the preceding musicals. Dick Powell sings several popular selections and the girl spectacles are different from the others, but the plot is not very good. The supporting cast play their parts wonderfully. The trailer will sell the show for you. Played two days to very good business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Oct. 29-30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—A good all-around comedy drama. More comedy than drama and considerable suspense for good measure. Eugene Pallette while drunk pressing a fire alarm button thinking that he is pressing the signal for an elevator is a masterpiece of business. Business a good average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson, Frank McHugh, Allen Jenkins—Comprising a smoothly moving story, interwoven with fine, clean-cut comedy and supported further by five song hits injected at the most opportune moments, makes "Happiness Ahead" one of the finest romance successes with music introduced on the screen over a long period of time. The star, Dick Powell, swings into more dramatic sequences portraying his prowess as an actor as well as a wonderful singer of popular ballads, which will in all probability increase his popularity standing among public participants of screen entertainment. In opposition is the first screen performance of a beautiful and talented star, Josephine Hutchinson, who has already inoculated into the public a brand of joyful personality that brought the stamp of acceptance into prominence. This star is destined to have a flourishing career and will reach higher elevations now occupied by foremost personalities of the screen. The entertainment is spurred to further success by a dependable supporting cast in the personage of ever-popular Frank McHugh, the life of any film, and John Halliday, Al Jenkins and a host of others. The screen title has a two-fold significance, "Happiness Ahead" for the public and "Happiness Ahead" for box-office. Hang out your "Happiness Ahead" sign and let everyone be happy. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Nov. 4-5-6-7.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. General patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—Good Sunday business. This drew well with the young people.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOUSEWIFE: George Brent—A nice little program picture and should satisfy anybody looking for light entertainment. Played Oct. 11-12.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney—I have seen better Cagney than this, but there were no complaints from the audience. Fair midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KEY, THE: Edna Best, William Powell, Colin Clive—One of the very worst pictures of the year; nothing to it whatsoever except Edna Best's unusual beauty and William Powell's suave acting.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods—Rough, bawdy and funny. Good business on election night.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell—This pleased about 75 per cent in my situation. Picture very entertaining for those who like a good deal of rough and tumble stuff. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Sept. 30-Oct. 1.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell—This is mighty good entertainment as a program picture for any house. Stars fine and a good rough story put over clean. All said good show when they left the house. And that is all that is required nowadays. Played Oct. 30-31.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

AUTOGRAPH HUNTER: Krazy Kat Cartoon—One of the best of cartoons. Good imitations of all the famous screen stars. Running time, 1 reel.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. Small college town patronage.

PUNCH DRUNKS: 3 Stooges—The Stooges at their best. Brought more laughs than any comedy we have played for some time. It's good. Running time, 2 reels.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. Small college town patronage.

Educational

HALF BAKED RELATIONS: Andy Clyde—A very, very good comedy. I feel sorry for anyone who cannot get a real kick out of seeing this excellent comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY: Musical Comedies—Our first of this series but one of the best two-reelers we ever ran. Patrons said this alone worth price of admission. The dancing of Mahoney the best ever and chorus of colored children brought the house down. Running time, 20 minutes.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

SUPER SNOOPER, THE: Andy Clyde Comedy—Pleased here. Running time, 20 minutes.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SUPER-STUPID: Vince Barnett, Billy Gilbert—This is only fair entertainment of the slapstick variety. There are a few laughs, and that is about all. The producers spend too much on features and too little on shorts. Here's hoping the future will bring better shorts to the screen. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MGM

BIG IDEA, THE: Musical Revues—Just average. Will get by. Running time, two reels.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE DAY: Charley Chase—Nothing to rave about but a good, average comedy. Hope they improve and get more laughs in their comedies. Running time, 20 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

Paramount

CAB CALLOWAY'S HI-DE-HO: Headliners—Swell stuff.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Color Classics—They are still talking about this and catchy tunes. The color is good and has nearest to depth yet made. Running time, 9 minutes.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

SHOEIN' HOSSES: Popeye the Sailor—This is one of the best cartoon comedies of all time. We played this one day and many patrons came to see it two or three times. This is undoubtedly one of the greatest entertaining series of shorts on the market today. Running time, 7 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General country patronage.

SOCIETY NOTES: Color Classics—Knockout comedy will make a dead bill a live one. Grab it to play with the illustrated English drawing room conversation pictures that the producers worship because of their inferiority complex.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT A SOLDIER: Betty Boop Cartoon—Another good cartoon from Betty. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

RKO

AIR TONIC: Ted Fio Rito and Band—A very entertaining presentation of Ted Fio Rito. The folks like to see these famous bands. You see more of them in a comedy like this than in most features in which they are listed as stars. Running time, 2 reels.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. Small college town patronage.

BIG MOUTHPIECE, THE: Chick Chandler, Tom Kennedy—One of the funniest comedies we played in some time. Full of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Town and rural patronage.

EVERYTHING'S DUCKY: Clark and McCullough Series—As unfunny as the depression.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SEA SORE: Monte Collins—This is only fair entertainment and we had many walkouts while this was showing. Arthur Tracy sings one number, but the terrible recording spoils this. Here's hoping the remainder of RKO shorts will be much better. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

UNLUCKY STRIKE: Chick Chandler Series—An improvement on the last year's product. Hope they keep it up. Running time, 20 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

United Artists

LULLABY LAND: Silly Symphonies—These Silly Symphonies very good and this exceptional but some complain why put so many big goblins into reels for children. The little tots, our future patrons, have nightmares. Why not, not quite so pronounced if there is a bogey man.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

MIRRORS: Freddy Rich and Orchestra—Very clever band reel using mirrors, getting all kinds of effects. Music good. Running time, 1 reel.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. Small college town patronage.

SALTED SEANUTS: Big V Comedies—Another poor subject from an organization that could improve.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

SHAKE YOUR POWDER PUFF: Merrie Melodies—This is a very good musical cartoon comedy that pleased all of my patrons, especially the kids. Vitaphone is the one and only producer that produces good shorts continually, and they lead the field with the best shorts on the market. Running time, 7 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SLACKERS OF THE JUNGLE: E. M. Newman Musical World Journeys Series—This is one of the very best single reels I have shown on my screen for months. Very, very interesting subject. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

'TIS SPRING: Broadway Brevities—A very good color subject. Running time, two reels.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

VIVA BUDDY: Looney Tunes—Very good cartoon with likeable resemblance of Wallace Beery of Viva Villa fame appearing. Entertaining. Running time, 1 reel.—Dwight Harkins, State Theatre, Tempe, Ariz. Small college town patronage.

YEAST IS YEAST: Broadway Brevities Series—Not very good. Running time, 2 reels.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LOST JUNGLE, THE: Clyde Beatty—Just played the last chapter. It drew the youngsters. Was better than some of previous Mascot serials we have played, in that every chapter was not a long re-hash of preceding episodes.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner Contest Closes

Photoplay Magazine, in its December issue, is announcing the winner in the Warner-Photoplay nationwide contest to select a cast for "Anthony Adverse," to be produced by Warner. It was announced that 157 prizes were awarded.

Variety Club To Move

The Columbus Variety Club, Tent No. 2, plans to vacate its present quarters in the Deshler Wallick Hotel, and move into an elaborate suite in the Neil Hotel, which now is being prepared.

Bank to Appeal Ruling In Allied Owners Case

A notice of intention to appeal a United States district court decision denying to Manufacturers' Trust Company the right to vote the $12,000,000 Allied Owners' Corporation bond indenture, for which it is trustee, in Allied's reorganization, was filed in Brooklyn last week.

Allied Owners, a debtor corporation under Section 77-B of the bankruptcy laws, owns several theatres in Brooklyn, Birmingham, Ala., Tremont, O., and Glens Falls, N. Y. Its $23,000,000 claim against Paramount-Publix was recently settled. If Manufacturers' Trust should be upheld in the appeals court, it would have the most important voice in the reorganization of Allied Owners.

Sherman Sails for London To Do Film Writing

Al Sherman, New York motion picture newspaper critic and writer, and former advertising-publicity director of Mascot Pictures, will arrive in London over the week-end to represent the New York Morning Telegraph, of which he has been film editor, and also to write for various motion picture fan magazines of this country. Mr. Sherman's first two assignments will be to interview Signor Marconi, wireless inventor, and James Joseph Walker, ex-mayor of New York.

Mr. Sherman has under consideration some assignments for London producing companies.

RCA Adds Another City

RCA has added Chicago to the new inter-city radio telegraph service of RCA Communications, Inc., making a total of six large cities in the domestic network, the others being New York, Boston, Washington, San Francisco and New Orleans. Seattle, Detroit and Los Angeles are to be brought into the system shortly.

Radio in China Deal

A deal has been closed with the Peacock Motion Picture Company, Inc., of Shanghai, China, for distribution there of all RKO Radio product for the new season. It was closed by Telfair Knight, and is the fourth consecutive year such an arrangement has been made.

Buffalo Exchange Dissolved

Ace Films, Buffalo independent exchange, has been dissolved. Basil Brady is handling sales of Mundus product for United Artists out of the Buffalo office and Emmett Weakley has joined F. C. Pictures, another local independent exchange.

Heads Omaha Film Board

D. V. McLucas, United Artists Exchange manager in Omaha, has been reelected president of the local Film Board of Trade. C. K. Olson, Warner manager, has been reelected vice-president.

Lou Breese Transferred

Lou Breese, musical director and orchestra conductor at Shea's Buffalo theatre since January, has been transferred to a similar position at the Brooklyn Paramount.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

*An international association of showmen meeting weekly
in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress*

AN OPEN LETTER TO EXHIBITORS

"Mr. Anonymous", to whom we referred on this page, October 27 issue, has since confidentially made known to us his identity. Coincidentally, his original communication has to do with the evils taken up by Mr. J. T. Knight, Jr., which are discussed further on this page. It is fitting, therefore, that since he has revealed himself, we publish below this manager's open letter directed to circuit executives.

Gentlemen:

As a theatre manager in charge of one of your profitable situations, I would like to call your attention to a most unfair condition that exists in the majority of your theatres and which directly affects us managers.

The unfair condition I refer to is your practice and policy of paying motion picture operators more money than you pay us who are held responsible for your profits and losses.

You will of course argue that the unions force you to pay the operators more than you pay us; but just because we are not members of any union, is that any reason why you should take advantage of us and pay us less?

I do not believe it practical or feasible for a manager to belong to a union, but I do believe that for the good of your organizations and for the morale of your managers that you should immediately remedy this unfair condition by giving us salaries commensurate with our positions and responsibilities and not compel us to play second fiddle to our operators.

After all, there is such a thing as self-respect, but I for one find it difficult to maintain mine when those who work under me and are supposed to take orders from me are paid more than I.

Am I the only one to believe that the manager should be the highest paid employee in a theatre? If so, then I will forever keep my peace and take a back seat.

Gentlemen, if you divided your average manager's weekly salary by the number of hours he devotes to your theatre each week you would discover that we earn about 10 cents per hour. And yet you have the nerve to blame us when business is bad.

Perhaps the remedy would be the insertion of the following clause in the exhibitors' section of the code:

"For the good of organization and to enable theatre managers to maintain their self-respect, no manager must be paid less money than his operators."

Regret having to write you this way, anonymously, but I can't afford to jeopardize my salary as my family depends upon it and I still get a kick out of successfully operating my theatre.

EVEN MORE URGENT

That J. T. Knight, Jr., writing under the heading "An Economic Basis for Wage Scales", in this issue of Better Theatres, recommends a permanent profit-sharing plan for theatre employees, is not as significant at this time as his exposure of weaknesses in the payroll budget and the subterfuges employed to avoid payment of just compensation to the manager and other unprotected groups. Profit-sharing has been advocated time and again in these pages as a solution of many theatre ills, and if Mr. Knight's searching analysis and recommendations strengthen the theatreman's cause, there is reason for further optimism.

Of greater importance to the man in the field, however, is that Mr. Knight has emphasized the unfairness of a questionable budget balance arrived at by satisfying union demands at the expense of other employees, and discharging managers unsuccessful in hiring lesser personnel at arbitrarily set minimum salaries.

In other words, ladies and gentlemen, no careful reading between the lines of Mr. Knight's article is required to confirm that the manager is still receiving "that business" from many quarters and, if further proof is needed, the letter in the column to the left is offered as one of numerous instances of conditions in the theatre as they actually obtain.

There are many shackles to shake off before the theatreman's lot becomes even tolerable. The profit-sharing plan is undoubtedly a step forward, but more urgent right now is the desperate necessity for protection of the manager from the machinations of shortsighted exhibitor-employers.

INSPIRED SHOWMANSHIP

The majority vote of the judges that gives Loew Manager Robert H. Suits, of the Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa., the Quigley Award for October by a slight margin over Warnerite Sig Solomon, of the Regent Theatre, Newark, N. J., does not reveal at this writing the inspired showmanship of these theatremen upon which their high ratings were decided.

The ingenuity of both managers in conceiving and executing their featured exploitations that so impressed the Awards Committee may be accepted as a distinct challenge to those skeptics who would believe that the technique of the old time, big time showmanship has long been forgotten.

"DO YOU HAVE A MICKEY MOUSE TODAY?"

Use Steig Drawings For "Millions" Ads

Outstanding in the advance campaign put over by United Artists for the "Kid Millions" date at the New York Rivoli was the series of newspaper ads drawn by famed artist Steig, who created a series of caricature displays that drew more than the usual attention.

Another newspaper promotion that clicked was a tie-in with an afternoon daily's circulation building contest, stills from the picture and star cuts of Eddie Cantor being planted prominently in a full page house ad to plug the contest. This was put over a day in advance of opening.

Football coverage was also obtained on the Saturday of the opening by flying an airplane carrying theatre trailer over all football games in the metropolitan area.

Special tabloids were used house to house and for street coverage, and co-op ads promoted from radio chain stores in which prominent theatre credits were carried. Enlargements of Cantor photographing the Goldwyn girls were planted in camera store windows and the original painting from which the posters were made were landed in other favorably situated stores.

Sanson's Window Dance Bally

Sanson Promotes Window For "Continental" Dance

In Jack Sanson's campaign in the "Gay Divorcee" at the Roger Sherman in New Haven, which was publicized in these columns, mention was made of the window dancing stunt wherein the "Continental" hit dance of the picture as performed by Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers was put on by local couple in prominent window.

Jack forwards photo shot of local couple doing their stuff (see photo below), stating the gag was put on twice daily and, as was to be expected, drew enormous crowds. As can be noted, Sanson decorated the background of the window with pictures of the stars doing the steps of the dance and also planted credit cards including one for dancing school furnishing the couple for the ad.

Promotes Tien Ads On Shirley Temple

Numerous tieups were made by Wally Allen for his date on "Now and Forever" at the Keeney, Elmira, N. Y., hooking in with a local dairy bringing a series of newspaper ads showing Shirley Temple drinking milk, cut being mortised for theatre and picture credits. Dairy also distributed heralds.

Similar procedure was worked with large bakery from which Wally promoted inserts for all bread packages and window cards in all dealers' windows. Leading department store was also tied in by featuring and advertising a line of Temple frocks, this angle further being plugged with large window displays.

At this time, Sears-Roebuck were celebrating their 48th anniversary and to advertise the event had a 48-year-old woman working the identification gag in various stores, cash prizes being given to those who recognized her. Wally arranged to have the theatre mentioned as one of the stops, in return for which the store took special ads. Imitation police summons and novelty "Closed" cards were attached to store doors late Saturday night, advertising the Sunday night opening.

Political tieups of various kinds have invariably proven successful on those Will Rogers pictures which are played around election time. In past years this star has been tied into campaigns for various offices, imaginary or otherwise, and the most recent reported was the good slant put on by Manager Robert Smith, Loew's State, Los Angeles, on "Judge Priest."

As the accompanying photo illustrates, a bally was sent out around the streets consisting of speakers' stand, band, election banners and other conventional properties. Whenever the bally stopped, a crowd gathered and a pitch was put on, while ushers distributed handbills on the date.

Amusing was the incident reported in the Los Angeles papers coming out through lack of a permit to parade. When for this reason the bally was stopped, Gene Morgan, local master of ceremonies, who did the election, spiling, for publicity purposes invited the police officer to arrest him. The local gendarme was said to have refused because he did not think it wise to go about pinching any judge's campaign car.

Seven Mayors Attend "Young Eagles" Openings

The cooperation of seven mayors in neighboring communities was obtained by Al Zimbalist, St. Louis Amusement Co. publicity head, in the day and date campaign put on for the opening of "Young Eagles" in a number of Warner houses.

Al reports this angle as one of the highlights in a campaign that embraced the aid of Chambers of Commerce, local Boy Scout troop, police and fire departments and other civic organizations, members of which participated in a street parade on opening day.

The theatre streets were decorated with buntings, flyers and welcome sheeters, Boy Scout exhibits were on display in lobby and contests were held for members of this organization, prizes awarded from stage of theatres.

The entire campaign was carried in all local papers, window displays obtained from many merchants and elaborate ceremonies put on for the opening nights, giant lights, broadcast and all the other properties. Working with Zimbalist on the campaign were Managers Henry Riegel, Harry Swan, William Reid, James Walker and Edward Burke.

Sound the tocsin and beat the drums!

For in the final stretch of the monthly Quigley Awards competition, the Loew Theatres break into the winning column as Manager Robert H. Suits of the Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa., in a stirring nose-to-nose finish with Sig Solomon of the Regent, Newark, N. J., wins the Award.

The majority vote of the judges gives the honors to Suits for his ingenious campaign on MGM's "What Every Woman Knows," but the majority was the slightest over Sig's very smart exploitation drive on RKO's "Richest Girl in the World." Solomon's entry, nevertheless, was selected for the only First Mention awarded in October, a reward he richly deserves. Both campaigns were distinguished for their ingenuity and startling showmanship and details of both will be publicized in next week's issue.

Bunched behind the two leaders were Harry Botwick, Portland, Maine; Ed J. Melniker, Atlanta, Ga.; Les Pollock, Rochester, N. Y.; Jack Simons, Hartford, Conn., and Leo Henderson of Twin Falls, Idaho. The race for first honors was a merry one.

And the battle for Honorable Mentions, according to already established tradition, was just as keen and so numerous were the campaigns received with a comparatively high standard of excellence that it was decided to award 21 of these certificates which were taken down by showmen from circuits and independent operations in various parts of the country.

Of these there are almost an equal division between previous winners and newcomers, twelve having gained recognition in former competitions and nine clicking for the first time, among the latter being showmen who have sent in campaigns previously and have now caught the eyes of the October judges.

First Mention

Regent, Newark, N. J.

Solomon's efforts are to be especially commended inasmuch as he has been one of the most persistent seeking Quigley Award acclaim with a fine record up to October of two First and two Honorable Mentions. He now adds another First to his record.

Suits is one of the many Loew managers who are scoring strongly in the final months of the competition. He is the first from Division Manager Carter Barron's zone to win the high honors and other Loewites have also clicked from the sectors supervised by Lionel H. Keene, Wm. A. Finney, Harry A. Long and Harry Shaw.

In addition to Solomon, the Warner showmen made their usually fine score, their entries arriving from many Warner Theatre sectors from which high rating campaigns have come in the past.

November Entries Arrive

Two months still remain—two golden months to enter the select circle of Quigley winners from whose entries will be chosen the Quigley Grand Award winner which is expected will be presented early in 1935. That these honors are being recognized by an increasingly large number of managers in every part of the world is proven by the great number of campaigns already received for the November competition. It's going to be a hot finish, men, and the field is wide open for any manager anywhere who wishes to test his showmanship.

The rules are simple—they have been run frequently in these columns, most recently in issue of Oct. 27. Cooperation of all interested theatremen is invited.

Rosenberg's Musical Lobby Slant

Giant Violin Draws Crowds on 'Caravan'

The theatre art department was called upon by Manager Ben Rosenberg, Fenway, Boston, Mass., to reproduce the huge violin illustrated above for a novel lobby exhibit. The display measured 14 feet and was an exact reproduction of the real instrument.

Ben promoted a P. A. system, the speaker being placed inside the violin, wired to a turntable placed in the office. From here the song hits were transmitted, Rosenberg reporting the unique idea attracting continuous crowds. Posed in the photo are popular local master of ceremonies with good-looking gal added for atmosphere. Their heights compared to the size of the bally made an interesting shot which was used by some of the local papers. For the current week of the run, the display was placed out in front, where it succeeded in tying up a lot of traffic.

Rosenberg suggests this may be of interest to other members, especially since once constructed the violin can be used again for other musicales, thus laying off the original cost. It was built from pressed wood, but any thin veneer is also recommended.

Hynes Features "Merry Widow" Dance Series

A series of "Merry Widow" dinner dances was put on by Manager B. Hynes, Denver Theatre, Denver, Colo., and the promotion manager of a leading hotel there. These dances started a week prior, patrons paying so much for a dinner which included a ticket to the theatre; tickets were purchased from the theatre by the hotel, which increased dinner prices slightly to cover ticket cost. Special art displays of Chevalier and MacDonald were made for dining room.

Advertising director of department store ran full page ad featuring "Merry Widow" hat and lingerie and plugged the "Widow" coiffure in beauty salon ads.

Special letter was mailed to all music schools stressing popularity of tunes and selling production. Also through maestro who conducts series of concerts, mailing list of music lovers was secured and they, too, were covered.

Brown Sells "Dames" with Bannered Roller Skaters

For "Dames" street bally, Manager Harry Brown, Jr., and Marty Glazer, at the Paramount, Boston, Mass., used seven girl roller skaters in shorts (see photo) covering downtown sections. Harry reports this is the first time this stunt had been used locally.

Announcements were made over radio and orchestrations were supplied to bands. College department stores, bus terminals, tire covers and five and tens carried theatre copy. Door hangers used in suburbs, small announcements placed in hotels with desk clerks and door-to-door distribution of heralds by Liberty boys was also reported.

"Cellini" Buffalo Date Gets Wide Coverage

Well rounded was Manager Charles Taylor's campaign on "Cellini" at the Great Lakes, Buffalo, N. Y., many angles being used to put over the date.

Book stores were hooked in for windows displaying mounted stills with picture and theatre credits, and imprinted bands, mentioning date, were pasted on each book. Department store got out co-op ad, featuring photo of Constance Bennett, and some days later used another angle for ad mentioning picture in plugging Max Factor makeup. Cinema Shop also arranged effective Bennett gown exhibit.

Brown Invites Legation To See "Last Gentleman"

Members of the British Legation, critics and society editors were invited by Lou Brown, Loew's Fox Theatre, Washington, D. C. To see "The Last Gentleman," the stunt securing extra newspaper publicity.

As other angles in his campaign, Lou distributed hotel cards in all guest rooms, local busses carried banners and "Can you keep a secret" slips were inserted in laundry bundles. Special feature stories ran few days prior and photos of Arliss were used.

Brings Orphans to Show

George Baker at the Publix Newman, Kansas City, Mo., undoubtedly piled a stack of good will up for his theatre when he invited local orphanages and other institutions to see "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Particularly with the approaching Thanksgiving season this angle is valuable currently.

Mayor Declares Orphan Week on "Treasure Isle"

Divisional Manager Harry Long, also directing the destinies of Loew's State, Cleveland, Ohio, reports a complete campaign for his "Treasure Island" date, one of the highlights of which was the issuance of a proclamation by the Mayor declaring an "Orphans' Week" in connection with the showing. All automobile owners were called upon to volunteer their cars to transport children to and from theatre. Newspapers broke with story and local hatter ran display ads calling upon public to lend assistance in transportation of children.

Long's "Treasure" Gold Window

Guessing contest was put on with Woolworth stores which gave window (see photo) to display of bags of chocolate gold coins. Ballots were secured at candy department in store and those coming closest to correct number received passes to show. Stickers were placed on laundry and cleaners' packages, among other helpful stunts.

Adams Spots "Gentleman" Shirt Window Display

The accompanying photo is the result of a window tieup arranged by W. W. Adams, Colonial Theatre, Brockton, Mass., with a leading men's furnishing store on "The Last Gentleman." Bill put this over during national "Arrow Shirt" week.

An attractive program was gotten out the front and back cover of which was printed on bright orange stock, the reverse side carried a small box with copy and number to effect that the herald should be saved and if number corresponded with any of the 50 posted in lobby, holder was entitled to complimentary ticket.

Lynch Uses Float To Sell "Here Comes Navy"

From Ed Lynch, Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. comes the accompanying photo of his "Here Comes the Navy" float, which was parked in front of principal factories where tabloids were distributed as workers came out of plants. Newspapers came through with want ad tiein effected at no cost to the theatre. Incidentally, that's Edgar at the left of the float.

Farrar Promotes Page One On "Cellini" Feature

The six "Cellini" stories by famous authors put out by United Artists were made much of by Manager Ward Farrar, Palace, Indianapolis, who not only planted in every one of his dailies, but promoted the first two of the series for front-page publication.

Farrar effected more than the usual number of window displays, the jewelry slant being emphasized, some of the merchants co-operating further on newspaper ads. Among these being listed were silverware, beauty shop and millinery announcements featuring Constance Bennett.

Golladay Holds Advance Screening on "Barretts"

H. G. Golladay, De Graw Theatre, Brockfield, Mo., put on an advance screening of "Barretts of Wimpole Street" one week prior to which were invited clergy, press and local celebrities. Their comments were later used in newspaper ads and in lobby.

Druggist arranged window display on cosmetics and perfumes using stills of Shearer and O'Sullivan and cashier called all women in telephone book. For another window display, Golladay, himself an artist, made up a large book cutout surrounded by stills and art poster of three prize winning stars with special copy on Academy Award.

"Every Woman" Contest Staged at High School

Roscoe Drissel, manager of the Parkway in Wilmington, Del., arranged with the principal of one of the high schools to conduct a contest based on "What Every Woman Knows." A little different slant was that the students had to review the picture, rather than the book, as a class feature. Reviews were commented on in schoolrooms and the better ones received special credits. Students paid regular admission price to theatre, quite a number participating.

Jones and Melniker Click on "Gentleman"

The classified contest slant proved effective in Manager Ray Jones' advance on "Last Gentleman" at the Vendome, Nashville, Tenn., cooking school hookin netting free display ads including cuts of female players in picture. Ray forwarded the special post card to all local lawyers and planted newsstand cards on date in magazine tieup.

Ed Melniker also worked the classified tiein on his showing of this attraction at the Grand, Atlanta, Ga., and reports special screening for the Better Films Committee which occasioned letters to all members endorsing the picture. The postcards to Atlanta lawyers and radio dramatization secured further publicity.

Air Sponsors Cooperate On "Transatlantic" Date

Retail outlets in New Orleans selling General Foods products were contacted for co-operation on "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round" by Manager Rodney Toups for the date at the State Theatre. Window strips were planted at all independent and chain grocery stores where food samples were also distributed in addition to the "tune-in" slips furnished by the sponsors of the Jack Benny program.

This slant was also utilized by Manager Ed McBride at the State, Syracuse, N. Y., who in addition arranged a Jack Benny contest on the station broadcasting the comic's hour. McBride further promoted local millinery store for ads on tieup of Nancy Carroll.

Bicycle Purchase Rates Theatre Pass for Month

Promoted Ruby Keeler photos were distributed to patrons, barricaded front with standee cutouts was specially built and parade with 50-piece local band and police escort marched to theatre. Keeler sundaes and sandwiches were featured and Parisienne shop used cutouts of Blondell and Keeler displaying fall dresses.

Star Masks in Picture Feature "Beautiful" Lobby

The star masks used in "Young and Beautiful" were reproduced by the house artists for the campaign at the Los Angeles Hillstreet in the campaign arranged by Manager Jack Gross and ad man Ken McGaffey, working with Het Manheim and Lon Young of Mascot Pictures. The masks were worn by thirteen men, some wearing costumes, some in all outgoing messages. Fashion show was put on by leading department store, models wearing replicas of costumes in picture, radio tiein on this including theatre credits, also mention in invitation forwarded to stores' preferred customers further plugging the event.

Featured in the advance also was tieup with Postal, wherein miniature telegrams were stuffed in all outgoing messages. Fashion show was put on by leading department store, models wearing replicas of costumes in picture, radio tiein on this including theatre credits, also mention in invitation forwarded to stores' preferred customers further plugging the event.

Constant Departmental Checkup Is Secret of Managerial Success In Opinion of Southern Member

by WILLIAM VANNAH TAYLOR Manager, Loew's State, Houston, Texas

As told to LIONEL H. KEENE

The title of this little interview should be, "Little Man, You've Had a Busy Day," for, as a manager, I feel that being an expert "checker-upper" is the prime requisite—after being satisfied that each department in my personnel is filled with competent talent.

I consider it flattery for any one to remain as head of any of my departments for a long period. I expect a lot, as a manager should, because how well each of them performs determines what measure of success I will attain as head of the force.

However, in all of my 30 odd years as manager, I have yet to get together any band of employees who keep going full force day in and day out without error. I don't expect it. It is not human to expect otherwise, but through careful study of each individual I soon learn what psychological angle of approach will do most to create the proper amount of incentive.

Many Phases Equally Important

Many managers are unbalanced in placing importance upon their various branches of operation. Usually publicity and exploitation gets the call in this respect although I am convinced that this all-important phase in making a theatre go is due no more consideration than the projection booth, stage, and other units, and certainly not half as important as the daily routine of dealing with the patrons from the time the ticket is purchased until they leave the theatre. How well they are served and made comfortable by proper atmospheric conditions, clear projection and good sound and courteous, unobtrusive service from all employees, are in my opinion the things of highest importance, but I will call it square with the publicity forces and say that all are of equal importance.

An amusing situation in this connection that I recall was a manager who spent two-thirds of his entire time about the theatre with lighting effects. He had them perfect, but he most certainly did have the poorest conducted theatre I ever visited. It was left in the hands of the ushers and one had to consult his exploitation manager to find out how many stands were being posted on any given attraction. As a matter of fact, the manager could not tell me off hand what his newspaper rates were.

By letting every one know that I am constantly on the check-up, I know that I do much in a subtle way to keep them on their toes. The assistant manager knows that I glance at the box-office signs when I leave the car upon arrival in the morning, the head porter knows that I inspect the brass doors which are very difficult to handle, and the electrician has learned years ago that I am going to find any lights that may be out. As a result it is seldom that I find any such detail not in proper order.

It is also a great idea every so often to step into the role of an assistant manager, publicity man, radio announcer, or even an electrician and show off a little. By doing so I have elected myself chief radio announcer for all of our organ programs, which we present five mornings each week and have developed an amazing English accent.

By making my own announcements I am certain to get over the angle that suits me most and coming from a non-pro, I feel that what I relate will have more influence over the radio audience than the customary parrot-rattling of a radio announcer.

As head of a glamorous institution which is visited at least several times a year by almost every person in the city, I am naturally expected to contribute something to civic activity away from the theatre. While I do not especially enjoy a banquet with the long-drawn-out after dinner speeches and while I would much rather have my lunch at any one of the three cafes than my club, I still drop personalities and split my time in keeping up these important associations.

I do not believe that a manager should do this task alone and I frequently turn some of this over to one or more of my assistants who make favorable impressions. This can not help but leave the impression that my organization is manned by exceptionally high-class young men and this in turn can not help but elevate me as an executive.

After dinner I usually visit another theatre, chat with the manager for a while and make observations of his lobby displays, staff, and other items. One can always learn something even from the lowly opposition. Besides, it is no drawback to be familiar with what they are doing.

Stresses Care of Details

There is much in the routine of management that can be done in short order through a system of doing certain things at certain times. By keeping on schedule with these items a smooth running office will soon replace the "mad house" so frequently seen in many theatres. It has always been my idea that by taking care of the little details religiously—the really big things become much easier to handle as they arise.

During my six years in Houston the one compliment of which I am most proud is a letter from the health commissioner stating that my theatre is not only the cleanest in town, but is also the cleanest building.

My assistants—even the ushers are taught to inspect the theatre thoroughly and when repairs are needed, it is done immediately, saving later costs.

In summary, I believe I can safely say that the secret of managerial success as I have found it, is to get on the job early and remain on the job—not only for one or two days of the week, but every day—never letting up, constantly inspecting, examining and checking each department of the theatre.

Louie's Mammoth O'Brien Front

Giant Fronts Distinguish Charninsky's Campaigns

Although these pages have not recently reported the activities of Louis Charninsky, omniscient overseer of the Capitol, Dallas, this does not mean that the member from Texas has been quiescent in matters theatrical. Far from it!

For instance, his recent date on "Dude Ranger" was stimulated by one of those typical mammoth fronts (see photo) in which the local popularity of George O'Brien was stressed by a giant head over the box office and smaller frames of the star on either side of the lobby. Guitar-playing singer in cowboy costume was a further lobby touch.

A cowboy parade made an effective street stunt which was called to the attention of local children by distribution of thousands of heralds at all schools. The campaign was reported to have resulted in holdover business.

As successful was this member's campaign on "Devil Tiger," which featured an animal front (see photo) topped by an awe-inspiring giant tiger head cutout. Added atmosphere was obtained by dressing house staff in costume with the inclusion of local characters made up as natives who attracted attention by the beating of tom-toms.

Louis tied in with one of his papers for a coloring contest, distributed imprinted blotters, and to attract the children, put on a special Saturday morning 8.30 show at which time children 12 years of age or under were admitted at a special price.

"Treasure" Library Tie-in Effected by Bamberger

Herman Bamberger, Paramount Theatre, North Adams, Mass., tied in with library for "Treasure Island" by putting on a treasure hunt for children, entire wall of children's room devoted to hunt maps, stills and displays. All children were furnished with souvenir pirate hats. In main library, bookmarks were placed in all outgoing volumes and librarian also placed copy on special book list.

Other tieups consisted of window of treasure chest candies, coloring contest and a treasure island school sale. Paper hats distributed to all children, imprinted menus in restaurants and for his street bally Herman hired the "meanest looking man" he could find, dressed him as a pirate and put him out on the streets.

Around town wherever excavations were going on Mrs. Vuono placed signs "notice, no buried treasure here, see," etc., etc. Full-page cooperative merchants ad was secured, papers ran featured stories and drug store used five-foot book with shadow box illuminating still in center.

"Chained" Doubles Contest Used by Hunt

A doubles contest was arranged for their "Chained" date by George Hunt, manager, and Fred Bartow, M-G-M exploiter, at Loew's State, Louisville, Ky., in connection with local fair, theatre donating loving cup and merchants offering trip to World's Fair. Fair officials ran ads during contest.

Imprinted envelopes containing gum were distributed, Crawford stills mounted on display boards placed in department store and newspapers invited junior carriers to be their guests at State Fair. Boys came from all over state and, as a good-will gesture, theatre invited them to attend showing for further publicity.

The seat of the business-getting problem often lies in the seat you offer your patrons. Comfort isn't just something nice to talk about—it's a definite part of what you sell for what you charge.

The theatre that pays all its attention to the program and little attention to the seating comfort is in the same class as the manufacturer who tries to package a quality product in a cheap paper bag. It just doesn't pay.

When you're planning for profits, look beyond your program into the question of your patrons' comfort.

Remember—if they're not comfortable, they won't tell you—they'll just stay away.

May we make valuable suggestions regarding the reseating of your theatre?

HIGH INTENSITY ILLUMINATION FOR THE SMALLER THEATRES

The experience of large down-town theatres with High Intensity projection has proved that patrons appreciate comfortable vision on entering the theatre and clear, snow white projection on the screen. . . . The box office value of these features is now available to theatres of moderate size at little added cost of operation. . . .

A.C. National High Intensity A. C. Projector Carbons provide High Intensity projection for the smaller theatres using alternating current. They are designed for arc currents up to 80 amperes in the new A. C. High Intensity lamps.

National Suprex Carbons provide High Intensity projection D.C. for the smaller theatres using direct current. They are designed for operation at arc currents of 40 to 65 amperes in the new D. C. High Intensity lamps.

DR. GOLDSMITH RETIRES

When the history of the motion picture is continued from whatever point Terry Ramsaye left it after deciding that his "Million and One Nights" had to end somewhere, many persons of formidable prestige in the current affairs of the film will be the subjects of some entirely deliberate omissions. Others, perhaps to the surprise of themselves or their assigns, will be dismissed with merely a word. And quite probably to be found among them are persons who pay but casual attention to the activities of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and who would scarcely be able to identify, in motion picture terms, at least, the man who is about to retire from its presidency.

Yet there is reason to believe that what the Society has become is of more permanent importance than the election of many a new board of directors, and that the influence of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith will be vitally present in the processes of the motion picture when most of today's industry headlines have come to mean nothing.

Perhaps these assertions are in large measure inspired by hope. Certain it is, however, that every major commercial advancement of the motion picture has been the result of technological progress, and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is the logical custodian of motion picture technology (with the Academy and studio technicians specializing in the crafts of production). Prior to Dr. Goldsmith's assumption of office three years ago, the Society nevertheless had failed to realize its potential importance. It was Dr. Goldsmith who introduced a policy of comprehensive and practical service to the industry, under which the Projection Practice Committee has become more effective, research in theatre design has been organized, collaboration with the Academy assured, "log-rolling" ostensibly eliminated, and an authentic scientific spirit inculcated in the membership, which itself has been doubled.

In expressing the hope that this policy will endure under the presidency of Mr. H. G. Tasker, who assumes office January 1, we are but indicating our faith in what the Society can mean to this industry. When that significance becomes fully demonstrated and palpable to all, it will not be fair to deny to Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith the place in the motion picture story that we, optimistically, should already wish to assign him.

NEW FIELDS TO CONQUER

Mr. Edwin S. Reid, Virginian, is reported in a news story from Lynchburg to have found, during a trip through the southwestern part of his state and the Piedmont section, many towns in need of theatres. Farmers enlivened by a strange new wealth, merchants getting a great deal of it, but no theatres to collect their share for the motion picture industry. As director of the state division of motion picture censorship, Mr. Reid took note of this, yet we commend his report to the attention of persons with money for theatrical ventures, in the belief that the moral tone of motion pictures should be, after all, no deterrent.

A STEP TOWARD SENSE IN DESIGN

Reverting to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers—a current interest inspired by that organization's recent convention—we take this means of demonstrating our gratification at the establishment by this body of motion picture technologists, of a group whose responsibility it is to discover practical means of seriously investigating how theatres can be better designed and constructed for the purposes to which they are devoted. This may seem a rather novel attempt to those who have not followed industry affairs of late in some of their more important phases. And there are architects who may regard this interest on the part of mere motion picture engineers as rank impudence. But we—as made known in many an expression that preceded for quite some time this development within the SMPE—are quite in favor of having people who know something about the motion picture mechanism, and who have some pride in it, take a genuine and working interest in the highly specialized building through which the motion picture achieves all of its aims.

INEXPENSIVE HOLIDAY STAGE SHOWS

By O. T. TAYLOR

Offering a group of routines and settings with which to augment the screen program during Christmas week

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS a splendid opportunity for pleasing home-talent stage entertainment, and offers possibilities second to none of the entire year's holidays. And the Christmas holidays need a box office stimulant more, perhaps, than any of the holidays.

A pleasing, entertaining Christmas presentation can be staged for surprisingly little cost—that is, if hard work and serious application to the task is not allowed to become a deterrent obstacle. For there can be no worth-while achievement without a willingness to work for it.

Planning stage entertainment—especially routining, staging, settings, etc.—does not, unfortunately, come within the accomplishments of all theatre managers. But this need be no reason for passing up stage entertainment. Tie in with a dancing school for dance routines, a voice instructor for song numbers, and a music teacher for instrumental contributions to the program. These people are usually appreciative of an opportunity to present their pupils to the public for the publicity they receive. Turn the scenic effects over to your lobby display artist. He, too, as a rule will enjoy this fascinating work.

Do not get the idea that the setting for a local entertainment must fill the entire stage. Far from it. Pleasing effects are accomplished by carrying out small, novel ideas set in the center of a stock cyclorama. The Holiday ideas described here are just such novelties. Effective, yet simple to produce. One scenic idea may form the background for the entire entertainment, or several novelties may be featured on the program.

Recalling that the purpose of the discussions on stage presentations is to assist the theatre manager—especially the manager located in the smaller cities and neighborhoods—in the production of stage entertainment, it may be well again to point out that all presentations and ideas offered here are designed to be adaptable to any stage, be it large or small.

MODERNIZED CHRISTMAS IDEA

The manager who favors the modernistic conception of stage decoration will find the design in Figure 1 of interest. This design makes a splendid full stage setup, and the arrangement is such that several central novelty ideas may be very easily incorporated.

Two distinctly different designs of conventionalized Christmas trees are shown. The style selected should, of course, be used on both sides to make the setting balanced. The one to the left is of three planes of wall board spaced from 3 to 4 inches apart, with lamps concealed behind the first and second planes. (See Figure 1, A. Also wiring diagram, Figure 2.) Paint the third (large) plane light green, the second medium bright green, and the first blue-green. A thin-scattered sprinkling of coarse metallics in the same colors adds brilliancy. Use green lamps.

The tree to the right (B, Figure 1) is of one plane cut from wall board. Punch holes to take miniature lamps with colored reflectors (regular Christmas tree light strings). Paint the tree medium green.

covered with heavy manila paper or blue plaster board. The lower ends are fastened to the second step, and the tops are attached to a batten. This eliminates braces. Paint in bright colors such as yellow (narrow stripe next to opening), light green, turquoise, or yellow, orange, red.

The central set-piece, D, is cut from wall board and braced with battens. Do snow in white with shadings in pale blue, and a thin sprinkling of artificial snow for high lights. The buck is light greyish-orchid with jet black horns and hoofs.

It should not be difficult to arrange a program in keeping with a presentation of this type. Dance routines, songs and instrumental numbers are all in harmony with the idea. Into all of these a Holiday touch is easily introduced.

OLD-FASHIONED CHRISTMAS

This idea of a Christmas presentation is the extreme opposite of the preceding modern conception. It is an idyllic picture that fairly breathes the Christmas cheer of years gone by. As a background for a chorus singing Christmas carols and old melodies such as "Jingle Bells," or for youthful dancers in an interpretation of "The Skaters' Waltz," this bit of setting is exceptionally fitting.

The setting may be constructed in one piece. A more interesting effect, however, is obtained with very little additional effort if it is constructed and set up in three parts as shown in scene plot (Figure 3). This consists of a profiled piece—the snow bank and a small Christmas tree decorated with candles, A; a second set piece—wall, gate and the larger house, B; and a third piece—C, the smaller house and tree. The windows are cut out, as indicated in Figures 4 and 5, showing the backside and construction of two of the pieces, and covered with white paper which, after the sash has been painted in, is given a coat of oil or varnish to render it translucent. Place lamps below the openings so that no direct

Figure 4Right:

light becomes visible. Use amber lamps for effect of candle glow. The window openings with lamps must be boxed in on the back, otherwise light will reflect on the sky drop and spoil the effect.

To make the setting easy to set up and strike, nail bracket supports to the backside of each piece and weight down with two or three sand bags. By setting the smaller piece well in front of the others, a space is provided between the pieces that makes an interesting entrance. The old-fashioned setting is designed to fit into a space identical to that occupied by the modern idea on a full stage. Obviously, modern Christmas trees are not in keeping with an old-fashioned idea. Natural trees trimmed with Christmas decorations and lights should be used.

ST. NICHOLAS SETTING

Here is a happy medium between the modern and the old-fashioned Christmas presentation. It is "a natural" for the introduction of old genial Santa, and is therefore ideal as an attraction of special interest to children. The scene is in steel-blue light as Santa climbs up the roof and disappears down the chimney, to appear down stage a moment later, ready to entertain with songs, talk or distribution of gifts. This setting, also, is in several planes (Figure 6)—a profile tree, A; the roof top, B, with inclined platform in white and trimmed with artificial snow; the chimney, C, boxed in on the sides as well as front, and equipped with a ladder to the floor; the other houses, and distant tree, on the last piece, D. General construction and treatment of windows in this set are to be regarded as identical to that shown in Figure 4.

Either a scrim or a curtain may be used directly in back of the posts. Hung on a set of lines, to fly, this makes it possible to

AN ECONOMIC BASIS FOR WAGE SCALES

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

What is the motion picture and what are the economic laws which provide constructively for its successful exploitation?

NO ONE HAS yet completely applied recognized economic law to the business of providing entertainment for the public. Many have observed that the amusement business is different from other commercial enterprises, but few have thought long enough on the subject to determine why it is different. The motion picture industry is different because it does not conform to the usually accepted economic pattern as applied to other forms of commerce. To the average man the much abused law of supply and demand, with its many corollaries, is the usually accepted economic pattern.

At this point two questions present themselves: Is the motion picture an economic necessity, or merely a luxury that can be eliminated without harm to anyone? And is the motion picture of economic and social-economic significance, or purely of artistic or cultural importance in our scheme of life and living today?

The answers to these questions may broaden our point of view and perhaps provide a new conception of a sane, equitable and fair approach to the solution of the problem of wages, salary and compensation.

SOCIAL DISTINCTION OF THEATRE BUSINESS

If we take the point of view that motion pictures are founded upon a definite scheme of economics and attempt to trace backward to the source, it becomes quite evident that the only causes or reasons for motion pictures are social or cultural. From this we may assume that motion pictures come in the same category with literature, music and art. In fact, motion pictures combine all of these. Such forms of endeavor and expression as literature, music and art, are most certainly rooted in the social and cultural structure, rather than in the economic structure.

FILM AN ART MEDIUM

There is definitely a lack of exclusiveness in music, art, literature and motion pictures. The same musical composition, the same book, the same work of art, and the same motion picture is enjoyed by millions of people of many nationalities, of all walks of life, and of more than one generation. The amount of pleasure and benefit that may be derived from music, art, books and pictures is limitless, and in consequence the expenditures for labor to produce them becomes ridiculously small in proportion.

Motion pictures have definitely established themselves as the means of distributing the greatest amount of pleasure to the greatest number, at the lowest unit cost, of any method or medium of creative expression in the history of the world. If motion pictures cost twice as much the world could not do without them. Believing this sincerely, I find it hard to understand why motion picture interests; i. e., producers, distributors and exhibitors, continue by policies of down-at-the-heels operation, cut-throat competition, dual features, cheap personnel, circus method of advertising, and dilapidated properties, to depreciate and cheapen deliberately the business of motion pictures in the eyes of the public.

SPECIAL LAWS NEEDED

The more general conceptions of economic laws, developed primarily to explain the trends of wealth, commodities, population, with further breakdown in capital, rent, interest, wages, food, clothing, and shelter, with the effects of price fluctuation on productive labor, middleman and consumer, do not directly apply to our industry. Some other primary method of reasoning must be used to explain the changes, the fluctuations and the many ramifications of the motion picture industry, including the problem of equitable wages, salaries, and other forms of compensation, of all participating, from star down to the porter in a theatre.

For years exhibitors have been trying to apply one of the earlier economic laws to salaries and wages. Let us see how it has worked out. At the beginning of the century it was common practice to consider wages as fixed by the ratio of the number of workers and the amount of capital available for the employment of labor. Constant adherence to such a law tends to reduce to a minimum the individual wage or salary. Its lowest limit is established by the lowest scale of living that will be tolerated by the worker.

PAYROLL BUDGETS

What is wrong with the way this law has been applied to theatres? In the first place, exhibitors do not set up any specific amount of capital for the employment of labor; they establish by guess or by precedent what they term a budget—a payroll budget. This is not an appropriation, but it is the amount they will permit to be charged per week to the expense of the theatre, and if this amount is exceeded the manager is due to make a complete explanation. Such a budget is always a minimum amount, so workers employed under such a budget are paid, and can only expect, a minimum wage. But since the turn of the century something has taken place in the motion picture business which throws this method all out of balance from the standpoint of fair, equitable distribution of the budgeted amount.

ORGANIZED LABOR

Certain classes of employes have become united, organized and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. These groups, sensing a confusion in the minds of some exhibitors, and having observed that some exhibitors become wealthy, have demanded, not always their proportionate share, but all that they could get. In consequence, as each raise was granted, renewed pressure and effort was made to hold the payroll down, so that only a minimum burden of the wage raise for union workers would have to be carried by the theatre.

In time much of the increase granted to organized help was actually taken from the unorganized classes of help, either by unit reduction in wages, or by reducing the number on the theatre staff. Of course, such methods of "balancing the budget" seldom took place simultaneously with the granting of raises to the organized help—that would appear too obvious—but by some manner the changes were effected as quickly as possible. Such methods are obviously obsolete and out of step with the trend of 1934.

THE "GUESSING GAME"

Exhibitor executives are still establishing—decreeing is the better word—payroll budgets based upon nothing more substantial than guess or hope that they can operate for the allocated sum. The managers stand excellent chances of being "fired" unless they can be successful in getting janitors, ushers, doormen and cashiers who will work for sufficiently less pay so that the prescribed budget is not exceeded. Failing in this, the manager can only resort to running an undermanned theatre, which means an uncared-for theatre, a theatre without service for the patrons, a theatre not properly covered in case of emergency.

The foregoing described method of payroll budgeting has encouraged dishonesty among employes. How many theatre managers in this country draw less salary than each of their projectionists? Their number is legion. It is true the projectionists put on the show: a theatre has got to have capable projectionists. On the other hand, a theatre can't run without having someone perform the co-ordinating duties of the manager, including the selling effort necessary to attract people to the box office. No central organization yet devised can perform the multiplicity of duties of managing a theatre, as a substitute for an alive, intelligent, honest, personable manager. From this point of view the manager is the most important individual in the theatre and should be the highest paid. The Motion Picture Code, drawn up and compiled by men who believe in payroll budgets arrived at by hopes and guesses, has altered the lot of every type of worker in the business except that of the theatre manager.

REWARDING THE THEATRE WORKER

Labor is not a commodity, and even though the old threadbare law of supply and demand does affect it, it still is a living, vital, human and very necessary part of business. A commodity is an inanimate product of the combination of labor and capital. A commodity cannot possibly have any voice in establishing or determining what is to be a proper and fair price for it. This is the basic difference between a commodity and labor. As labor is not a commodity, it is a wrong application of the law of supply and demand to endeavor to establish wage rates through the application of that law.

REAL WAGES

There is a distinction between money wages and real wages. Every executive should understand this difference. Money wages are the dollars and cents that are paid each week to an individual for doing a particular job. Real wages are the things—food, clothes and shelter—that the individual can buy with the money wages. It is the real wages that establish the standard of living of the individual. As the price of food, clothing and rent go up, real wages decline. When the increase in money wages does not keep pace with the increase in prices, then the standard of living of the worker must step down to a lower level, resulting in a demoralizing and disturbing influence which reflects itself directly in all business.

By the summer of 1933, money wages in our industry were at their lowest ebb; generally, they have not increased. Yet commodity prices have gone up, the net result of which means that the average employe in the theatre is having a harder time making ends meet this year than he had last year.

EMPLOYEE PSYCHOLOGY

Thus far nothing in the routine of economic thought tends to point the way to a fairer distribution of salary money within the theatre. Because the conduct of the projectionist, usher, electrician, the manager and every other person employed in a theatre, combined with enthusiasm, loyalty, honesty and creative ability, contributes to the success of the business in such a pronounced manner, and because all these qualities are so much a part of the individual

GOOD MANAGING: Now is the time to sow seeds of efficient management if theatre managers ever expect to reap a harvest of adequate remuneration and security. Many managers continually fail to recognize the fact that they are charged with the care and operation of a piece of real property and equipment. Theatre owners are going to discover that fictitious profits at the expense of run-down properties are not very satisfying. For emphasis, an A-1 theatre manager has got to be a rounded-out business man with the interest of the owner at heart. Maintenance is fully appreciated by business men—it's time that theatre managers accept it as being one of their important responsibilities. It's a branch of the business that requires application and study on the part of the manager.

WINTER AIR CONDITIONS: With the cold weather here many will let the subject of air-conditioning lie dormant in their minds till next spring. Air-conditioning is just as important in winter as in summer. Ample heat does not solve the entire question for the theatre manager at this season of the year. The excessively dry air of homes, theatres and other places of assembly is more unhealthy than the hot humid air of summertime.

Check the relative humidity in your theatre—it is perfect if it is 50 to 55%, and it is very bad if it is only 20% to 25%. If you have an air washer, use it during the winter time, provided of course there is sufficient capacity in the preheating coils to bring the incoming air up to a point above freezing before it strikes the air washer. By keeping the wet bulb reading up you will maintain a more comfortable and healthful theatre with less actual heat; your furniture won't dry out and become rickety; wood steppings, if you have any, won't begin to squeak; and the paint on the walls won't flake off. Air conditioning pays!

DON'T STINT ON LIGHT: In many theatres today, the ideas and policies with regard to lighting seem only to emphasize economy, dinginess and a depression. In such an atmosphere a gloomy pall as thick as fog hangs over everything and everybody. Let's lighten up the lobbies, foyers, smoking rooms and lounges! Theatres must be lively, sparkling, exciting places. If more light necessitates the services of a painter, then let's put one to work.

CARE OF SMALL MOTORS: Small, fractional-horsepower motors need the same care and consideration as big motors. There is a rather large number of these small motors in theatres, on flashers, animated display, remote curtain controls, and of course in the projection booth. Make it a point now to ask your electrician to go over them all—put fresh oil in the bearings, clean them up and recondition them.

INSTILLING PRIDE: You, the manager, and all the employes of your theatre, are in the same business as the owner of that theatre. Realize this and impress it on the entire staff. When any employe neglects his job he is jeopardizing his and every other employe's chances for advancement and security. A physically run-down theatre is a constant and demoralizing reminder to each employe that his job is insecure and possibly hanging by a thread. Pride comes with fitness. A well-kept theatre breeds pride and an atmosphere of fitness in every employe and patron alike.

person, psychology perhaps will furnish a better approach to the problem of wages.

Even though theatres have been operated more or less successfully without this particular point of view, and though there have been no labor upheavals which the industry has not survived, it does not follow that the existing unequal division of the income from theatres is going to be permitted to continue. Progress thus far has been rather a tribute to the loyalty and patience of the rank and file of the theatres.

Work which a person does consistently well, with perseverance and loyalty, provides for him an enthusiasm and a motive force from within, because in the endeavor he receives a distinct sense of self-fulfillment. Self-fulfillment for the individual can only be expressed by the individual—for average men it's a wife, home and children, with reasonable possessions for comfort and some security against the possible hazards of life.

SELF-FULFILLMENT

Has the industry provided the means of self-fulfillment in fair proportion? No, not

ORIENT THEATRE
DUNMORE, PA.
 Michael J. DeAngelis, Architect

A SINGLE FLOOR THEATRE SEATING 1,100

Describing the Orient theatre in Dunmore, Pa., the principal part of a commercial building erected at a cost of $75,000

THE ORIENT theatre in Dunmore, Pa., was recently opened as a member of the M. E. Comerford circuit, which leases the house from the owners, Joseph Golo and Florian Grayick of Scranton. The Orient seats 1,100 and was erected at a cost of $75,000, exclusive of land and equipment. Equipment and furnishings cost $20,000.

Dunmore has a population of 30,000, but it adjoins Scranton, contiguous sections of which are included in the drawing area of the Orient. This is especially true on Sundays, since theatres are not allowed to operate in Scranton on the Sabbath.

The Orient is the major element of a building project which includes four stores, six offices and two apartments, with financing calling for the non-theatrical portions to carry the taxes and interest on a small mortgage. The building, which measures 93x165 feet and is two stories high, was erected under separate contracts.

The auditorium is of single-floor type

(see accompanying floor plan), with seating in 29 rows. Chairs, which are by the American Seating Company, are full-upholstered.

The projection room measures 20x16 feet and is adjoined by a generator room. The walls and ceiling of the projection room are surfaced with aluminum paint. There are two projectors (Simplex) and one stereopticon. The sound system is Western Electric.

Ventilation is by means of a duct and blower system, through which the theatre also is heated. Fuel for heating is soft coal.

Acoustic treatment consists in the application of acoustic plaster to ceiling. This has been pin-pricked by means of a wire brush to effect air cells.

The Orient is one of the few new theatres of recent years designed in a period, atmospheric decorative scheme (see accompanying longitudinal section). The exterior is a mixture of modern styles and Hindu ornament, and the latter characterizes the general treatment of the interior. Interior walls are of rough-textured plaster painted in polychrome. The ornamental features that are also in plaster, are painted in various shades, including gold. Part of the decorative effects of the auditorium is of course contributed to by the cloud effects usual to the atmospheric manner. Lighting fixtures throughout are in wrought iron. Auditorium illumination is provided principally by means of fixtures concealed behind the battlement walls, which are set 24 inches from the main walls.

The Orient has a stage 24 feet deep and 75 feet wide, with a proscenium opening 38 feet wide. The screen is located 20 feet from the first row of seats.

Lounges and toilet facilities are on the second floor.

The entrance is shown immediately above, while at the top of the page is pictured the atmospheric auditorium, which is done in a Hindu style, with plaster ornament along battlement walls painted in polychrome beneath a sky-like ceiling.

MODERNIZING THE PROJECTION ROOM

By ROBERT O. BOLLER

Considering construction, layout and safety in the final of two articles by a leading theatre architect

A COMMON drawback found today in projection rooms demanding remodeling, is improper wall and ceiling construction, which fails to fireproof the room or equip it with modern ports and doors, and accordingly penalizes the owner with high insurance rates. Hand in hand with this goes lack of soundproofing, which causes confusion and acoustical trouble in the auditorium. Too often the projectionist works in a crowded room of limited floor space, suffering from poor ventilation caused by a low ceiling and lack of a proper exhaust system. Lack of an evenly controlled heating system endangers the delicate mechanisms under his control, while absence of proper toilet facilities adds to his bodily discomfort and jeopardizes his health. Out-of-date wiring arrangements add to his labors and worries, and also reduce his efficiency.

SOUNDPROOFING

The proper fireproof wall and ceiling construction of the modern projection room is so closely linked with soundproofing that the two can scarcely be discussed separately. It was customary, formerly, to construct projection room housing of steel, asbestos board, tile, and sometimes 2-inch metal lath and plaster construction, and while these met the fireproofing problem after a fashion, any of these materials transmitted sounds from the room to an undesirable degree. Today the approved structure has walls of double-channel studs, lathed with metal on both sides, and coated with cement plaster to a thickness of not less than $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch. In addition to this, plaster-finish acoustical treatment is also applied on the auditorium side of the booth. Hollow tile is a satisfactory material for projection room walls in many ways, the chief objection to this being that very little support is left in the front wall because of the cutting through of many openings. It is also difficult to run horizontal conduits in it.

FLOORS

With either of these materials for walls, the floor should be of cement not less than $2\frac{1}{2}$ -inch in thickness, and linoleum or other composition floor covering will prevent electrical shocks and relieve the fatigue of the projectionist caused by standing on hard and unyielding cement.

SOLID CEILING

Without knowing it, many exhibitors are paying an insurance penalty for neglecting to provide a proper ceiling for their projection rooms. Unless other portions of the theatre structure are planned so that a concrete slab occurs over the room, a ceiling of not less than 2-inch cement should be constructed, the common method being to apply cement plaster both above and below metal lath to form a 2-inch solid ceiling overhead.

DOORS AND PORTS

Modern sound has made a considerable change in projection room doors and ports. Formerly doors were often built of steel on an angle-iron frame, which served the purpose admirably for fire protection, but proved to be anything but soundproof when used with the latest methods of projection. The recommended door for the modern room is the Kalamein door, built with not less than two plies of laminated white pine boards, entirely covered with tin on both sides, with lock-joint seams. These may be built either with or without the underwriters' label, but the additional small cost of labeled doors will enable the exhibitor to cut his insurance costs considerably. The Kalamein door should be installed so that the burning of a fuse link automatically closes the opening in case of fire.

Although many of the older ports are still acceptable, a few minor changes in these often result in further savings in insurance. The laws in many States permit ports to operate independently—that is, each shutter may be hung to the front wall of the room by a cotton line, with fuse links or a section of film to be severed by heat so that each shutter may automatically drop. However, there have been cases where a projection room fire, while severe, has failed to drop all the ports. The preferred method of shutter arrangement today, as illustrated in the accompanying sketch, is to install a releasing bar across the entire front wall of the room, which rotates either in ferrules, or is hinged so that it drops all shutters simultaneously. (See diagram.) This bar generally has a long elbow projecting 12 inches to 18 inches, which is held in place horizontally with a cotton line running in tackles across the projection room ceiling and fused over each projector, so that flame or unusual heat at any projector location burns the line and releases the bar, which drops all shutters at once.

GLASSED-IN PORTS

When sound was in its infancy, theatre architects were frequently called to look over houses for threatening acoustical trouble, especially in close proximity to the projection room. Often it was discovered that the existing confusion was occasioned by the voice from the stage echoing the monitor horn in the booth. The trouble was located by shutting off the projection room horn, after which the fancied acoustical defect was found to disappear.

715 NORTH ST. SOUTH W. FLA.

TYPICAL PLAN OF BOOTH.

To eliminate such sounds as these, which might escape to the ears of the audience, and also to prevent drafts from the auditorium to the projection room, the ports were glassed in. However, there still remains a considerable difference of opinion as to the advisability of glassing in the projector ports. Some exhibitors contend that glass at these points makes an unwanted reflection, and they prefer only the cut-out.

In some instances the glassing in of ports has been in a fixed manner, so that access could not be gained from the outside. A better method is to have each glass set in a metal frame pivoted at the side, so that the port may be easily tipped for cleaning. The tilting of the glass to any desired angle prevents objectionable glare. In houses where sound balconies are not provided, the projectionist finds the pivoted glass openings useful for listening-in purposes.

S O U N D B A L C O N Y

In this connection, a sound balcony, although considered a luxury by many exhibitors, is very desirable from the standpoint of first class sound projection. This convenient little room, separated from the projection room proper by a fire-proof door, and with casements or other easily operated windows opening directly into the auditorium, need not be more than 30 inches wide, and only large enough for the projectionists to step into to check up on the volume of sound from the screen. His cue as to proper volume comes from his own ears and the audience reaction which he observes from this vantage point. Since in the last analysis proper performance of sound equipment makes or mars the success of an exhibitor's business, the sound balcony justifies its own cost and repays him in satisfied patronage. In some cities, the requirements are such that exits are required at either side of the projection room and in this case the sound balcony can be arranged so as to form an auxiliary exit.

LAYOUT AND DIMENSIONS

A MINIMUM size for rooms containing two projectors, one spot, and an effect machine, should be not less than 10 x 20 feet for the projection room proper. To this should be added an adjoining space of 6 x 8 feet for a generator room, if one is needed. (See floor plan.)

A generator room should have outside ventilation through windows or louvers in the front of the building. Heated air is exhausted through a tie-up with the same system as is used in the nearby projection room. Sufficient heating should be provided for to maintain an even temperature at all hours.

The generator room has moved upstairs immediately adjacent to the projection room, to allow the projectionist to give

NEW DECISIONS IN THEATRE REGULATION

By LEO T. PARKER

Reviewing litiga- tions involving late court interpreta- tions and recently enacted laws affect- ing operation of mo- tion picture theatres

DURING THE year 1934 numerous theatre owners and managers have had to contend with new state laws and city ordinances attempting to regulate the operation of motion picture theatres. Probably many of these laws were passed primarily as a direct result of the present unusual conditions. At any rate it is advisable for theatre owners and managers, and also members of operating staffs, to become informed of recent higher court decisions in order that they may with certainty safeguard their legal rights and also avoid expensive litigation that might otherwise easily result.

In accordance with old law, a municipality has no natural rights to enact a restrictive law or assess a license tax. However, under the municipal police power, things which are injurious to the public may be suppressed and prohibited. Therefore, anything which is injurious to the public, according to the manner in which it is managed and used by its owner, may be regulated by ordinances.

On the other hand, it is well established that a city ordinance is void which is prohibited by a state law. Moreover, a city ordinance is invalid which is intended to regulate taxation of businesses where the collection of taxes is regulated by the state law, and particularly if the ordinance conflicts with a state law. Moreover, an ordinance is invalid and unenforceable which imposes a tax so exorbitant that the owners of businesses are unduly taxed. In other words, it is well settled that in the exercise of the police power, for the purpose of regulation and enactment of tax laws, the authority of a municipality is limited to the imposing of license laws that are reasonable, and in some degree connected with the necessary expense of the city involved in the police supervision.

VALIDITY OF STATE LAWS

THE LAW IS well established that the Legislature of a state may prescribe the qualifications of persons authorized to engage in any trade or occupation which affects the public and requires special knowledge or skill, subject, however, to the limitation that unreasonable regulations and conditions will be declared void as a denial of constitutional liberty and of the equal protection of the laws.

Obviously, while it is the duty of the courts to enforce the state's police regulations and protective laws enacted by the Legislature in good faith and with reasonable and appropriate regard for the protection which the state owes to its citizens, it is nevertheless within the power of the court to determine whether the legislation purporting to be enacted in the exercise of the police power is really such, and whether the regulations prescribed by the Legislature are unreasonable or are otherwise unconstitutional.

LEGAL DISCRIMINATION

For these reasons, although it is generally held that either a state law or city ordinance is invalid which is discriminatory, yet the circumstances may be such that discrimination is necessary to safeguard the public. Under these latter conditions an apparently discriminatory law may be held valid.

For example, for the purpose of safeguarding against the dangers of inefficiency and incompetency in the use of electricity in motion picture projectors, the courts have held that the Legislature may pass valid laws that only persons who have been first examined and thereafter licensed by some state or city agency designated by it for that purpose shall undertake to engage in or work at the business of operating or assisting in the operation of such machinery, and may make its regulations and prohibitions in that regard applicable to all communities, or to such reasonably ascertained and designated classes of communities only, as the Legislature may deem essential for the safety and welfare of the public.

Of course, under these circumstances, after prescribing a standard of qualification, the Legislature should provide for officially appointed agencies or officials to execute its statutory purposes concerning determination of the facts upon which the law is to operate, by conducting appropriate examinations of applicants to ascertain the factual existence of their qualifications under the law. The latest higher court case involving this point is Gandy v. Borras (154 So. 248, Pensacola, Fla.), decided in April, 1934.

CASE

The facts of this case are that a state law was enacted which provides that a board of examiners and license commissioners composed of three members shall be appointed by the mayor in each city of the state having 6,000 inhabitants or more, for the purpose of examining and licensing persons who "may engage or work at the business of operating, or assisting in the operation of, any cinematograph or similar apparatus known as a moving picture machine."

It was contended by the owner of a theatre in a city having more than 6,000 population, that this law is void and unenforceable because of its discriminatory character in requiring theatre owners in only cities having more than 6,000 population to obtain the license. However, the higher court held the law valid and effective, pointing out the law involved in the following terms:

DECISION

"The business or occupation of managing and operating moving picture machines with their attendant dangers incident to the use of electricity in connection therewith is one peculiarly within the scope of the police power of the state to regulate. Such regulation may be accomplished in any reasonable manner, and may be of such nature and extent as the Legislature may deem to be appropriate. . . . The fact that the statute applies only in cities or towns having 6,000 population or more does not render the statute obnoxious. . . . Here there is conceivably a reasonable basis for the statute which undertakes to regulate the business of operating moving picture apparatus in the larger cities while omitting the smaller as a matter of legislative wisdom and policy. This makes regulation applicable where the dangers of incompetence are most likely to be disastrous."

It is clearly apparent, however, that a law of this nature would ordinarily be void, unless it could be shown with reasonable certainty that the discriminatory provisions are intended and likely to increase safety and welfare of theatre patrons, and other citizens.

BUILDING CODE ORDINANCE VALID

VARIOUS COURTS have held that the regulation of theatres, in the matter of fixing standards for fire protection, is a proper field for action by municipal authorities.

Generally speaking, a city ordinance is valid and enforceable which requires theatre operators to obtain licenses to operate their theatres and compels them to stop operating theatres in all buildings except those having construction approved by the state building code. However, the city officials cannot order a theatre building dismantled, but must adhere to the penalties prescribed in the ordinances. Also, the state building code is accepted by the courts as a foundation on which to build other safety regulations by local municipal authorities when reasonably necessary in situations in which a city may act.

CASE

For illustration, in Alsom v. City of Platteville, (251 N. W. 245, Wisconsin), decided January, 1934, it was shown that by authority of a state law a city passed the following ordinance:

"No license shall be granted to any person . . . to conduct any . . . motion picture performances . . . of a public nature in any building not constructed and equipped in compliance with the requirements for fireproof construction of Order 5100, of the Wisconsin State Building Code of 1931, which reads as follows 'A building is of fireproof construction if all the walls, partitions, piers, columns, floors, ceilings, roof and stairs are built of incombustible material. . . . The plastering shall not be applied to wood, lath or wood furring strips. The trimmings and finished floor may be of wood. . . . Acoustical materials shall not support combustion, etc., etc.'"

The ordinance further specified that "any person violating any of the provisions shall be fined in addition to the costs not more than one hundred dollars nor less than twenty-five dollars."

Suit was filed by the owner of the Gem Theatre Building on the contention that the ordinance is invalid, and the court was requested to grant an injunction against the city prohibiting it from enforcing the law.

Counsel for the city alleged that the building known as the Gem Theatre Building was very old and dilapidated, having been built seventy or eighty years; that the mortar used in laying the bricks in the walls of the building had deteriorated; that the building had many cracks in the walls, horizontal, diagonal and perpendicular, caused by the settling of the foundation in places, and by other causes; that the walls of the old part above an extension had been replaced by wooden construction, that the interior of the second and third stories were of wooden construction; and further, that all of the floors in the building were of wooden construction. Counsel for the city asked the court for judgment enjoining using the building as a place for motion picture exhibitions and to have the building declared a public nuisance.

The theatre owner admitted that his building did not satisfy the specifications of the ordinances, but claimed that he complied with general orders applying to existing buildings made by the Industrial Commission and that the premises were inspected by the Industrial Commission, and a certificate of inspection was issued requiring the making of certain changes, the plans of which were approved. Also, the building thereafter was inspected February 9, 1932, and the Industrial Commission approved of the changes. It was contended by counsel for the theatre owner that since the Industrial Commission had approved the building as being fitted and suited for use as a theatre, that the new ordinance was void and that it therefore was unenforceable.

DECISION

Notwithstanding this argument the higher court held the ordinance valid, but stated that the city officials could not extend their authority beyond the distinct provisions of the ordinance. In other words, the city could not compel the owner to dismantle the building. This court said:

"The ordinances by their terms include all moving picture houses within the city limits and provide a safety requirement applicable to each such building. There is no attempt at classification by way of setting apart one group of moving picture theatres from another. 'Order 5100' embodied in the ordinance is a lawful requirement as to certain types of building construction. It is a part of the building code of the state of Wisconsin. . . . Had not the city of Platteville adopted the ordinances here challenged, appellant's (theatre owner's) compliance with the 'inspection requirements' in repairing his building would have been sufficient to entitle him to operate a moving picture show in it. But the city having required more in the way of protection against fire than was required by the rule of the Commission, and the requirement being within the power of the city, the appellant cannot conduct his thea-

OBLIGATIONS IN PARTNERSHIPS

By M. MARVIN BERGER

MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

IN NO OTHER form of business relationship are honesty and fair dealing of greater importance than in a partnership. This will be realized when the powers and duties of the members of a partnership are described.

As a general thing, each partner has authority in the management and conduct of the business of the firm equal to that of any other partner. Within the scope of the partnership business, one partner may bind the others by his acts and make the others fully responsible for them. For example, one partner may fraudulently make a note in the firm name and deliver it to his private creditor and thereby bind the firm.

While by agreement among themselves the powers of the partners may be limited, such limitation is of no effect as to third persons dealing with the partnership, unless they have been given notice of the limitation. However, there are generally certain things which one or more partners, unless authorized by all the partners, may not do to bind the partnership, even though no specific limitation has been placed upon such acts. They are:

1. The assignment of the partnership property for the benefit of creditors.
2. The disposing of the good-will of the business.
3. Confession of a judgment against the partnership.
4. The sale of partnership property necessary for carrying on the business.
5. Submission of a partnership claim or liability to arbitration.

A person dealing with a partner proposing to do any of these acts should require proof of the partner's authority.

The responsibilities of a partner to his associates in the firm are as heavy as his powers are wide. For example, he may not make a private profit out of firm business nor in any way compete with the firm, and he may be compelled to account to his partners for such private profit or for a profit made in competition with the firm. He may carry on any other business if it be not in competition with the partnership, provided that by so doing, interference with his obligations to his partners is not created.

As among themselves, one partner cannot sue another in a matter arising out of the partnership relation. Neither can one partner sue his firm, nor can his firm sue him. The only method by which a grievance by a firm against a partner or that of a partner against the firm may be adjusted, if other means fail, is by dissolution of the firm and an accounting.

A partnership suing a third person, or being sued by him, is not considered as a unit, and each partner must be named as a plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be. However, the service of process on one partner is sufficient to bind the firm and to make the partnership property subject to payment of a judgment.

In the event of suit against the firm, not only is the partnership property subject to execution to satisfy the judgment, but also every partner who has been served with a summons is personally liable. And so, a creditor of the partnership who has served each partner with process may proceed to collect his obligations either from the personal property of any or all of the partners, or from the partnership assets. A partner who has been made to pay a firm debt out of his personal property may compel his partners to repay him.

In a case of suit against a partner by his personal creditor, the creditor may, if he obtains judgment, satisfy his judgment out of the partner's interest in the firm.

tre except in a building in which the construction meets the demands of the ordinances. The safety requirements fixed by the Commission have been increased, but the increased requirements have in no sense of the word run counter to the state requirements. . . . The ordinances here involved provide the penalties for violations and the city is thus limited to enforcing the penalties prescribed."

Thus, the fact that certain state officials may have approved a theatre structure does not prevent a municipality from enforcing a more stringent ordinance which is based upon a law or building code regulation approved by the state.

RIGHTS UNDER POLICE POWER

THE LAW is well settled that under the police power the state has authority to pass laws for the protection and preservation of the health, safety, morals, and general welfare of its citizens. In other words, it is peculiarly the duty of the state to determine and describe what rules and regulations are needed to achieve for its citizens this protection. Therefore, if properly authorized under a state law, a city may pass a valid ordinance requiring proprietors of theatres to obtain licenses to conduct each individual business or concession operated in connection with the theatre business, provided the regulation is deemed to be necessary to safeguard the general welfare of its citizens.

CASE

For instance, in Mee Company v. Healy (171 Atl. 263, Manchester, N. H.) decided in February, 1934, a city ordinance was passed which provides

"No person, firm or corporation shall keep a hall for dancing in the city of Manchester except for private use unless a license therefor shall first be obtained from the board of mayor and aldermen."

The owner of a place of amusement decided to hire an orchestra to play dance music for the entertainment of its patrons, to broadcast over the radio, and to provide music for those of its patrons who desired to make use of the open space for dancing. It was contended by the proprietor that he should not be compelled to obtain a license to operate the dancing floor in connection with his other and principal business, because he charged no fees for dancing. However, the higher court held the proprietor bound to obtain the license.

DECISION

"The test of the applicability of the enactments is not made to depend upon whether any fee, direct or indirect, is charged for permission to dance. Free dances are as much subject to regulation as those which are not. The test is whether the dance is public; that is, whether persons generally may attend provided they comply with the terms of admission, or whether only those persons may attend who have been personally selected and invited."

On the other hand, it is interesting to observe that in a leading case, People v. Wacke (137 N. Y. S. 652), a New York court held that the test of the applicability of a somewhat similar ordinance depends upon whether the activity carried on is subsidiary or incidental to the conduct of another business either licensed or not subjected to any licensing requirement. There motion pictures may not be shown without a license.

In this case it was held that although a license is required to operate a motion picture theatre, such shows need not be licensed if shown in a place, as a restaurant, for the entertainment of the patrons.

PARKING LAW HELD VOID

IT HAS LONG been recognized by the courts that the parking problem is serious and perplexing, and that the effort of municipalities to solve the problem should not be unnecessarily interfered with. On the other hand, the existence of a problem may not be made a cloak for discriminatory or arbitrary action. And, therefore, the courts will not hesitate to hold an ordinance void which appears to be unreasonable.

CASE

For example, in Giant Corporation v. City of Trenton (168 Atl. 310, New Jersey), decided during the past few weeks, it was shown that a city ordinance was passed which provides: "No vehicle not actually engaged in receiving or discharging passengers or merchandise shall be parked on either side of St. Joes Avenue, between Meade Street and Olden Avenue. . . ."

It was contended that the ordinance is void because it was unreasonable, discriminatory and arbitrary. In holding the ordinance void, the court said:

DECISION

"The ordinance does not regulate parking on the affected streets; it prohibits parking absolutely at all hours of the day and night and throughout the week. . . . The question of the reasonable character of an ordinance is for the court, and the court will not hesitate to declare an ordinance void if it is plainly unreasonable."

CHECKING YOUR LIGHTING: A SERIES OF FORMS

THE FOURTH of a group of forms which can be used as inspection guides and report blanks by theatre management, is presented below. Previous forms have concerned the front and the lobby; the next and final one will cover the auditorium. The forms in this series, which may be easily copied on a typewriter for use in inspection whenever occasion arises, have been prepared by General Electric.

FOYERS AND REST ROOMS

ITEM	CONDITION FOUND	SUGGESTIONS
25. Colors Warm and Inviting?		Ambers, flame-tint, and rose produce warmth, yet absorb relatively little light. Remove dark colored lamps.
26. Light Soft and Subdued?		Shade wall-brackets and fixtures.
27. Sufficient Light?		Two to 3 footcandles should be provided with higher intensities at chairs and lounges. Indirect portables are effective.
28. Pictures Lighted?		Concealed picture-lighting spotlight masked so that beam fits picture, gives best results. Conventional picture units may be employed.
29. Mirrors Lighted?		A shaded fixture at each side of the mirror, mounted at eye level, makes mirror much more useful.
30. Lavatories Appear Clean?		More light capitalizes cleanliness. Increase wattage, using inside-frosted lamps.

These pictures are evidence that theatre owners and architects are now discovering what an ideal setting VITROLITE provides. For building facings, ticket booths, and lobbies, this modern structural glass material is without equal. Its wide variety of beautiful colors and agate shades, its adaptability to design—alone or in combination with metals—enables VITROLITE to make old, unattractive buildings amazingly beautiful, modern, and attractive. The gleaming flint-like surface is impervious to water and acids, will not stain, craze, or lose its luster. VITROLITE is also used in leading theatres throughout the country for toilet partitions and wainscoting, for it is the one material that is most sanitary and can be kept spotlessly clean with the least effort. Investigate VITROLITE, the quickly installed material that will enhance the pulling power of any theatre.

NEW SCHEMES IN MODERN REMODELING

By EUGENE CLUTE

Concluding a presentation of authoritative suggestions for the use of modern materials and methods in theatres

SOMEWHAT SIMILAR in principle to the patterns treated of in my preceding discussion (October 20th issue) is the coloring used in certain European motion picture theatres where the main wall surfaces are painted some quiet, light color, with some stronger color used for contrast and touches of a third color for accent. Such a scheme might be worked out by painting the auditorium walls a plain, light, cool gray, and the dado a dark, rich blue. A light, clear yellow could then be used to paint edges, doors, etc. The seats could be upholstered in the dark blue. The lobby walls could be in the blue trimmed with silvery aluminum leaf and lines of the light yellow.

Another modern color scheme for a plain interior, one that would not be very daring, yet would be smart might be made by painting the auditorium walls a medium-light shade of beige—a slightly flesh-colored, warm buff—and using a soft, medium shade of jade green for relief, with touches of medium-light vermilion, or orange red, for accent. The upholstery of the seats in this case could well be in a deep shade of the jade green.

Graded tones of a single color make a good wall decoration, used in bands next to each other, grading from dark to light. One way in which such a treatment can be worked out has been told previously in this series in a description of a decorative scheme for a lobby or lounge in Salubra wall covering. The same thing can be done in paint applied directly to the wall in horizontal bands.

In the auditorium, graded tones in paint might well be used in broad vertical bands on the walls at either side of the picture screen, especially if these walls are splayed or flared out from the screen. This would make an excellent way of providing a dark area of wall next to the screen to absorb the greater part of whatever light may be thrown upon the walls at this point from the screen, preventing it from being reflected back to the screen to dull the picture. The walls near the screen should not be shiny, and it is well to have them of a fairly dark tone also to prevent reflection. If graded tones are used here, this dark color can be tied in nicely with the general wall color, the lighter bands effecting an easy transition.

In such a treatment the band next to the screen should be the darkest, the one next to it somewhat less dark and somewhat broader, and so on, the bands growing progressively lighter in color and broader until an alcove or proscenium treatment of sufficient depth has been produced. The main portion of the side walls can be painted in a much lighter tone of the same color.

A TWO-COLOR SCHEME

With such a proscenium decoration as described above, the lower part of the main side walls might be painted in a different color. If the wall is buff color, jade green could be used for the dado. With a cool, gray wall, a blue dado is good. It is logical to use a darker color for this portion of the wall, as it is less likely to become soiled through contact than a light color. A change of color here is likely to be agreeable.

VARYING ACOUSTIC AREAS

An opportunity to add to the interest of the interior lies in differentiating the portions of the walls that have acoustical treatment. Where, as is sometimes the case, the back wall of the auditorium and the portions of the side walls toward the rear are covered with some sound-absorbing material, these wall areas can be treated decoratively in a different way from the rest of the wall surfaces to advantage.

For example, in the Radio City Center theatre, where the acoustical treatment covers the back wall and the side walls as far forward as the fronts of the balconies, these areas are covered with a patterned fabric, stretched over the perforated transite board that covers the rock wool applied between furring strips.

Where the acoustical material has a facing of perforated material, such as perforated transite or perforated sheet metal, it may be painted and if the paint is of a dark color the perforations may be unnoticeable. If the material has a porous surface, care must be taken not to apply a paint which might form a film or clog the pores, impairing or destroying the power of the material to absorb sound and making it of little or no acoustical value. There are means by which such materials can be colored without appreciably reducing their efficiency.

When the acoustical material is in squares, as several types of these materials are, a decorative effect might be secured by coloring one horizontal row in a dark tone, and the next row in a lighter tone of the same color, banding this portion of the wall horizontally. If wider bands seem to be in better scale with the interior, two adjoining rows may be colored alike in alternating horizontal bands of light and dark.

A WALL-FACING MATERIAL

Wall surfaces that are rich and beautiful, gleaming with ever-changing highlights, ornamented in various ways if desired, and either in the very smart black or in combinations of colors, can be produced with Vitrolite, opaque structural glass slabs that are readily applied to old or new walls, either exterior or interior. This material is handsome, strong, does not stain, is weatherproof and remains new looking. It is one of the most used facings for fine store fronts and is one of the best for the front of a motion picture theatre, also for the walls of the lobby, foyer and lounges. It is suitable for ceilings as well.

Though it is often used in a single color, black being favored, Vitrolite affords a wide range of possibilities in color combinations and ornamentation that should not be overlooked. It comes in several colors and in agate effects that can be used together to great advantage in working out wall treatments. Also, it can be ornamented by sandblasting through a stencil to any depth.

Further enrichment can be secured by the application of colored enamels, lacquers, gold leaf or aluminum leaf in recessed ornament produced by sandblasting. As such applied colors or metal leaf have not the permanence of the Vitrolite, they have to be renewed if used outdoors, where it is, perhaps, wiser to confine the decoration to the many effects obtainable with different colors of the material itself, and by sandblasting and by trimming with metal mouldings.

Pilaster effects and various banded treatments can be worked out with sandblasted ornament, which should be used for accent, the greater part of the wall being in plain or agate material. It is more economical and in better taste not to overdo the ornamentation, and the designs should be simple. Though shallow or surface sandblasting is often best, particularly for simple all-over patterns, sometimes ornament should be more deeply sandblasted—for example, on pilasters or bands where greater richness and architectural quality may be required. It is possible to sandblast a design clear through the material, producing a perforated grille.

This material is made in the following plain colors: black, white, ivory, jade (a light green), orchid and gray. Recently it has been brought out in variegated agate effects that have irregular markings produced by introducing different colors or tones into the mixture during manufacture. Especially beautiful is the agate material, which has markings like wisps of blue-gray smoke and similar wave lines in soft shades of tan in a darker background. It is called walnut agate. There are also golden agate, jade agate, orchid agate, emerald agate and royal blue agate. The agate material can be used very effectively for notes of accent in schemes composed mainly of plain material or combined in different colors. Good design and restraint are important in this also.

Vitrolite for interior walls 11/32-inch thick costs about $1.75 a square foot set in place. The base, 3/4 inch thick by 6 inches wide, costs about $1.50 a running foot, set. Door trim, 7/16 inch thick by 4 inches wide costs about $1.30 a running foot, set. Sand blasting ornament adds about 50c a square foot to the cost of the portions actually sandblasted, such as trim, pilasters, etc.

A new type of Vitrolite intended for the entire surfacing of buildings has strong metal mesh reinforcing embedded in the back. There are organizations with expert workmen in the principal cities for installing this material, and an art department and an engineering department co-operate in the preparation of designs.

THE INTERNATIONAL STYLE

Some of the interiors described in this series are of the type of modern design that is called the International Style. Buildings of the Chicago World's Fair were mostly in this style. It is characterized by big, plain surfaces and simple rectangular shapes without cornices, columns, window caps, etc., and it often shows the use of different colors in large areas on interior or exterior walls. The smaller buildings are usually all white outside, with perhaps a little black for accent. This is the prevailing type of modernism. But there has recently developed another and distinctly different modern type—the Classic Modern.

CLASSIC MODERN

Though styles in decoration do not change as rapidly as fashions in women's clothes and millinery, they do change just as definitely. Right now Classic Modern is going over in a big way in the decoration of fine residences and apartments, and it is perfectly adaptable to motion picture theatre decoration.

It has a very strong appeal for women because of its refinement, beauty and ultra-smartness. Most women know what it is through reading the magazines on home making and the newspaper advertisements of the big stores. They will recognize it and know that the theatre is up-to-date. It is safe to say that this style will be good for a long time to come, for it has much genuine worth.

It is not an expensive way of decorating a theatre. In fact it can be quite inexpensive. But it does call for the services of a good architect or designer for it is so simple and depends so much upon good proportions, the excellence of what little ornament there is, and exactly the right shades of coloring that it is sure to be a failure in less capable hands.

Now, a Classic Modern interior is nothing more or less than a severely plain room with walls painted a cool, light color and relieved with some ornament of ancient Greek inspiration, used very sparingly. It combines the beauty of the Classic Age with the plainness of Modernism.

The ornament resembles that of the French Directoire style and of the English Adam and Regency styles. All of these styles that originated in the latter part of the Eighteenth Century and the early years of the Nineteenth, were inspired by the discovery of the art works unearthed by the excavations on the site of the buried Roman City of Pompeii, where the influence of Greek artists and craftsmen had

STRUCTURAL GLASS

● Styles and patterns especially adapted to motion picture theatres and public buildings of similar character have been developed in the structural glass material known in the building trades for many years as Vitrolite and manufactured by the Vitrolite Company of Chicago. Coming in slabs and fastened to the wall with plastic cement, it is well adapted to remodeling because it can be laid over existing wall surfaces. It has already had considerable use in theatres, especially for fronts, lobbies, foyers and toilet rooms.

It has often been used in black combined with chromium trim, but now has been developed to respond to the new demand for color. It is obtainable in plain colors and in agate. The glazed surface is quite reflective, lending added life to the front or room. It is particularly indicated for modern patterns employing trims of aluminum, stainless steel, chromium plate and bronze. About fourteen colors are now available in this material, with others in development.

TICKET REGISTER

● A new model ticket register with a single key operating each admission price unit, has been brought out by the Silent American Ticket Register Company of New York. It is referred to as the Model X.

It is electrically operated, but smaller and more compact in design than previous models. Power is furnished by an induction type motor (no commutator brushes), and contact is effected through a "roller switch" designed to reduce friction. The roll is chopped by means of a straight-cut knife, and exposed parts are rust-proof.

A NEW SPLICER

● A combination splicer and editing machine has been put on the market by the Rosco Laboratories of Brooklyn, N. Y. This splicer has a number of new features calculated to produce more accurate splices with greater facility. It is necessary to cut only three sprocket holes from the film in replacing poor splices, and the film is automatically cut so as to avoid misframing.

The device has a magnifying mirror centered under the film, the mirror reflecting the light from an ordinary overhead lamp through the film to aid in editing. The cutting block is directly over the mirror and has two blades for cutting both sides of film simultaneously.

An emulsion remover has also been developed for use with this splicer. It is an instrument having a moistened wick with a blade, and turning of fingers alternates wick and blade to peel off the emulsion.

NEW TYPE REFLECTOR

● A line of reflectors employing a metallic element the nature of which is not disclosed by the manufacturer, has been developed by the Major Equipment Company of Chicago. Slip rings, which lock the roundels, are integral parts of the reflector. The new reflector, marketed under the name "Alzak," are now available for all Major equipment where reflectors are used.

Night view of the new Trans-Lux theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., designed on the same style as previous houses of this operator's turnstile type and comprehensively described in Better Theatres following its inception. The sign shows the use of silhouette letters on the marquee in connection with diffused neon lighting (installation by the manufacturer, the Wagner Sign Service, Inc., of New York). The letters are finished in baked rubber enamel with black face and red edge, and hand on steel wires in front of opalescent glass. They are illuminated, in three colors by high intensity neon tubing.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

SUPERVISION OF THE OPTICAL SYSTEM TO AVOID LIGHT LOSS

A phase of projection routine often neglected, with the result that maximum illumination values are not attained—thus resulting in a waste of money

TWO ELEMENTS of proper projection routine which, though pretty well understood by well trained projectionists, are yet frequently lost in the shuffle—neglected, that is to say, enough to cause avoidable projection costs. These are:

1. Proper determination and maintenance of the distance of the light source from the collector.

2. Control of the diameter of the spot.

In many cases it is probably just because these matters are routine that they do not receive the supervision their importance merits, and as a result light losses are incurred which are entirely avoidable.

To use a graphic representation with which many projectionists are familiar (Figure 1, taken from F. H. Richardson's Bluebook of Projection), the reader is asked to observe that if a collector having a free opening of 4.25 inches, is located at F, the angle of light AB will be picked up. On the other hand, if the collector were to be moved back to position C, a lens with a diameter of 7.25 inches would be required to pick up exactly the same light angle—that is to say, the same amount of light.

It is evident from even this cursory examination that the projectionist who wishes to handle his equipment efficiently, getting everything from its operation that it is designed to give, he must study his projector optical system as a whole and by each individual element and be able to select the condenser, if it is used, that will be able to work at a permissible minimum distance from the light source so that the maximum amount of light can be available for use.

With respect to mirrors, the distance is of course automatically fixed and should never be altered in any degree. A mirror of the wrong focal length means loss of light plus improper distribution of light.

The only way of being sure that the mirror is of exactly the proper focal length is to follow the instructions of the manufacturer of the equipment concerning adjustment. If results are then not satisfactory, the projectionist may take accurate measurement of the distance from the crater floor to the mirror vertex, and the distance of the mirror vertex to the cooling plate and diameter of the spot, then sending these measurements to the lamp manufacturer.

Having adjusted conditions so that the maximum amount of light is collected, attention should be turned to the spot, which is the next great waster of light (see Figure 2, also taken from the Bluebook of Projection, based on old aperture, but still demonstrating the effect of over-size). It is of great importance that the spot be just as small as possible.

The projectionist who depends entirely upon the arc control is not likely to be getting, at least safely, as small a spot as possible. On the other hand, the projectionist who makes a practice of watching his picture consistently will be in a position to get a small spot without incurring discoloration.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES

NOTES ON THE FALL MEETING OF THE SMPE

THE FALL MEETING OF the Society of Motion Picture Engineers proved to be most interesting and valuable. The papers varied from good to excellent. There was not one minus mark in the whole lot.

More and more the SMPE is proving its value to the industry. First, the discussions that follow the reading of papers presents the viewpoints of many men. Secondly, the personal contact between engineers engaged in studying problems connected with the industry, the correct working out of which is essential to improvement of the entertainment provided by the motion picture theatre, frequently has important practical results. Such contacts not only add to our general knowledge of what is being attempted and done, but very often through personal discussion of knotty points, engineers get ideas that tend to make those points much clearer and enable them, at least eventually, to find a correct solution.

C. Francis Jenkins has passed on into the shadows which one day must engulf us all. There has been some dispute about his achievements in the early days, but there is no doubt at all that back in 1916 it was C. Francis Jenkins who called a meeting of engineers in the national capital and organized the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Moreover, I personally will bear witness to the fact that Jenkins literally kept the organization alive through its first doubtful years. The Society now is an honored, permanent, growing motion picture institution.

Dr. A. N. Goldsmith retires as president of the SMPE January 1. The Society has a new, and a most reassuring successor to Dr. Goldsmith in H. G. Tasker of the United Research Laboratories. But we of the projection field will not soon forget the fact that President Goldsmith has taken more interest in the advancement of projection than has any former chief officer. He has attended almost every meeting of the Projection Practice Committee, remaining throughout each session, offering an advice of inestimable value.

In token of its appreciation, the committee presented Dr. Goldsmith with a beautiful gold fountain pen.

It was gratifying to learn that a very real effort is being made to deliver variable density sound tracks that may be projected without constant, and often violent, adjustments of the fader. That would indeed be a genuine relief, as well as a source of improvement in sound.

Among the equipment displayed was a new film reel, the invention of H. A. DeVry of Chicago, which seems to me to be the final answer to the vexatious reel question. It is so substantial, so simple, so light in weight, so immune to injury through any but very violent abuse, and I believe so reasonable in price, that unless the industry adopts it for its very own I shall feel inclined to have its honorable head examined.

Briefly, it consists in a lightweight but very substantial 5-inch sheet steel hub into which the film may be instantly locked in two different ways, with spokes of spring steel about a half-inch wide by perhaps 3/32-inch thick, which slip loosely into slots provided in the sides of the hub, their outer ends riveted to a steel ring of the same material—riveted because spot welding would cause such metal to crack.

The spokes are free to move in and out in the hub slots, so that when the rim is bent there is no stretching of the metal of the spokes. I subjected the reels to this test: I laid one on the floor, placed one foot on either side of the hub, about half way in from the outer rim, and stood on the reel, full weight, squashing the two sides flat together. Upon release, the reel instantly sprang back to exactly its former shape—no damage at all. I also seized the rims of the reel and bent them outward at an angle of at least 45°, inflicting no damage whatever. And all this was done to the 16-mm. reel (the 35-mm. reel has not yet been made up).

The DeVry organization also had on display its new chain drive projector, which I have previously described. As to the chain drive, it really seems worthy of serious attention. However, I am of the opinion that the housing or casing of the projector needs some change. I will have more to say about this projector, however, as time passes and I begin to receive reports from projectionists who are using it.

Miss R. Hockheimer, director of Visual Education in New York City schools, advised the convention that owing to lack of ample funds, the schools of New York City are equipped only with 16-mm. silent projectors, and that only about 45% of them had even these. Miss Hockheimer stressed the value of motion pictures in education and said all educators felt the same way about it. She said that some films made as much as 25 years ago still had educational value.

In slides illustrating one paper we were shown that in passing through air, sound was refracted whenever it passed from warm to cool air, or vice versa, whereupon one projectionist remarked, "It must be bent a lot as it passes from some projection rooms into the auditorium!"

It also was shown that as sound passes over water it travels more slowly near the surface of the water than higher up, speed gradually advancing as altitude increases.

Erpi representatives showed pictures representing sound wave action that should be viewed by every exhibitor and projectionist. I intended to see if this reel cannot be elaborated to include other things and sent out, upon request, to responsible unions for display to projectionists and managers.

There was on display the most ingenious changeover device I have ever seen. It was built by a projectionist whose name I do not yet feel at liberty to divulge. I saw to it that several projectionists and directors of projection had a practical demonstration. All were impressed with its value. It may be put out in a manual operation form, or in one fully automatic. Personally I would recommend it highly as a manually operated device, but not for full automatic operation.

In course of the discussion on one paper, someone intimated that an exchange that sends an exhibitor a bill for film damage is a robber. Nothing of the sort, provided the exchange delivered the print to the theatre in good condition, and further provided the exchange is certain the damage was done in the theatre and was due to some fault either in projection procedure or in the equipment, or to faulty packing for return shipment.

And now for a few words of well earned commendation and appreciation. As is well known by many, much of the smoothness and value of SMPE conventions is due to the hard and able work of two men, William Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, and Herbert Griffin of the International Projector Corporation. Kunzmann makes all the general arrangements, and Griffin prepares for transportation and supervises the installation of all the equipment necessary for projection, public address, etc., and if you imagine that either is a small job you have another guess coming.

Both jobs call for long planning and hard work. If anyone disagrees, I have not the slightest doubt but that either Kunzmann or Griffin will cheerfully permit him to have a go at it. I submit that both the National Carbon Company and International Projector Corporation should feel proud in having such able gentlemen on their staffs. The SMPE certainly owes them both a debt of gratitude for the work they have done.

ARC LIGHT GAS FUMES

FROM A MID-WESTERN state comes this inquiry: "For two years past I have worked as projectionist in a small theatre. Would appreciate any information you can give me on the following. Are fumes or gas from the arc injurious to health? What kind of fumes are given off? Is it a fine dust or just a kind of gas?"

SOUND EQUIPMENT

Built to Bring You PROFITABLE PATRONAGE

WHILE it costs next to nothing for maintenance, Model D Wide Range Sound Heads do much to bring people who enjoy extraordinary performances. That makes profits. Model D reproduces up to 10,000 cycles with unequalled brilliancy and fidelity. Each delicate shade of tone and overtone is thrown precisely upon the photocell. Syncrofilm amplifiers and speakers transmit that accurate detection to the audience without distortion or background noise. The actors' voices and the music reach your hearers with all their rich, full intonation.

Yet Syncrofilm Model D costs little at first, and less during its long life. It is so accurately, finely built and so cleverly designed that even unavoidable wear is extremely slow. You will get many years of carefree inexpensive service—service of the kind that makes money.

Write now for illustrated details. Tell us the make of your projectors so we can quote intelligently.

"The projection room in which I work has a vent pipe, and from each lamphouse top a sheet metal pipe extends to it. But the gas does not seem to go up through the ventilator. Is it necessary that a fan be installed in the vent pipe?"

The arc emits a certain amount of very fine, very light dust. It is that which coats the lamphouse interior with a white sediment. The carbon arc also gives off a gas. All the carbon except the fine dust spoken of is transformed into gas, and while such gas is not regarded as in any degree "poisonous," or injurious insofar as has to do with breathing limited quantities occasionally, it certainly cannot be regarded as healthful, and is unhealthful if breathed constantly, or for several hours per day, even in limited quantities.

This gas should be removed from the projection room. If your vent pipe doesn't do this it should be made to do so. Being very careful, while projection is in progress, light a match and hold it up close to the vent pipe opening. You may thus definitely determine whether or not the draft is up and out. If it is not, then a fan should be installed, not only for the sake of comfort in hot weather, but for the sake of safety and health at all times.

Suppose you had a film fire, and the draft was down instead of up and out. Just how long do you think it would take to flood the auditorium with smoke?

As to the dust, not enough of that will reach the room in any event to be especially injurious to health. But, as already said, the draft through that vent pipe should be up, not once in a while, but all the time!

DESIGNS FOR 2,000-FOOT REELS

RECENTLY at a meeting of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers I was privileged to meet and chat with Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, who came east on missions connected with the work of the Council, a portion of which had to do directly with the 2,500-foot reel which seems quite likely to be adopted and made standard in the very near future.

Mr. Mitchell exhibited to the committee samples of reels and a very substantial shipping case, both of which were examined with keen interest. Several objections, however, were voiced against the particular reels shown.

These reels were designed wholly for shipping purposes and it is intended to design them if possible, so that theatres will be forced to have a set of reels for use in projection. Several plans to this end were suggested to Mr. Mitchell. The reels were of some strong but very light metal, rather lightly embossed to provide stiffness, which in my own opinion will not be sufficiently provided in the particular design shown.

The hub is 5 inches in diameter, with several slots for convenient threading. The hub is excellent, but it seems to me that while we are at it, it would be well to increase the diameter of the projector magazine spindles and rewind shafts upon which reels are mounted. It would cost maybe as much as $5 per theatre, but after all what does that amount to when the benefits of more substantial reel mounting is considered. The silly little play-thing spindles and fragile locking device is a hangover from early days when everything was small, weak and rather inadequate.

My own suggestion is that reels for shipment be of rather heavily embossed sheet metal heavy enough to make them hard to bend, this to be substantially locked to the hub with a steel spring wire not less than 3/16ths of an inch in diameter at the outer edge, crimped into the metal of course, to provide stiffness and prevent the flange from bending at the edge and an opening to receive a spindle 5/8 of an inch in diameter.

A reel with die cast sides was presented for inspection and given to Mr. Mitchell to take back with him. It has been in use as a projection reel for eight years and is still apparently just as good as when new. It is a reel made for use with the Feaster non-rewind projector attachment which at one time gave promise of being adopted, but finally fell by the wayside for some reason. Unquestionably it is a most excellent projection reel. Whether or no it would serve acceptably as a shipment reel I am not so certain. It is, however, worthy of being given at least a practical test. If it will stand the terrific strain shipment reels are subjected to it would last indefinitely and in the end prove far, far cheaper than anything yet proposed.

As to shipping cases, a most excellent suggestion was made by Chairman Harry Rubin. It was that shipping cases should be provided with separate individual reel compartments. With this I thoroughly agree, for this cost would offer more added protection to the films.

INCANDESCENT LAMP LIFE

I AM IN receipt of a letter from B. R. Johnson of the Orpheum theatre in Kerrobert, Saskatchewan, Canada, complaining that the incandescent ("Mazda") light source on one of his projectors keeps burning out after a few hours use; also that he thinks he is in luck if a lamp lasts as much as 40 hours.

I have advised him that though he said he had calibrated the ammeter on the offending light circuit, finding it all right, there could hardly be but one answer to the trouble, and that is overload. He said the lamp of short life gave more brilliant light than the other, longer-lived one. I advised Mr. Johnson to cut down the current until both lamps showed the same screen brilliancy (I assumed the optical trains to be identical) and try it out. He says he has done so, but that it is too soon to report results. This brings up a point I wish to lay before you—the surprising effect of just a little overload on incandescent projection lamps.

Get this and get it clearly. Be very certain your lamp circuits are served by an ammeter that is exactly right. An overload of only 1% will cut off 20% of the life of the lamp. A 2% overload cuts lamp life down almost 40%. A 4% overload decreases lamp life by 60%, at the same time increasing the light production by only 30%.

TINTING SURFACE OF ACOUSTIC FELT

FROM MAINE comes the inquiry: "Will you be good enough to advise me as to whether or not we can spray or paint the felt padding used on walls of the theatre for sound. We thought of spraying it with calcimine or cold water paint to make the auditorium more attractive. Would it make any difference in the sound by so doing?"

No appreciable harm would be done provided the liquid used is thin and that it is sprayed on. The use of heavy paint would not do at all. A thin, tinted paint or calcimine, sprayed, would work no harm. The liquid must not fill up the pores of the felt. Even three coats probably would work no appreciable change in the acoustic conditions. It is a matter for experiment to determine just how thin the paint must be to avoid filling up of the pores, and how many coats (assuming more than one is required to get sufficient coverage) may be applied.

Calcimine would most likely have less effect on sound than paint, though if the job is properly and carefully done with paint, this would be all right.

It is further advised that before starting the job, a yard or two of the material be experimented with, to determine just how thick the liquid may be and how many coats will best serve. Painting with a brush would not be nearly so safe as spraying.

QUALITY IN PROJECTION

I PRESENT a letter well worth reading. It is from J. Regan Walker, projectionist of the Mecca theatre in Thurber, Tex.—a town so small that I am unable to locate it on the map. Walker writes:

"Dear Brother Richardson: I am only a wee bit of a fish in the very large projection pond. I do nevertheless feel flattered that after only three attempts at answering Bluebook School questions, I have found my name printed among those who answered correctly, and once my answer appeared, though that may have been done to encourage a new scholar.

"And now, Brother Richardson, may I thank you most sincerely for your untiring efforts in the field of projection. Often I think what a number of highly skilled men the profession of projection could boast were only 60% of the men as earnest in attempting to better the quality of picture projection and sound reproduction as are you.

better today than I did yesterday. Handling projection in such a way that maximum results in entertainment are secured from each production—all entertainment values gotten therefrom—is becoming a science as exact as mathematics.

"In the present advanced, highly developed stage of radio broadcasting the theatre-going public is becoming more and more critical in its selection of entertainment values and bills of fare, tending increasingly to patronize that theatre that gives them the best in sound and picture.

"Exhibitors and theatre managers should realize that fact and seek to get the very best possible results, even though it compels the installation of better equipment and possibly changes in the projection personnel.

"Appreciation in full measure is due such outstanding men as yourself for the work you are doing in the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES, and in the Bluebook, which has made it possible for projectionists throughout the world to have available information enabling them to handle with greater efficiency the every day problems of projection. In closing I wish for yourself and the Bluebook School the continued success they deserve."

I am not publishing this letter because of the kind words Walter speaks concerning me and my work, but rather because of his remarks concerning rat holes. Read that several times and ponder. It points the right road to success in any field of human endeavor.

There are entirely too many men in the projection field who follow that plan in reverse so far as is possible, men whose chief aim is to discover means whereby they may do less today than they did yesterday. Receiving proportionately less for their decreased service forms no part of their philosophy, of course.

RETURNS TO FIELD OF EARLY EFFORTS

BACK IN 1910, and for some years thereafter, the name of J. H. Hallberg, supply dealer and electrical engineer, was very well known in the motion picture industry—very well, indeed. He invented and put out several equipments for use in projection, one being the "Hallberg Economizer," which was the very first low-voltage transformer made for use in controlling current in a.c. projection circuits.

Mr. Hallberg then had a large supply store on 23rd Street, in New York—or was it on 14th? It was a long time ago and things tend to blur in memory where an industry passes rapidly through so many radical changes. Later "J. H." took a high office in a projector manufacturing company; also, he wrote for the Motion Picture News. Then he took over the management of a great institution entirely outside the motion picture field.

I am now advised that he proposes to re-enter the motion picture field.

Well, J. H., I extend a welcoming hand as I know your many friends of other days will, for you always were a live-wire.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

REALIZING THAT WHEN you start to do something these days you should start off right and with the best advice available, I am going to ask that you help me on the following task.

I have a lot in a small town of 500. The lot is 30 feet wide and 100 feet long. I want to build a nice little modern theatre on this lot. The town is small, but the possibilities are good for a nice oil boom soon, so I want to get in on the ground floor.

I want to build this theatre as cheap as possible, probably using stucco front, without a balcony in it, and want as many seats put in as possible. Could I build this so I would only have one aisle in the middle? How high should the ceiling be? What size should the booth be? And how many seats could be put in a building this size? How much space should be used in lobby, and what should be used for a small stage?

If possible, I would like for you to give me a small sketch of a nice front and lobby, also floor plans.

What would be the best material to use on the inside walls for acoustical effects and decorating?

I want to build this theatre with the least cost possible with a modern front and good sound.

I do not plan on using any brick as I believe a stucco building would be much cheaper and could be made very attractive.—A. C.

The Answer:

THE LOT SIZES, 30 x 100 feet, will accommodate a theatre building with a seating capacity of 286 persons. If you so desire you can plan for a center aisle, but I advise against it, as the house is so narrow. Remember that the best seats are always in the center of the house. So I would plan for 13 seats in each row with an aisle on each side.

The ceiling height should be at least 18 feet, and the projection room, which should be located over the lobby, should not be less than 10 x 18 feet. For the depth of the lobby I figure 12 feet, with 6 feet for foyer, 12 feet for stage. I would provide 15 feet for space between the first row of seats and the projection screen.

No sketches can be furnished by this department. You should employ a theatre architect.

For acoustical effects you may use

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

acoustic plaster, sound-absorbing tiles or similar material. Tiles come in colors and need no decorating. Before you make up your mind about the materials to be used for the exterior, I advise you to consult your state building code.

The cost of such a building as you have in mind will be about 18c per cubic foot.

The Question:

I HAVE BEEN following your column of planning in BETTER THEATRES and feel sure that you can assist me with some problems that confront me at present.

Would like to know if the present building code of this vicinity would permit the erection of a frame building, stucco outside with Celotex interior and concrete floor.

Also, can you advise where I can obtain a list of competent theatre architects who make a specialty of this kind of work?

Also could you give me an estimate of the cost of the building I have described above, from these dimensions, 80 feet long by 50 feet wide?—S. R.

The Answer:

I DO NOT KNOW if your local building department allows you to erect a frame building for theatre purposes in the downtown district. However, you can find this out very easily by calling at your City Hall, or consulting the fire chief. Personally I advise you very strongly against such a method of construction.

I find in the New York State code covering theatre buildings the following ruling: If the seating capacity is below 500 persons and there is no balcony, the theatre is classified under Class B type and can be of non-fireproof construction. This means that it must be enclosed with walls of approved masonry or reinforced concrete.

I suggest you write to the editor of BETTER THEATRES for names of theatre architects in your territory.

A building 50 feet wide and 80 feet long, with an 18-foot ceiling, will cost complete, including general, plumbing, heating and electric wiring, about 20 cents per cubic foot, or about $16,000.

The Question:

I AM ENCLOSING a few photographs of my 500-seat theatre for your suggestions on a new modern front, and also marquee.

I have large lamp frames such as this to hang on the ceiling, but I do not know what to cover them with, or what material or modern design to use on them. Your suggestion on the above work will be greatly appreciated.—W. A. G.

The Answer:

LOOKING OVER the photographs of the exterior of your theatre, I do not think you will experience much difficulty in remodeling this front into a modern treatment at a low cost. If I am not mistaken, the present front is constructed mostly out of stucco and sheet metal work, which can be easily removed.

I suggest that you arrange the two sets of entrance doors on each side of the ticket booth into one unit. This would leave ample space between doors and the side of the building for recessed poster cabinets. And plan for a new ticket booth in the center of the front, between entrance doors. After removing all projecting cornices and stucco surfaces, cover the wall with a glass or a composition material, which at most only requires 1½ inches for material and application. Use aluminum or white metal sections for copings and door trim and you will have an effective modern front.

Unless you require an entire new marquee, the present one can be easily remodeled in keeping with the design of the front. Should you desire a new marquee extending across the entire width of the building, you might construct it entirely out of flashed opal glass with white metal trim and silhouette program letters, all light effects to be concealed. The lamp frames may be covered with cutouts of masonite or plasterboard, and for color effects use gelatine backings. If the latter prove too large and do not look right, you could install some new modernistic electric light brackets.

The Question:

WOULD YOU be kind enough to furnish me with as much information as possible regarding the following matter.

We intend to build a small community theatre, to seat about 600 to 800 people. How much would it cost, approximately, to fully equip a house of that size, including a small stage?

What make of cooling system would you advise to install? How large an auditorium would we need, to accommodate the above number of seats?

Any further information you could give me would be greatly appreciated. Also, if possible, could you send me some plans or sketches of a proposed layout.—R. S.

The Answer:

THE COST of equipping a theatre depends a great deal upon the materials selected. For a theatre of the size stated the cost would probably run between $10,000 and $12,000. This includes full projection room equipment, sound, screen, seating, carpets, drapes and poster cabinets.

There are several systems of cooling which vary a great deal in cost. The least expensive method is to cool with cold well water if that is obtainable, and the more expensive but most efficient method is with refrigeration units.

The dimensions of the auditorium accommodating 600 seats on one floor are 60 x 65 feet. Add to these 6 feet for cross-aisle or foyer, 12 feet for stage, and 15 feet for lobby. A lot 60 x 100 feet thus will be large enough.

The seating arrangement will be as follows: A center bank of thirteen seats across, with an aisle on each side, and two wall banks of six seats each. The spacing of the chairs is figured at 2 feet, 6 inches back to back.

It is impossible for this department to submit plans or sketches, but it will be glad to criticize your architect's plans as to the suitability of the provisions to theatre requirements.

The Question:

I AM PLANNING a theatre to be built out of a store room. Formerly has been a garage. It is 49 feet wide inside and has four iron posts in the center of the building to support the roof. Has a full basement which is plenty deep.

Now I want a center entrance with store room on each side to rent out. Want a foyer with center aisle, and aisle against each wall, or the best way the aisles could be arranged. Want rest rooms for men and women at the foyer.

What is the correct drop for a floor?

Klieg LIGHTS

and wiring devices

THE new Klieglights with their exceptionally high efficiency and extraordinary beam and intensity controls—permitting all kinds of trick lighting at no extra cost—are but one of the many new types of lighting units that can be furnished for motion picture and still photography. We also offer several improved designs in floodlights, spotlights, overhead lights, side lights, etc., for different purposes and perfected to best meet your needs. In addition, various forms of wiring devices—portable plugging boxes, pin-plug connectors, floor pockets, wall pockets, etc.—and special apparatus made to order.

NEW BULLETIN No. 106—now ready for distribution—describes and pictures these various studio lighting units. You will find it helpful. Write for a copy.

Want from 650 to 700 seats, and the screen as close as possible. Can this be done on a 90-foot throw?

What is the cost of a blue print for a theatre? Please answer at once. Also what is the best way to support the roof and take out the center post, as they will have to be out. This is a one-story building and has a 3-foot fire wall above the roof. The wall is made out of rock and is 24 inches thick. It was made to put another story on top. Would like to have it look good at the very least possible price. Nothing expensive to be put in it. —M. D. U.

The Answer:

FOR THE REMOVAL of the iron posts in the center of your building, it may be necessary to reconstruct the entire roof. However, should these columns carry an I-beam running the length of the building and supporting the roof joists, they can be removed by installing I-beams running crosswise to take the loads off the columns. For an auditorium 49 feet wide, the best seating arrangement is to plan for a center section of thirteen seats across, with an aisle on each side, and two wall sections of six seats each across. This plan requires only two aisles, while your plan calls for three aisles, consequently you will lose quite a few seats, and a center aisle is not advisable.

You will be able to plan for a store room on each side of the lobby, and you can plan for men's and women's rest rooms behind each store, these rooms to open from the foyer.

A method for determining the slope of the auditorium floor is to divide the length of the floor from stage to foyer wall in 15-foot sections, the section near the stage to have a 3-foot slope, the next section 9 inches, the next one 12 inches, and so on, increasing the slope of each section 3 inches. A 90-foot throw from projection room to screen is all right.

One does not buy blue prints. They are made from the architect's plans. I advise you to engage the services of a competent theatre architect.

his constant supervision to the equipment it contains. This arrangement also makes a minimum amount of wiring necessary in the first installation.

In addition to the dimensions suggested above, minimum toilet and lavatory facilities for the projectionists usually require an area about 3 feet by 4 feet 6 inches. This feature is conveniently arranged in a small alcove from which the operator is in constant view of his machines. Where space is not available for this extra nook, the toilet is placed directly in the 10 x 20-foot projection room area. Drinking water service is sometimes extended to the projection room from the downstairs service.

EXHAUST

If the projection room has a ceiling that is too low, and a proper exhaust system is not in use, the result is apt to be an overheated and poorly ventilated room. The ceiling should be at least 9 feet in height, and should have a metal exhaust duct either above or below the ceiling, and entirely across the room, with stove pipe openings over each machine for direct connection to carry off fumes from the projectors. In addition, three or four 12 x 12-inch damper registers, connected with the same exhaust duct, should be provided in the ceiling to carry off heat and foul air. The exhausted air is pulled to a fan in the attic and forced out through a ventilator in the roof. This exhaust fan, generally with a capacity of about 1,200 cubic feet per minute, is run by a 1-3-h.p. motor, controlled from the projection room.

Incidentally, in most localities it is permissible to connect toilet exhausts from other parts of the theatre with this same system, so that such a fan proves a double benefit. The cost of fan and maintenance is nominal compared with the results realized.

VENTILATION

If there is no other means of inlet for fresh air to the room, ordinances generally require four 12 x 4-inch registers near the floor for circulation of air. In theatres having air conditioning, it is wise to supply cooled air to the booth, but contrary to the general custom of introducing conditioned air at the ceiling of the auditorium, the air is brought into the projection room near the floor line, so that the cold air will not force the heat and fumes down upon the projectionists, as would be the case if it were brought in at the upper part of the room. Cold air falling upon projector lenses has also been known to cause considerable damage.

Formerly the projection room was little more than a baking oven, and heating was not regarded as an item of great importance, but with the modern concern for the projectionist's efficiency and comfort, and with the delicate mechanisms now in use, a regulated and even temperature at all hours, day and night, is requisite in this portion of the theatre. It is therefore necessary to install radiation or other controlled methods of heating in the up-to-date projection room to prevent trouble caused by sudden changes in temperature that may congeal the oil in the machinery.

Since the success of the motion picture depends primarily upon the quality of projection and sound reproduction, and since the excellence of the projectionist's art is dependent upon the proper construction and arrangement of the room in which his work is conducted, as well as the equipment, the exhibitor will do well to consider this item in planning his modernization.

in the opinion of many. Talk to most any theatre manager and he will very quickly begin to tell of the dozens of towns and cities in which he has, always successfully, managed theatres; he will also tell you for how many "big time" operators he has worked, and so on until one becomes weary. Finally, it will be determined that he has a wife and a couple of children, maybe a few rooms of furniture, and a car and a radio, and or that most of his married life he has lived in furnished apartments. This may be self-fulfillment to a small percentage, but it is not that to the great majority.

Excepting the small number of men who either are artistically or idealistically inclined, and who find a high degree of satisfaction in their own self-sufficiency and ample reward in a job well done, the rest of the theatre men need a money incentive to provide their own self-fulfillment. The job forms part of that self-fulfillment when it provides the wherewithal to supply the rest. No rule of thumb can be applied but providing proper rewards does offer a general solution.

The money incentive must be earned. The only way that it can be earned is by definitely figuring it in as a tentative and expected expense. If an operator can't make expenses he can't pay extra inducements. So, to start with, each theatre must have determined for it, first, the actual investment involved including notes, interest, etc.; second, actual depreciation; third, amortization; fourth, taxes, insurance licenses, etc.; fifth, rent; and sixth, operating expenses.

EARNED MONEY INCENTIVE: A PLAN

From the above data the owner can quickly see what must be grossed at the box office in order to break even. Assume, for example, that from a theatre's gross, deductions are made for all of the above items: the balance indicates profit. From this profit the owner is certainly entitled to 6% on his investment. After the deduction of this 6%, what remains might be called a net profit. Certainly the theatre staff is entitled to a portion of this net profit as its earned money incentive. The exact percentage of the net profit earned by the theatre staff should be established by the owner, with due consideration being given to fairness. That portion due the employees should be accumulated and paid to them quarterly. Such accumulation of funds should be set up on the books as the Earned Money Incentive Reserve.

Immediately the problem presents itself: Who is entitled to share in the earned money incentive reserve fund, and in what degree? The answer to the first is, all employees in the theatre. Yes, this includes union help as well as non-union help. Each job in the theatre must be arranged and given a value in accordance with its im-

Among Contributors to This Issue:

¶ O. T. TAYLOR (INEXPENSIVE HOLIDAY STAGE SHOWS), whose contribution to this issue is the second in an extended series on the use of the stage for the augmentation of the screen program, entered the theatre field in 1918 as lobby display artist and exploitation man for the Weir theatre in Aberdeen, Wash. He later became assistant to Mr. Edward Dolan, then general manager of D & R Theatres in Aberdeen. For a time he also conducted a department on stage presentations in Moving Picture World, now a part of Motion Picture Herald. In 1928 he designed and supervised the construction of the Seventh Street theatre in Hoquiam, Wash. Following the acquisition by Fox of the D & R circuit, Mr. Taylor went to Hollywood and for a time was associated with scenic department of the Fox studio. When the theatres reverted to their original owners, he returned to the employ of D & R, with which circuit he is still connected.

¶ J. T. KNIGHT, JR. (AN ECONOMIC BASIS FOR WAGE SCALES) is one of the nation's leading building maintenance engineers, and one of the few who have specialized in theatre properties. He is, and for many years has been, in charge of physical operations for Paramount Publix, and prior to the formation of that circuit, held a similar position with Balaban & Katz in Chicago. Mr. Knight contributes a feature article to each issue of BETTER THEATRES, in addition to conducting Maintenance Tabs.

¶ ROBERT O. BOLLER (MODERNIZING THE PROJECTION ROOM) has long been a prominent theatre architect. He maintains offices in Kansas City, Mo.

¶ LEO T. PARKER (NEW DECISIONS IN THEATRE REGULATION) is a regular contributor to BETTER THEATRES on legal phases of theatre operation. He is an attorney-at-law with offices in Cincinnati.

¶ EUGENE CLUTE (NEW SCHEMES IN MODERN REMODELING), who concludes in this issue a series begun in the September 22nd issue, was formerly editor of the Architectural Review and Pencil Points, and is also the author of several books on Architecture. He is a frequent contributor to the leading architectural publications. His home is in Brooklyn, N. Y.

portance, then this value must be added or subtracted to adjust, first, for the current base rates of pay (this especially to compensate for the rate of pay of union help being out of proportion to the rate of pay of the non-union worker); second, for a number of days on the job (this takes care of prolonged sickness, relief of union help, days off, vacations, etc.); and third, length of service. When the credits for each employee have been calculated, then the entire credits of all employees in the theatre would be totalled, and the total earned money incentive fund of the particular quarter be divided by the total credits. The quotient would be the unit credit value; this value multiplied by the credits of the individual would represent the amount that the individual would be entitled to.

Some such forward-looking steps as these are going to be more or less universally adopted by exhibitors if they ever expect to meet the problem presented by the right of labor to bargain collectively.

With the right method of paying workers for their labor, and the careful, intelligent and considerate handling of personnel, as outlined in previous articles on the subject in BETTER THEATRES, the exhibitor will have removed many annoyances and obstacles that he most probably finds encumbering his path toward greater profits from his theatres.

close off the platform from the main stage for entrances or tableaux, or to conceal the central part of the setting during numbers other than those with which it is to be used.

THE MOON BOX

For utility, effect and simplicity of operation, the moon box is one of the most desirable of stage effects. It is so inexpensive and easy to make that no stage should be without one. Make a box of boards 6 x ½ inches, about 2 feet square (Figure 7). Cover the back with heavy chipboard or wallboard. Wire in lamp sockets as shown. Cover the front with a piece of wallboard in which a circular opening has been cut. The dotted line indicates how a round piece of wallboard can be fitted into the opening to form a crescent moon. The rigging is self-explanatory—two single blocks, a length of sash cord, and if possible, a winch. The latter is not absolutely necessary, but makes smooth operation possible. Operation by hand is more or less jerky. For a stationary moon the rigging can be dispensed with and the moon box suspended on a line.

The sky drop used for the moon effect must be of a translucent type. An ordinary painted drop, being practically opaque, can obviously not be used. A blue dye-drop, if not of too heavy material, or a drop made of medium blue, light-weight fabric, are both satisfactory. If at all possible, avoid seams across the face of the moon. The moon box hangs behind sky drop.

CHRISTMAS GREETING

The greeting appearing on the sky in Figure 6 is applicable to all of the preceding ideas. If used with the old-fashioned idea the letters could be in the style of Old English—if for the modern idea, extreme modernism could be carried out in the style of letters. Mechanically the effect is very simple. Build a box similar to the moon box, but of considerably larger proportions (Figure 8). Cover the back with chipboard. Cover the front with translucent white paper and "cut in" the letters with flat black paint or watercolor, leaving the letters white. The letters, only, are therefore visible from in front of the stage. This, also, hangs on the back side of the sky drop.

Falling snow is in keeping with the idea. A long narrow frame box with a bottom of hardware cloth (coarse screen) can be slung from the grid on a set of lines. Partly filled with finely cut white paper (such as white confetti) an endwise or sidewise motion sifts a steady fall of "snow flakes" through the screen. On a blue or fairly dim stage a pleasing "falling snow" effect may be produced by means of moving effect slides.

Right here it may be in order to suggest that a small sum be set aside from each successful stage entertainment to provide for ultimate improvements and additions to the stage equipment. If stage entertainments are instrumental in boosting receipts, why not put some back?

Improvements pay dividends—neglect is costly. No business can stand still—it must forge ahead or it will slip behind. Add a new spot or floodlight if you need it. Unusual lighting effects can be created with baby spots. Dimmers are indispensable for certain effects.

This need not imply that a stage show can not be staged without a lot of equipment. It can. But the right equipment makes it possible to create a wide variety of beautiful and novel effects, to offer, constantly, something new, interesting and different. Stage lighting equipment has other uses as well. It need not lie dormant. Have you ever thought of using the smaller spots and floods with color mediums on lobby and foyer displays? Give it a thought!

been very strong. Classic Modern is a present-day version of these styles of a century and more ago.

What would a Classic Modern theatre interior look like? Here is an example: Auditorium walls, plain except for a dado and pilasters, which are flat piers of plaster extending from floor to ceiling, projecting a few inches beyond the wall surface and dividing it into large sections. These pilasters would be fluted. That is, they would have a number of wide, shallow concave surfaces in the face, running from the top to bottom. They would have neither ornamental cap nor base, but would stop against the wall base and under a plain band, below a frieze at the top of the wall. The wall surfaces might be painted in a soft light, cool gray, while the pilasters, the frieze and other trim might be done in a very light pearl gray tint known as oyster white. The frieze should have a design of Greek character such as the palmette or acanthus motif, repeated in a running band stenciled in medium dark gray on an oyster-white ground. Any gaps in the design left by ties in the stencil plate should be filled in.

In a general lounge the walls might be decorated (to give a novel example) with the famous old French "Cupid and Psyche" wall paper. The design of this wall paper is in large panels, each formed of several strips making a complete picture. There are several of these in different themes, each exquisitely done. All are in varied tones of soft gray. This design was made more than a hundred years ago and is still produced in Europe as it was then, by hand block painting. That it is a masterpiece of design is attested by the fact that "Cupid and Psyche" wall paper is to be seen at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. In a theatre lounge, these beautiful gray wall paper panels might well be set in black glass on the walls with suitable modern mouldings in aluminum leaf finish and vermilion to frame them. Then the furniture might be of metal in chromium finish, and upholstered in a light vermilion imitation leather in plain fine grain effect. The carpet should have an all-over pattern in gray with touches of vermilion and black.

Gentlemen:

We have had your MotioGraph Projectors in this theatre now in constant use, from 2 P.M. till midnight, for over one year, and our operators advise having the intermittent sprockets replaced and also the movements repaired or adjusted, so will you please advise us if you can loan us a replacement for the two projectors till we can send you ours for sprocket replacement and adjustment.

We had rather have you do this than to do it ourselves, therefore we will need two complete movements for loan while you repair ours. We would like to know how long this job would take to do, and about what the charges would be on the adjustment and the two sprockets. Outside of this we would not need to do anything else to run us another year.

MCM/v

Yours very truly,
(Signed) M. C. MOORE.

as the equipment is giving perfect service, and we are tickled to death with the projectors and the sound also. We have spent only a few dollars on this equipment, sound and projectors, in over a year, and have never had a breakdown or one minute's trouble with same.

I remember very plainly that before we bought MotioGraph equipment we were told by manufacturers that we would have nothing but trouble with anything except their equipment, but we bought MotioGraph anyway in spite of their predictions, and we are glad we did, for we could not have had better service out of anything else no matter what make it was. In other words, your equipment is as near perfect as anything could be.

You have my permission to pass this along to any other exhibitors that you wish, as it is written without your request, and we are glad to be of any help we can to you in selling MotioGraph projectors and sound, as we think it is great. Kindest personal regards to the staff.

THE PICTURE OF THE MONTH

Never has a story brought back so gloriously the good old days when flaming youth went to town on a bicycle-built-for-two—or more. That's Papa in the rumble-seat...but where's his shot-gun?

We'd like to take up the merrie olde custom of slipper-drinking ourselves—just to toast that grand trio of fun-makers—Hugh Herbert, Ned Sparks, Joe Cawthorn—and all the delicious dancing girls who are too numerous to name—but too sweet not to mention.

Ever whistle "Why Was I Born?", "Here Am I", and "Don't Ever Leave Me"? Well, this is the show that made them famous! Now you'll hear these and other great Jerome Kern hits sung and danced as never before—all because Warner Bros. finally lured dance-director Bobby Connolly of "Ziegfeld Follies" fame to Hollywood.

And while the orchids last, let's toss a load of them to irresistible Irene Dunne, and Donald Woods and Louis Calhern for their brilliant telling of a great love story; to Mervyn Le Roy for his superb direction; to Phil Regan for his delightful tenor; and to Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein II for authoring December's grandest show!

Meddling with Pictures for Profit

TOO many publishers are trying to tend to the motion picture business. Most immediately adverse and damning is the increasing effort of sundry lay publications to set themselves up before the box-office public as authorities on entertainment values.

Parents Magazine has for more than a year been tack-hammering at plans to build circulation by movie movements and a "service" which pre-judges pictures for children in behalf of parents.

Liberty Magazine, most Macfaddenish, presents a rating system intended to make up the reader's mind for him—if any.

The Daily News, of New York, by reason of metropolitan position and encouragement by ill-advised quotation by motion picture advertisers, broadcasts another evaluation system, grading pictures by "star" points.

Now comes Literary Digest, incident to the throes of a campaign of rehabilitation to meet the competition of Time, and other livelier news-magazines, with the announcement of a rating system.

The Digest is circularizing the exhibitors of the land, with the apparent, but possibly erroneous, presumption that the showmen of this industry will be delighted with the attention to them and their merchandise.

As most showmen know, and as reflected in MOTION PICTURE HERALD's mail on the subject, the box office is not benefited by the national promulgation of the notions of the reviewers of the press.

The creation of, or attempt at the creation of, a big mass opinion on the merits of the undelivered product offers to the exhibitor-merchandise of amusement just one more hurdle and problem.

No critic, lay or professional, can sit in New York or Hollywood and decide for the box-office millions of the United States what they want, what they like, or more than guess at what they will do about any given screen product. It is in recognition of the conditions affecting box-office values that MOTION PICTURE HERALD's policy of presenting reviews which are a report of content—that the exhibitor may make up his own mind about its probable usefulness and best exploitation on his screen—has been evolved and proved a success.

The technique and policy of MOTION PICTURE HERALD has been some twenty-five years a-growing. Further, the HERALD's reports and evaluations are held entirely within the industry for the service of showmen. But with no experience whatever, magazine publishers are ready to make a national boast of their invasion of the industry, without warrant of either invitation or proper opportunity.

Just incidentally to the Literary Digest's undertaking, the magazine's prideful publicity copy announces that while its motion picture ratings and reviews appear under the pen name of "Argus", the said "Argus" is indeed none other than Mr. Richard Watts, Jr. Mr. Watts is, if we recall the name aright, the same ardent young writer for the New York Herald Tribune and The New Theatre, whose discovery of "frank and vicious anti-radical propaganda" on the screen was given attention in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week, in an article on the unwitting support that certain New York papers were giving Soviet propaganda through their motion picture columns.

The Literary Digest makes its bow to the exhibitors of the land and the motion picture industry, to introduce as its spokesman the Mr. Watts who has just said in The New Theatre that the Soviet's "Three Songs About Lenin"—a Moscow cutting room quickie—is: "... Unquestionably ... an earnest and often eloquent picture, replete with all that crusading zeal that makes the Hollywood films seem pallid studio exercises. ..."

So one can but deduce that the Literary Digest will now engage in making itself a motion picture power in the land by the exploitation of Hollywood's "pallid studio exercises", by the man who calls them that.

Does the motion picture industry have to stand for such invasions of its institutional rights and status?

Consider for a moment the guarded manner in which motor car editors of the daily press discuss the merits—never the demerits—of the offerings of manufacturers.

Look over the columns on styles and see if you can find an item by a fashion review which pretends to give the modistes and garment makers a star rating system.

Regard the food and household pages and find out if the newspapers venture to give three and a half stars to Armour bacon, or three stars to Swift.

Good Housekeeping Institute of Good Housekeeping Magazine, for instance, hands out posies of approval—nothing else.

Neither the motion picture industry nor any other can take proper exception to journalistic attention in its proper sphere of reporting and comment. The motion picture benefits extensively from the attentions of the press, and should be at greater pains than are taken to serve and gain the cooperation of the press. But that does not carry with it any agreement that it is considered proper for any part of the press to print its way into functions concerning a business in which it has no part. There is a vast difference between writing about a business and horning into it.

And if you want to observe zero in publicity on reviewing systems—see if you can find a piece in the papers about the work of Consumers Research Bureau, which gives consumer goods laboratory tests and reports to its clients.

Or try to get at the findings of the Bureau of Standards of the United States as to the relative merits of goods tested.

But the motion picture gets it—and is supposed to like it.

We believe that movies are merchandise—and have merchandise rights.

CLEAN ADVERTISING

The film industry's Advertising Advisory Council, an arm of the MPPDA headed by J. J. McCarthy, is credited in an article, "Movie Advertising is Clean," in the current Printers' Ink, with accomplishing the first successful, large-scale regulation from within any industry. The film's effort is recommended in the article to "other industries contemplating such a move." The code advertising ethics provision, with its potential enforcement instrument, is credited in part. . . .

RETURN TO PRAGUE

With the import quota in Czechoslovakia removed and an import tax of approximately $840 per film substituted, American companies are expected to return to the country, headquartered in Prague, about December 15, according to reports by cable from Berlin. . . .

TAX UNCONSTITUTIONAL

The federal district court at Fargo, N. D., last week declared the state's gross earnings tax to be unconstitutional, in a case brought by the Fruit Growers' Express Company, a Delaware corporation. The statute in question imposed a levy of 6 per cent on gross earnings of concerns owned outside, but operated within the state. . . .

FILMED TRAFFIC

Using a captive balloon, Parisian police last week flew high over Paris, with a motion picture cameraman as important passenger. Films taken of the flow of traffic in the French capital were to be used to enable the police department to develop a new method of expediting the movement of the city's traffic. . . .

THEATRE PROFIT

At the conclusion of one year of operation by Loew's of the Poli circuit of theatres in New England, with headquarters in New Haven, practically all of the houses involved are reporting a profit under the new management. . . .

WANTED: FILM HOUSE

One W. L. Gould, writing to MOTION PICTURE HERALD from Clintonville, Wis., (population, 5,000) suggests his town as a likely place for the construction of a motion picture theatre seating about 750. He describes the town as an A-No. 1 farming community, with no large town within 40 miles, and, he writes: "We need a house here." . . .

STARS AS SAMPLES

To demonstrate the effectiveness of a newly perfected process used to transmit maps and charts to ships at sea via radio, the Radio Marine Corporation is using drawings of various RKO Radio stars. The process is part of a New York exhibit. . . .

PREVIEWS PROTESTED

The Independent Exhibitors of Northern California, at San Francisco, charging that most previews by larger theatres are a "good racket," have appealed their case to the local grievance board. The independents contend the previewing of pictures before large audiences takes them out of the first-run classification. . . .

MPTO DEDICATION

Pennsylvania Congressman-elect Elmer Dietrich, a prominent exhibitor, has been invited as guest of honor at the dedication and dedication luncheon this week at the Adelphia hotel, Philadelphia, of the new Vine street home of the local MPTO, of which Charles Segall is president and George P. Aarons is secretary and general counsel. . . .

SENTENCED FOR FRAUD

Trailed for six years by federal operatives, and arrested finally last spring on the Riviera, Dr. Orlando E. Miller, alleged promoter of the Rellimeo Film Syndicate, was found guilty last week in federal court, San Francisco, of using the mails to defraud investors, and sentenced by federal judge Harold Lauderback to six years in the penitentiary. . . .

AIR ANNIVERSARY

The New York Capitol theatre radio program, called the oldest on the air, now conducted by Major Edward Bowes with his "Family," this Sunday morning will celebrate its 12th anniversary on the air. "Roxy and his Gang" began the series in 1922, Major Bowes succeeding him, and continuing since. . . .

LENGTHY PROGRAM

A new policy, inaugurated this week at the Seattle Paramount by manager Harry Woodin, includes, on a weekly change, two first-run features, a 45-minute stage show, and a continuation of the musical offerings of an orchestra of 20 pieces. A three and one-half hour show, and prices are set at 25 and 35 cents. The policy is an answer to new competition offered by last week's opening of John Hamrick's Orpheum. . . .

CLEVER COBB

The smart versatility of Irvin S. Cobb, veteran humorous writer and one time newspaper man, may lead to a long term writing contract with MGM. An original he is preparing primarily for Will Rogers has been so constructed that in the event Rogers does not want it, Lionel Barrymore may be assigned to it. Should Cobb gain a writer contract with MGM, his existing deal with Hal Roach as an actor-writer would automatically be canceled. . . .

21 CENTS OF THE BOX-OFFICE DOLLAR IS EXPENDED ON THEATRE'S PAYROLL

Twenty-one cents of each dollar spent at the motion picture theatre box-office by the public is the average spent by exhibitors on their payrolls.

Seventy-eight cents out of every dollar spent for amusement is expended for motion picture entertainment.

Some 12,500 motion picture theatres—generally accepted as the total operating in this country—grossed $496,240,000, and spent $102,000,000 in wages in 1933.

Motion picture theatre averages for 1933: Yearly gross per theatre, $39,998; weekly gross, $769; yearly payroll per theatre, $8,235; weekly payroll, $158.

Some $114,000,000 were the total receipts taken in by all other amusements—the stage, race tracks, bowling and billiards, beach-rides, dance halls and the like.

New York State's motion picture theatres grossed $94,000,000, Nevada's, $474,000.

New York film houses paid out $20,780,000 in wages, New Mexico's, $72,000.

These were the outstanding conclusions of the first door-to-door canvass of amusements ever made by the United States Bureau of the Census, which, in its final report to the Administration late last week, officially established the extent of the supremacy of the motion picture as America's most widely patronized medium of mass entertainment.

Legitimate Stage Receipts 2 Per Cent Of Total Intake of All Amusements

Actually contacting 10,240 motion picture theatres in operation in the first wholesale accumulation of actual box-office earnings in their relation to salaries and wages paid in exhibition, the federal census, covering all so-called "service" industries, set out to establish grosses and payrolls for the first full calendar year following the beginning of the new Administration, as a basis for future comparison to show business improvement.

The Census investigation touched upon some 30,000 individual places of amusement, which reported total earnings of $519,497,000 last year.

The 10,240 motion picture theatres reporting had a total gross of $405,844,000. On the basis of an average yearly gross of $39,998 per theatre, some 2,260 houses not reporting, out of a possible 12,500 in the motion picture industry, had an approximate gross of $90,395,480—which would swell the total film box-office receipts in 1933 to $496,239,480.

The earning structure of the entire amusement business in its relation to the Census Bureau's investigation of 30,000 places for the year 1933 stood as follows last January 1st:

AMUSEMENT BRANCH	NO. OF PLACES	GROSS	PERCENTAGE
Motion Pictures.....	10,240 (a)	$405,844,000	78%
Legitimate Stage....	122	8,611,000	2
All Others (b).....	19,371	105,042,000	20
TOTALS	29,733	$519,497,000	100%

(a) Includes straight film and combination film and vaudeville theatres.

(b) Includes bowling, billiards, dance halls, amusement-park rides, race tracks, swimming pools and the like. Also included in this group were 347 radio stations reporting a gross business of $55,140,000 for 1933. Their inclusion needs an explanation, because, obviously, the public does not pay directly, but rather it is the advertiser. However, no such explanation was forthcoming from the Census Bureau.

Grosses of $49,451,000 were reported by 642 combination film-and-vaudeville and film-and-presentation theatres—embracing the "cream" of the downtown "de luxe" first-run houses having a mixed policy. While these represented but six per cent of all of the 10,240 motion picture theatres reporting, they grossed 12 per cent of the total receipts.

The country's 10,240 motion pictures investigated by the Census Bureau had a combined payroll for 1933 approximating $83,611,800. Using the average film theatre's payroll of $8,235 for the year, would add another $18,407,100 to the exhibition payroll for the 2,260 theatres not covered in the checkup, or a combined bill of $102,018,900 for all theatres for 1933.

The census covered 9,598 theatres showing motion pictures exclusively. They grossed $356,393,000.

All theatres—motion picture, film-and-presentation, legitimate and burlesque, grossed $414,455,000, or 80 per cent of all receipts taken in by the combined amusement industry, of which, as previously stated, motion pictures grossed 78 per cent.

The average gross for the 642 film-and-vaudeville and film-and-presentation houses was $77,027 per theatre for the year, and $1,482 per theatre per week. The average gross for the 9,598 straight film theatres was $37,131 per theatre for the year, and $714 per theatre per week.

The first door-to-door survey of the amusement industry—in work for months—was finally completed last Friday. The Census Bureau admitted that the count of theatres and box-office receipts is not 100 per cent complete, but the government considers it is so nearly correct as to serve as a good basis of comparison with the returns from any future census, and to furnish the means for arriving at a fairly accurate estimate of all such properties and the receipts derived therefrom, together with payrolls, in 1933.

Made with funds allocated for the purpose by the Public Works Administration, the canvass was made by persons on relief rolls and under the supervision of relief officials.

Principally overlooked in recording motion picture theatre receipts and payrolls were those theatres in highly inaccessible places, and those running but one or two nights a week. However, the only state for which the officials at Washington made public apology was Pennsylvania.

The Census Bureau has furnished the motion picture industry with reports of totals on the 48 states and District of Columbia and on 165 of the largest cities, detailing the number of film houses contacted, the total receipts and total payrolls. For the purpose of practicable analysis of these totals in the more workable terms of average grosses and their relation to payrolls, MOTION PICTURE HERALD effected a breakdown showing the receipts and payrolls for the average theatre for the year and per week, and the percentage of the gross that is spent on payrolls. The breakdown appears on the pages following, showing at a glance the possible average earning power of motion picture theatres in the various states and cities.

New York was the busiest amusement state, with a total theatre box-office of $93,907,000, grossed by 879 theatres. California's 629 theatres grossed $35,223,000. Illinois, with 551 theatres reporting, got the next largest share, some $33,106,000, followed by Pennsylvania's $30,891,000 gross at 745 theatres. Fifth, sixth, and seventh in the order of receipts were: Massachusetts, 290 theatres, gross $22,809,000; Ohio, 555 theatres, $20,730,000; New Jersey, 238 theatres, $19,179,000.

THEATRES' GROSS NEAR HALF BILLION

The 3,887 theatres in these seven states represent but 38 per cent of all theatres, yet they grossed 63 per cent of the total income.

New Mexico, with 30 theatres and a gross of $497,000, and Nevada, 19 theatres, grossing $474,000, were the only two states reporting less than $500,000 income for all houses for the year. Four states grossed between $500,000 and $1,000,000, 12 states grossed between $1,000,000 and $2,500,000; 14, between $2,500,000 and $5,000,000; seven between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000, and three between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000.

The ten which averaged the highest gross per theatre were:

STATE	NO. OF THEATRES	AVERAGE GROSS PER THEATRE FOR 1933	AVERAGE GROSS PER THEATRE PER WEEK
District of Columbia...	24	$199,667	$3,840
New York.....	879	106,834	2,055

Connecticut.....	141	54,411	1,046
Maryland.....	148	43,939	845
Pennsylvania.....	745	41,464	797

Largest theatre payrolls were: New York, $20,780,000; Illinois, $7,123,000; California, $6,771,000; Pennsylvania, $5,872,000; Massachusetts, $5,263,000; Ohio, $4,440,000; Michigan, $3,072,000; New Jersey, $3,797,000; Missouri, $2,550,000, and Texas, $2,303,000.

Seven states had payrolls of more than $1,000,000 for 1933, 13 states had payrolls above $500,000. Smallest payrolls: New Mexico, $72,000; Nevada, $82,000; Vermont, $85,000.

Of more importance, however, was the relation of the gross receipts to payrolls. Although the average theatre for the country spends 21 cents of each dollar taken in at the box-office on payrolls, the average runs as high as 25 cents in Colorado and Missouri, to 14 and 15 cents in Montana and New Mexico, respectively. Sixteen states reported that the average theatre spends 20 cents or more on payrolls out of every dollar collected at the box office, as follows:

STATE	GROSS RECEIPTS	TOTAL PAYROLLS	PERCENTAGE OF GROSS SPENT ON PAYROLLS
Colorado.....	$ 2,599,000	$ 640,000	25%
Missouri.....	10,256,000	2,550,000	25

States in which motion picture theatre owners paid 16 cents or less for payrolls out of each dollar grossed are seven, as follows: Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, North Dakota and Vermont, each 16 per cent; New Mexico, 15 per cent, and Montana, 14 per cent.

New York City, with slightly more than four per cent of all theatres, accounted for about 16 per cent of all receipts, while the nation's seven largest cities from the point of population—New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, St. Louis and Los Angeles—reported 10 per cent of all theatres listed in the census, yet grossed 28 per cent of the total income. The principal city money-makers in 1933, in addition to those mentioned, were Boston, Baltimore and San Francisco, all reporting as follows:

CITY	NUMBER OF THEATRES	GROSS RECEIPTS
New York.....	425	$70,360,000
Chicago.....	225	23,252,000
Philadelphia.....	143	10,578,000

Minneapolis.....	53	3,058,000

Gross earnings of average theatres in no less than 16 cities exceeded $100,000 for 1933, running more than $1,900 weekly. Six of these cities are in New Jersey, in the northern section where virtually all towns have a large drawing population from hundreds of small towns and villages nearby. The city of Passaic in New Jersey led all others throughout the country from the point of highest average theatre grosses, reporting $191,000 as the average per theatre income for the year. New York, Boston, San Francisco and Chicago were the only four large cities where per theatre income for 1933 exceeded $100,000. The 11 other cities of this class are second-class cities, and some are even below that rating. Standing of the 16 cities in which theatres averaged above $100,000 in 1933 is as follows:

CITY	NO. OF THEATRES	AVERAGE GROSS PER THEATRE FOR 1933	AVERAGE GROSS PER THEATRE PER WEEK

WAY STATION. Waiting for a train (believe it or not) is Jeannette MacDonald, as she pauses in Pasadena en route from New York to Los Angeles, returning, after a vacation, to Hollywood to begin MGM's "Naughty Marietta."

GIRLS AND GIRLS. And a mere man, Paul De Ricou, newcomer to the Warner lot and recently of France, where, they say, he is a tennis star. He and the girls—yes, and many more like them—appear in "Sweet Adeline."

IN NEW SERIES. Sylvia Froos, whom Educational has signed for another Song Hit Story series of short subjects.

BALLET MISTRESS. (Right) Mme. Bronislava Nijinska arriving in New York from Europe, come to supervise dances in Warners' "Midsummer Night's Dream."

ADVANCES. Phyllis Brooks, Universal's latest contract player, who has been given an important role in "I've Been Around," which stars Chester Morris. She was formerly an artist's model.

WHAT IT TAKES. To make a motion picture. None of those studio workers pictured above will be seen in Fox's "Dante's Inferno," but their talents will. They are:

Max H. Golden, business manager; Rudolph Mate, cinematographer; Willy Pogany, artist; Irene Beshon, hairdresser; Anthony Karnagel, makeup artist; Albert DeGaetano, film editor; Rolla Flora, technical expert; Robert M. Yost, writer; Louis J. Witte, pyrotechnics; Ralph Hammeras, special effects; Walter Jolley, artist; Phillip Klein, writer; E. Hansen, sound engineer; Fred Sersen, artist; Royer, costume designer; David Hall, artist; Lewis H. Creber, assistant art director; Walter Quinlan, electrical engineer; Harry Lachman, director; Stowitts, choreography; Lance Baxter, research; James Ryan, casting director; Joseph Stofel, construction; Sidney Bowen, assistant director; Sam Wurtzel, unit manager.

GUESTS OF THEATRE. When MGM's short, "Pro-Football," opened at the Capitol in New York, the Chicago Bears, featured therein, were guests of Major Edward Bowes, who is shown greeting "Red" Grange, Bear star.

BRITAIN BOUND. Fay Wray arriving in New York following completion of "White Lies" and "Mills of the Gods" for Columbia, on her way to the British Gaumont studios.

LOEW'S $7,479,897 NET PROFITS ALMOST DOUBLE PREVIOUS YEAR'S

Equivalent to $4.50 a Share on Common, Contrasted with $2.15 in 1933; Earned Surplus Gains $3,966,740

Net profits of $7,479,897 are reported by Loew's, Inc., and its subsidiaries for the fiscal year ended Aug. 31, 1934. This figure, after interest, depreciation and federal taxes, was nearly double the amount for the previous fiscal year when a net of $4,034,289 was shown.

The 1934 net was equivalent, after preferred dividends, to $4.50 a share on the 1,464,205 shares of common stock, while the 1933 net was equal to $2.15 a share on the common, after preferred dividends.

This year's figure, an increase of $3,445,608, brings the net almost back to the 1932 level of $7,961,314 and is more than half of the five-year record of $14,600,332, set in 1930.

Earned surplus for the year ended August 31 is given as $37,667,062, a gain of $3,966,740 over 1933.

Current assets on August 31 were $42,282,192, including cash and United States Government securities of $12,527,649 and inventories of $26,713,801. Current liabilities were $6,975,800.

Current assets on Aug. 31, 1933, were $36,420,962 and current liabilities were $5,923,981.

"Merger of the Classroom and Studio Has At Last Become a Fact": Zukor

Incorporation of stills from important motion pictures depicting the classics of literature and history in school textbooks, as a visualization aid to education, will become effective January 1, following the trend toward a practicable union of schoolroom and studio.

To the industry and to educators this new step appears of the utmost significance, and was described this week by Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, as "the first material link between classroom and film theatres."

Mr. Zukor, addressing his remarks to the Associated Press in New York, for world-wide transmission, declared: "From the time they were commonly referred to as a peep-show, motion pictures were ordained to become more than just the main medium of divertissement. For years I have been satisfied that many pictures exercise a tremendous educational value. But how to harness that value directly to American pedagogy, and furnish it with the power of inculcative interpretation, remained a problem, the solution of which neither the school nor the picture industry could hasten."

"However," Mr. Zukor said, "I am certain now that a merger, literal in many respects, of classroom and production studio has at last become a fact. Some of the largest publishers of public school textbooks are introducing in January to English classrooms throughout the entire United States new grammar books in which scenes from motion pictures are used as illustrations to inspire thought in youthful minds. That may seem like an incident now. But by this time next year American fathers and mothers will have received its full purport from their own children."

"The motion picture still photographs, which are now being incorporated in school textbooks, are there because no medium so well symbolizes life as completely as the motion picture," Mr. Zukor declared. "These illustrations, accordingly, furnish teachers with material for class discussion. They put new life in a textbook which so quickly may become antiquated these days, since the present illustrations will be replaced from time to time with scenes from current features. In this way students will always be provided with a fresh and modern medium."

"For instance, we are prepared to replace illustrations of 'Skippy' and 'Huckleberry Finn', which are among pictures now being printed in new editions of established grammar books, with such travel and political subjects as scenes from 'Lives of a Bengal Lancer' and 'The President Vanishes.' 'The Crusades' will furnish much valuable historically interesting pictorial material. And the production schedule carries many other possibilities of great value to the educators."

R. M. Clark Dies; Was MPTOA Director

R. M. Clark, for several years general manager of Griffith Amusement Company, Oklahoma City, died unexpectedly Saturday following on appendectomy. Mr. Clark was secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Oklahoma and an MPTOA director. Burial was at Oklahoma City Monday.

Paramount Records Huey Long

Paramount News has Huey Long's latest exclamation on record. J. R. Buchanan, of the Atlanta office, trailed Long a hundred miles away from civilization to a hunting lodge before he could get Long to listen to Paramount arguments. Buchanan as the result has been able to turn into his home office a complete newsreel report of Huey's secession talk.

Weisman Files Suits Against A. T. & T., Erpi

Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres Corporation, filed suit Tuesday in U. S. district court, New York, against American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., asking triple damages totaling $700,000 under the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts. Mr. Weisman charged that Fox Theatres Corporation sustained damages through overcharges and exactions made by the defendants in supplying service and repairs to sound recording apparatus in nine theatres as a result of the defendants' alleged monopoly in supplying sound recording and reproducing equipment.

"Big U" Wins Sales Drive

ALL MAJOR CLAIMS ON PARAMOUNT SETTLED; ZUKOR CONFIDENCE VOTED

Agreement Reached on Seven Candidates for Directorate of Reorganized Company To Be Functioning Early in Year

A completely reorganized Paramount Publix Corporation to be functioning in full swing by Jan. 1, 1935, or at the latest, February 1—just two years after the company was placed in receivership—was predicted in New York this week in high official circles of the company following the disclosure of new and important developments in the situation, including:

1. Announcement that agreements in settlement of all major claims remaining against Paramount had been effected.
2. Agreement on eight candidates for the first board of directors for the reorganized company.
3. Denial by the Paramount trustees of any conflict between themselves and Adolph Zukor, Paramount president.
4. Final settlement of the status of E. V. Richards as president and general manager of the reorganized Saenger circuit.

Disclosure of the fact that agreements in settlement of all major claims remaining had been effected makes possible completion of the reorganization plan early in the new year. Submission of the plan the end of this week was considered possible. Printed drafts of a tentative reorganization plan were distributed to creditors early this week.

According to authorities, this unofficial and incomplete draft, which is said to embody the basic provisions of a reorganization plan, in form similar to those which have been published from time to time, was issued for the sole purpose of acquainting the various creditors' committees with the progress being made by Kuhn, Loeb & Co., handling the reorganization plan, toward final completion.

Erpi Claim Settled

This draft, it is said, does not embody important claim settlements approved last week, among which was the claim of Electrical Research Products, Inc., for $1,887,000, settlement of which provides for a $1,200,000 consideration to Erpi and issuance to Paramount of a new Erpi domestic recording license agreement at a reduced rate, effective December 1.

Other settlement claim agreements which cleared final large claims included a final plan of reorganization for Paramount Broadway Corporation. Settlement of the creditor bank group claim of $13,500,000 was agreed upon several weeks ago, as was that of Allied Owners' Corporation for $29,700,000. The bank settlement, it is understood, called for a cash payment of $3,700,000 plus interest in excess of $1,000,000, in addition to new securities in settlement of the $9,600,000. Allied Owners' settlement provides for issuance of $5,150,000 in new securities, $150,000 in cash, purchase of the Alabama theatre at Birmingham and the leasing of the Paramount theatres in Brooklyn, New York City, Fremont, Ohio, and Glens Falls, N. Y. Approximately $6,500,000 will be necessary for immediate corporate purposes of the reorganized company, it is estimated, in addition to about $4,000,000 in cash in the trustees' hands. Consolidated cash of going Paramount subsidiaries, approximating $13,000,000, undoubtedly will be retained for operations, capital and other commitments of those companies.

Debenture holders, together with general creditors, will receive for each $1,000, plus interest to Jan. 1 of next year, $500 of new debentures and five shares of new cumulative, convertible $6 preferred stock. Stockholders will receive for each share of old, one-fourth of a share of new stock and a 60-day right to subscribe, in consideration of a $2 assessment, for one-fourth of a share of new common and 1/50th share of new cumulative convertible $6 second preferred stock.

Other claim settlements agreed upon, which will be made a part of the reorganization plan, include the $2,750,000 of Paramount Properties bonds; $816,666 of Paramount Land Corporation notes; $570,500 first mortgage on a Jacksonville, Fla., theatre property; $471,200 first mortgage on a St. Petersburg, Fla., theatre property; $930,000 first mortgage on the Astoria studio property, and $574,100 first and refunding mortgage and $615,200 debentures of G. B. Theatres Corporation.

The reorganized company's capitalization is expected to be confined to $27,500,000 of new 20-year, 6 per cent sinking fund debentures; 275,000 shares of first preferred stock; 64,418 shares of second preferred, and 1,610,452 of common. These figures are exclusive, however, of provisions made for issuance of additional debentures to meet administration allowances made by the court, including expenses of reorganization, in lieu of cash, and a certain amount as additional security for the new Paramount Land Corporation notes.

Seven Agreed on for Board

Hearings on the agreement settlements of the Paramount Broadway, Allied Owners and Paramount's creditor banks' claims will be held December 3, before Special Master John E. Joyce.

Claims totaling $5,446,670 against Paramount were expunged last week under two orders signed by Federal Judge Alfred E. Cox. These claims included Middletown Combined Buildings, Inc., $2,250,000; Estate of Edward Quittner, $2,250,000; Cecil B. De Mille Productions, Inc., $181,653; Manufacturers Trust Co., $92,417; Madan Theatres, Ltd., $32,370; Electric Products Corp. of California, $2,609, and Palardy-Watrous Insurance Agency, Inc., $5,439.

Agreement has been reached on seven candidates for the directorate of the newly reorganized company. Those about whom there is now considered little doubt are Adolph Zukor of Paramount; Frank A. Vanderlip and Dr. Julius Klein, of the Vanderlip bondholders' protective committee; Gerald Brooks and Maurice Newton of the Holmes stockholders' protective committee, and Percy Johnston and George W. Davison of the Paramount bank creditors' group.

Mr. Newton is a member of Hallgarten & Co. Mr. Johnston is president of Chemical Bank & Trust Co. Mr. Davison is chairman of the board of Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co. Gerald Brooks is associated with E. F. Hutton Company and will represent British insurance companies which are large holders of stock.

The projected complete membership of the board is 12 or 14, although the maximum number has not been determined. Under the reorganization plan, it is said, the new company's by-laws will stipulate that one-fourth of the board be elected annually for terms of four years. The new board will be designated as aforementioned in the Kuhn, Loeb plan when it is presented to the court in December for final approval.

Among the duties of the new board will be the designation, from among its membership, of a finance committee which will be empowered to authorize issuance by the new company of any securities in addition to those designated in the plan. Its consent will be necessary for the making of any capital expenditure in excess of $500,000, to the making of any employment contract involving more than $100,000, to the making of any loans or financing of production in excess of $100,000 and to the sale of any property or business of a subsidiary.

Status of E. V. Richards as Head of Saenger Circuit Decided with Approval of Revised Stock Participation

The Paramount Publix trustees last week issued a statement prompted, they said, "as a duty to the estate and in a spirit of fairness to Adolph Zukor," flatly denying any and all reports that conflict exists between the trustees and the Paramount president. The statement follows:

"The inference that any conflict of any character exists or has at any time existed between Mr. Zukor and the trustees in regard to management, is utterly without foundation in fact. At no time has there been any such clash or difference, either in purpose or method, between Mr. Zukor and the trustees. Under the receivership, bankruptcy and reorganization proceedings, respectively, Mr. Zukor has continued to be the president and head of the principal subsidiaries of the company and has enjoyed the complete confidence and support of the trustees. In determining matters of operating policy, the trustees have at all times had the advice and fullest cooperation of Mr. Zukor and have found themselves in full and harmonious accord with him in such policies. Any suggestion or report of such a supposed conflict is far from the truth and cannot fail to cause grave concern in the minds of all people who have the interest of Paramount at heart. Mr. Zukor enjoys also the confidence and respect of artists, producers, exhibitors, competitors and of the vast personnel of the Paramount organization.

"The trustees know Mr. Zukor's long record of high executive accomplishment in the motion picture industry and recognize his great value and importance to Paramount and they are confident that all who are interested in the welfare of Paramount and are familiar with its affairs also know Mr. Zukor's record and recognize his great value to the enterprise."

Richards' Status Settled

The status of E. V. Richards as president and general manager of the reorganized Saenger circuit, provided for in the original Saenger reorganization plan but deliberated upon for several weeks because the Paramount trustees felt Mr. Richards' participation in stock deals under the plan allowed Paramount too little leeway in policy, was not disturbed last week when an agreement was concluded by him with the trustees under which his stock participation in the new company was revised in favor of Paramount.

The trustees gave their approval to the Richards agreement at a meeting Thursday and this was followed with approval by the reorganization committee.

As also designated in the original Saenger reorganization plan, Mr. Richards will acquire 50 per cent of the outstanding stock of the new company. The original plan, however, stipulated that Mr. Richards was to receive all the Class A and Paramount all the Class B. The new agreement reverses the voting and income stock in Paramount's favor, but Mr. Richards still retains a 50 per cent interest.

SINCLAIR LEWIS AND ELMER RICE

Under a simple head, "Last Word," Sinclair Lewis, novelist, playwright, scenarist, in the New York Times of last Sunday, in effect makes answer to Elmer Rice's recent castigation of New York, Broadway and the critics of the drama. Mr. Lewis humbly says the critics have been kinder to him than he deserves, and throughout the few sticks of type which make up his "last word" there is repeated no less than five times the expression, "I have no complaint against the critics."

"I wish," he says, "that the critics would go on getting rid of the rubbish in the theatre—whether it is my rubbish, or Mr. Elmer Rice's rubbish, or anybody else's rubbish. . . . I have been roasted. I have had the bell roasted out of me. I have been praised, but I have no complaint."

Court Approves Music Hall Deal

Federal Judge William Bondy, in New York, this week approved the new leasing agreement on the Music Hall, whereby Rockefeller Center has an initial rent participation of $700,000 from the new leasing company to be owned by Rockefeller Center and RCA.

No public action prior to court action was necessary, as RKO, the only company involved which is under court jurisdiction, has no participation in the new leasing and operating company, consequently its assets are not involved nor will it have any obligation even in the event of Music Hall losses. The new leasing company will be known as the Radio City Music Hall Corporation, with its stock subscribed for by Rockefeller Center and RCA to provide working capital.

The agreement is retroactive to September 1, and provides for a first payment out of income of $26,000 to RKO and RCA jointly, then for Rockefeller Center's initial rent participation of $700,000. Next is a second joint payment to RKO and RCA of $24,000, to be applied to retirement of RCA's advances for working capital for the Music Hall last year.

Damages Awarded in Fire Suit

A verdict returned Tuesday in the New York state supreme court at White Plains, N. Y., against the Plaza theatre, Mt. Vernon, awarded damages of $45,000 to the family of Robert A. Tapley, as a result of a fire at the theatre last New Year's Eve. The verdict included $10,000 for the death of Helen Tapley, 5, who died of burns; $5,000 for injuries to Mr. Tapley, $25,000 for facial disfigurement to a son and $5,000 for injuries to Mrs. Tapley.

COPYRIGHT VERDICT MADE BY CITY COURT

Precedent Set When Municipal Bench Awards Damages to Music Publishers Suing Protex

Unauthorized use of a copyright was placed in the same legal status for prosecution as the unauthorized use of almost any other kind of personal property, in a decision handed down last week in New York by the city court, which, so far as is known, established the precedent wherein a municipal court ruled on a copyright in this connection. Because a copyright is secured by federal laws it heretofore has been confined to the jurisdiction of the federal courts.

Judge Vincent S. Lippe awarded damages to John G. Paine, who, as trustee of the Music Publishers' Protective Association, Times Square, New York, sued Protex Pictures Corporation, New York, an independent importing and distributing company headed by Leo Brecher, exhibitor. Mr. Paine had charged that Protex made use of the musical composition, "Spring, Beautiful Spring," without having first obtained permission of the copyright owners or a license therefor from the Music Publishers' Protective group. Most of the publishers in this country clear their music for commercial usage through this association. "This wrongful use," said the complaint, "was made when the defendant included the aforesaid music in its motion picture 'Trapeze.'"

Thought Music Was from Strauss

"Trapeze," a foreign motion picture with Anna Sten, was imported by Protex from Germany early in 1932. New musical background was dubbed on the film in New York, and, according to Mr. Brecher, "the person who made this new recording was under the impression that he was using strains from a Strauss waltz."

The Music Publishers' association had moved for the action to be heard by a referee for the assessment of damages. This motion was granted in the city courts and an order for the relief demanded by the plaintiff was issued by the court, which then referred the case to William E. Ringel, as referee, to take testimony and assess the amount of damages. The referee, after hearings, found the amount of the plaintiff's damages, for three separate uses of the music made by Protex in the single film, to be $1,500, on the basis of $500 per use. The plaintiff claimed they had asked for the standard rate of $50 per use for a license for the use of the music before the institution of the action.

First Time in Civil Court

Protex had opposed the referee's report, and, after further hearings before the city court, Judge Lippe upheld the referee.

Representing Protex was Joseph B. Finkelstein, New York. Representing the Music Publishers was Barnett L. Kulak, New York.

The case was the first of its kind ever instituted in a civil court by the Music Publishers.

Motion picture producers obtain licenses from Mr. Paine's organization for the use of copyrighted music of members. There are three classes of licenses: $50 for the single use of any part of a composition for background, when used interruptedly without dialogue; $100 for the single use of a composition when played by an orchestra which is visible in the production; $150 for the single use of a composition when sung by a performer who is visibly singing the number in the motion picture. The licenses give world rights.

Guild Board Votes Equity Agreement

The directorate of the Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood on Monday approved the contract drawn in New York last week by representatives of that organization and the Actors' Equity Association. This contract constitutes a working agreement between the two groups when the Guild receives its charter from the Associated Actors and Artists of America. The AAAA charter will give the Guild full union jurisdiction over the motion picture talent field.

As far as Equity is concerned there is no further action necessary on its part, the Equity Council having accepted the terms laid down by the Guild's representatives, Kenneth Thomson, secretary, and Lawrence Bielensohn, attorney.

Ballots were mailed this week to 500 Guild Class A members for ratification of the directors' approval of both the Equity working agreement and the proposal to associate with the AAAA as an affiliate instead of Equity.

Jolson Sues Setay, Yates Company, for Alleged Loss

Al Jolson has filed suit in New York supreme court against Herbert J. Yates, Jules Brulatour, John C. Cosgrove, Benjamin Goetz, Frederick R. Ryan and Walter W. Vincent, officers of Setay Company, Inc., in connection with losses alleged to have been suffered by Jolson in an investment in 2,200 shares of Setay Company stock. The company was formed, according to Mr. Jolson's complaint, in 1927, as an investment and financing company.

George Dawes Represents Goldwyn in New York

George Dawes this week was appointed publicity representative in New York for Samuel Goldwyn, succeeding Lynn Farnol, who resigned to join Donahue & Coe, advertising agency.

Mr. Dawes, who for years has been a feature writer for the Scripps-Howard newspapers and on newspapers in Denver, Minneapolis and New Orleans, will have charge of Goldwyn public relations, working in association with Hal Horne, advertising and publicity director.

Rosenblatt Made Compliance Chief

Appointment of Division Administrator Sol. A. Rosenblatt as director of compliance of the National Recovery Administration was announced this week in Washington by S. Clay Williams, chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board.

It was indicated that Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth will be named division administrator in charge of the amusement codes. Mr. Farnsworth, who has been Administrator Rosenblatt's assistant, has been "coaching" for the new job for several months. For the time being, Mr. Rosenblatt is to continue in touch with the amusement codes.

Film Code a Pattern

Mr. Rosenblatt, as sponsor of one of the most complex codes written by the NRA, has been in close touch with the problems of compliance. His film code, the only vertical code, has been held up as a pattern for codification of other industries.

Compliance with the film code is considered by the Administration to be "quite remarkable," in view of the highly divergent interests covered, and Mr. Rosenblatt's success in that direction also was said to have been a contributing factor to his selection for the new post.

Meanwhile the fate of all clearance and zoning schedules, hinging on the conferences started late last week in Kansas City by a Code Authority delegation from New York, consisting of George J. Schaefer, Edward Golden and Tyree Dillard, still was undecided, as action on the revised clearance plan discussed on Friday with the Kansas City board was deferred until Wednesday owing to the death in Omaha of the mother of Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest division manager, a member of the zoning body. The three delegates returned to New York Monday night.

A tentative compromise, whereby second and subsequent runs with identical prices may play films simultaneously, was reached by Mr. Schaefer and Mr. Golden before they left Kansas City.

Bargaining a Requisite

On Friday Mr. Schaefer made it clear that the Code Authority would not approve any schedule which did not include the principle of bargaining for protection. Amid threats of defending in federal courts, if necessary, the existing system basing clearance on admission prices, the independent exhibitors in Kansas City strongly objected to the Code Authority's proposal establishing protection among equally priced houses.

The work of billing producers and distributors for code assessment for 1934 under the schedule recently adopted by the NRA was begun Monday. Invoices for second half assessment were sent out to 9,000 exhibitor code assessors. Exhibitors are reported to have paid $83,500 for first half assessments up to October 31, and $90,000 is expected in the second half.

Hammons Signs Joe Cook, "Easy Aces", for Comedies

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, announced late last week that he had signed Joe Cook, long a popular musical show comedian on the Broadway stage, to a long term contract under which Cook will make two reel comedies for Educational, to be distributed through Fox.

"Easy Aces," radio team well known on the air for the past few years, have been signed by Educational for a group of two-reel comedies. The team consists of Goodman Ace and his wife.

Doubt Tri-Ergon Action Against Paramount Trustees

William Fox's American Tri-Ergon company last Saturday was given permission in New York by federal judge Alfred C. Coxé to institute a cause of action against the Paramount Publix trustees, but the chances that Tri-Ergon would prosecute the case in advance of the supreme court's pending review of the situation appeared remote. In view of the fact, also, that a reorganization of Paramount is considered imminent—a move which would terminate the company's trusteeship—and may be in advance of the supreme court's review of the U. S. circuit court of appeals' decision upholding the validity of the Tri-Ergon patents, Judge Coxé's order of Saturday is construed as being of comparatively minor importance.

Willard Mack, Writer, Actor, Dead on Coast

Willard Mack, 56, playwright, actor and motion picture director of prominence, died at his home in Beverley Hills, Cal., early this week, of a heart attack. He had been ill only two weeks.

Four times married, he was one of the most colorful figures in Hollywood and on Broadway. His real name was Charles Willard MacLaughlin, and he was born in Canada. Graduated from Georgetown University, District of Columbia, he studied medicine for a short time, before becoming a police reporter in Washington. Then he joined a Washington stock company, calling himself Charles W. Mack. After five years as a player of average parts he took up playwriting. When his first play, "A Broadway Indian," written for his friend, the late James J. Corbett, former heavyweight boxing champion, flopped, Mack returned to the stage.

His second attempt, "In Wyoming," he produced in Duluth with a stock company he had organized. It was successful and served as an encouragement to its author. Then came "The World and the Woman" and "God's Country." He remained three years in Salt Lake City after that, and in 1917 played the lead in the melodrama, "Tiger Rose," in New York under the direction of David Belasco.

A prolific stage and screen writer, he was the author of "Madam X," and "What Price Innocence," having directed and played in the latter. He adapted Emile Zola's "Nana" for the screen, and wrote "Broadway to Hollywood," which starred Alice Brady. He is credited with the authorship of more than 40 plays.

Mack was a member of the Actor's Equity, the American Dramatists' and Composers' Society and was the first president of the National Vaudeville Artists. His four marriages included Maude Leone, stage star; Pauline Frederick, now the wife of an army colonel; Marjorie Rambeau, and Beatrice Banyard, actress and writer.

Court Approves West Coast Sale

Removal of Fox West Coast Theatres, with its 400 houses, from its bankruptcy status was accomplished in Los Angeles Monday when formal approval of the sale of the circuit to National Theatre Company, organized with the backing of Fox Film Corporation and Chase National Bank of New York, was given by Judge Earl E. Moss. Ten days were granted for appeals before the decision becomes final.

On November 8, National bid $14,782,722 for the circuit's assets and agreed to pay 100 cents on the dollar to creditors of claims totaling the amount of the bid.

Monday's hearing was presided over by Judge Moss in the absence of Referee S. W. McNabb. Protests were filed by counsel representing Marshall Square Theatre Company and Harry L. Hartman, operators of the Orpheum Theatres, San Francisco and San Diego, respectively, but Judge Moss considered the protests virtually groundless.

Following Judge Moss's allowance of the sale, counsel for the above groups filed an anti-trust suit against the FWC trustees under the Sherman and Clayton acts, asserting FWC has conspired against them in getting first-runs. Although these groups are not adjudicated claimants and not direct creditors of FWC, they feel the sale cannot be completed until their claims for damages have been settled, as a judgment would take priority over general creditors. Damages claimed total $1,500,000 on the San Francisco house, and $2,225,000 on the San Diego theatre.

Although they are agreed on the terms of their 10-year joint contract, Spyros and Charles Skouras have not yet signed the agreement, a technical point said to be the cause. Spyros Skouras is executive vice-president of National Theatres Co. in charge of operations, while Charles is executive vice-president of Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation, new operating company to replace Fox West Coast Theatres. Sidney R. Kent, Fox Film head, is president of both companies, and W. C. Michel, Fox Film vice-president and treasurer, is a vice-president of both.

Present indications are that the rehabilitated circuit will be functioning in complete reorganized status January 1.

In New York the U. S. circuit court of appeals granted Archibald Palmer, attorney for bondholders in Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, leave to appeal from an order of federal judge Julian W. Mack denying his motion for an examination of officers of the circuit's bondholders' committee.

Mr. Palmer contended the committee is dominated by allied financial interests and seeks to examine the officers to determine their affiliation and interests, he said. The court will hear his appeal December 3.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The great studio executive was in a beligerent mood. The colossal super-production was in its third week of shooting, and, to hear Mark Hellinger tell it, things were not going so well budget-wise. The producer's eyes covered the massive set and popped—outpopping Cantor's.

"There's too much waste around here," he roared. "Entirely too much. Money is being tossed away for no reason. We've got to save, I tell you. This can't go on."

In a corner stood a young lad who was jotting notes down on a small pad. The executive pointed to him.

"Look at that feller," he thundered. "Doing nothing but standing there. Cut his salary right away!"

His secretary trembled an answer.

"But sir," was the faltering protest, "that young man doesn't get any salary. He's only a student, around here for experience."

The great power pounded his fist.

"Don't argue with me," he snorted angrily, "do as I tell you. Put him down for $20 a week—and then cut it to ten!"

The town of Sheffield in England saw its first Sunday motion picture last week. The film was a silent one, our old "Abraham Lincoln," retitled in Sheffield: "Abraham Lincoln, Christian and Patriot." It was preceded by three hymns, a prayer, Scripture reading and a sermon. The theatre owner personally took up the collection at the box-office as the brethren filed in.

Having heard reports that Charlie Chaplin may finally make a motion picture, the New York Evening Sun recommends as a plot the amazing true story of the abduction of Henry J. Preutzel, retired druggist of Irvington, N. J. The plot has all the elements of Chaplinian helter skelter.

Mr. Preutzel retired at 36, apparently to devote his life to stamp collecting. He accumulated a collection valued at $100,000, which, of course, he kept in an old trunk.

Enter two grizzly paroled convicts, who conceive a Plan. With great originality they call on Mr. Preutzel and tell him that a friend in another town is ill. He must Come At Once. He goes off with the two men.

Where do they hide him? Where Charlie would hide him—in a chicken coop behind the house of the fostermother of one of the plotters. One of the men sits beside him for two days, while the other sends a Fake Telegram to Mr. Preutzel's landlady and goes back for the $100,000 stamp collection. She refuses to give it up.

Camera, Action! The guard falls asleep. Mr. Preutzel finds a rolling-pin in the chicken coop (who but Chaplin could find a rolling-pin in a hen house?), bats the guard on the bean, rushes out, Just In Time to meet the returning conspirator. Chase! Fight! Mr. Preutzel Wins! ! !

The fostermother dresses Mr. P's wounds and feeds him.

Fadeout: The chief conspirator is last seen heading for the city of Newark in a "borrowed" automobile.

Wedding bells rang out the other day from the belfry of the Wee Kirk o' the Heather at Glendale in California for Lew Ayres and Ginger Rogers, two of Hollywood's young stars. While the pair marched down the aisle to the familiar strains a motion picture camera from the Radio studio recorded the event with sound effects—"So we can show our grandchildren what we looked like on our happy wedding day!" exclaimed Ginger. Optimists!

Somewhat belated, but still good, is Jack Moffitt's story of the great profile war which shook the Metro studio walls during the making of "Grand Hotel."

It seems the two stars were to appear together in a medium closeup. "Handsome John" always desires to put his right outline to the camera side. This would have caused Miss Joan to put her left profile to the lens—and she was wearing a hat that covered most of that side of her pretty face.

The arguments were long and vitriolic.

FEDERAL CENSORSHIP IS URGED IN CANADA

Film Leaders Cite Cost of Several Boards; Legion Pro- ponents Charge "Dumping"

By J. A. COWAN
Canadian Correspondent

Federal censorship of motion pictures in Canada is being urged by both the spokesmen for the industry and by proponents of a Legion of Decency for the Dominion, but for entirely different reasons. The agitation for a Legion organization, slow to take form but now gathering full steam, has taken on a political tinge and has become interwoven with the drive for federal censorship.

When Hon. M. F. Hepburn was elected premier of Ontario, he was quoted as about to take steps towards formation of a Federal Board of Censors, one of his reasons being that such a step would be in the interest of economical administration in the Provinces. The motion picture industry's stand for federal censorship has been for the purpose of eliminating the unnecessary duplication of censoring routine and censoring costs in the Canadian territory, with separate boards and fees in the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, the Prairies and British Columbia. The Legion agitators preface their demands for federal action with an attack on the present censorship rulings, particularly in Ontario, and urge federal action as a method of tightening the rules. Nothing has been said, in this case, about eliminating the Provincial Boards, but the idea has been put forward of providing still another hurdle for each incoming feature to jump.

Charge Film "Railroaded"

In attacking the Ontario board's recent action, the charge was made by a group headed by Dr. Samuel Atkinson that political pressure had been brought to bear in order to obtain the censor's approval of a film previously banned, that the picture as a result had gone through without cuts and the earlier ban overruled but that the subsequent protests from patrons had been so potent as to result in voluntary withdrawal of the picture.

The movement for a Legion of Decency, with church heads taking the initiative in intensive effort the next few weeks to shape Canadian opinion for action, has a different complexion from the campaign in the States.

The rallying cry of a mass meeting, held in Toronto and jammed to the doors, was that "Canada was being used as a dumping ground for films already banned in the United States." Dr. Atkinson, who arrived here for the purpose of crystallizing public sentiment into some sort of organized opinion on the matter, declared that he could name more than 30 pictures which had been barred in the United States but were being shown in Canada with little or no changes. He refused to name them.

Not Easily Stampeded

On the whole, the Canadian public is not easy to stampede on any subject, including the decency or indecency of films, and there is a general tendency to hold that it is a matter on which opinions may well differ widely. When the agitation reached its height in the United States during the summer, it re-echoed very hollowly in the Dominion and when a leading Canadian newspaper devoted columns to the matter, the public interest was found to be at a noticeably low ebb.

Film men deny any so-called "dumping" into Canada of films not released for U. S. showings because of possible League of Decency reactions.

Possibly as good an example as there is of the general Canadian reaction on the film question is to be found in the case of the religious weekly, The New Outlook, which has just added a syndicate feature, "The New Films," purchased from the National Film Estimate Service in Chicago. This service purports to review pictures from the viewpoint of their moral status. Its first appearance in the Canadian publication produced an unusual kick-back on two counts.

Complaints have been made that the service, giving tabloid reviews, lists seven pictures, marking six of them with a "No" as far as children are concerned and the seventh "doubtful." For youth, five of the seven listed are opposed. Readers interviewed said that what they were primarily seeking was a list of pictures to which they could send their children.

The other point raised in connection with this particular syndicate feature on films is a curious one which is very significant of the current Canadian attitude. The listing of films included a British picture which was marked "Foreign." One small slip of that type is enough in Canada to produce a series of imperialistic sentiments and stamp the feature as not of Canadian origin and therefore, in the opinion of many Canadians, not suited to Canadian requirements.

Catholic Bishops Warn Industry to Live Up to Pledge

Sounding a sharp warning to the entire motion picture industry that it will be expected to live up to its pledge to improve the level of its product, 78 leaders of the Roman Catholic Church in America, in a general meeting held at Washington late last week, ordered the setting up of machinery for a national boycott of theatres by Catholics in the event that the industry fails to fulfill its promise for higher standards, made last summer at the height of the Legion of Decency crusade. The warning of the bishops took the form of a resolution, which, in effect, provides that:

If the motion picture industry's pledge to the Legion of Decency to maintain decent standards in production is not observed, the bishops of all dioceses will be requested to have the faithful of all localities remain away from all motion pictures for the period of at least one week.

Disavowing any intent or desire to establish a censorship, the bishops flatly warned the industry that, though well pleased with the success of last summer's drive for better films, the Catholic Church will perpetuate the Legion of Decency and continue publication of its own lists of classified pictures. The general conference was attended by three cardinals, nine archbishops and 66 bishops.

"In undertaking this campaign the Catholic Hierarchy had no desire to deprive the public of any legitimate source of recreation, nor to set themselves up as a universal board of censors," it was declared in a general statement.

"The campaign will go on, and, if the producers should return to their old ways and the moving picture industry is made to suffer, the responsibility must be placed at the door of those who failed to understand the inherent decency of the American character."

Future plans for the Legion were divulged in the conference's second statement.

"The bishops have been informed that the motion picture industry has revised and strengthened its regulations governing the moral character of its productions, and that in recent months a marked improvement has taken place.

"All, however, who are interested in the maintenance of right moral standards in motion picture theatres should be on their guard lest any of the producers become recalcitrant, assuming that the campaign of the Legion of Decency is but a passing incident. The Legion of Decency will be maintained as a permanent protest against everything in the moving picture which is subversive of morality.

"The bishops urge that its membership increase, and that all groups become critically motion-picture-conscious.

"This criticism should be supported by an uncompromising refusal to attend theatres which exhibit frequently pictures that undermine morality. . . ."

The bishops asked that Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, continue to publish the Chicago lists of classified motion pictures and that copies be provided to all the dioceses of the country and that bishops having diocesan papers instruct their editors to publish the list to the exclusion of all other lists.

Plan Washington Secretary

The bishops planned to have a priest appointed who would reside in Washington and serve as secretary of the Committee on Motion Pictures. This secretary when appointed will serve under the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures and the general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

It was resolved that a national committee made up of priests and laymen "who will fearlessly and constructively criticize motion pictures which are objectionable from a moral point of view" be established.

It was further resolved that a permanent organization known as the Council of the Legion of Decency be established in every diocese. The members will be appointed by the bishop of the diocese and their work shall be determined by the bishop of the particular diocese.

The campaign has been entirely justified, Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, said in London this week, declaring, films had become "too strong and too sexy."

Breen Subject of Collier's Article

Joseph I. Breen, Production Code Administrator in Hollywood, in charge of supervising the industry's own regulations for continuing the improvement of motion picture standards, is described as "boss censor of all films" in an article entitled "Pure As Driven Snow," appearing this week in Collier's Magazine and written by Walter Davenport, who describes Mr. Breen's mail of some "18 or 20 bags a day" as "a dumpcart for all the scramble-headed bigotry, prudery and provincialism that a nation keeps on tap."

The New York office of the Production Code Administration, in charge of Vincent G. Hart, has established a service whereby story departments are advised promptly of the conformity of new stage plays on Broadway to the motion picture code.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union, in convention in Baltimore, heard Mrs. Marguerite Bro, Chicago, express doubt that producers intend to adhere to "ethical standards" in motion picture production, and that while producers are making a serious attempt to produce better pictures, "it is probably only temporary." She said there are many good pictures for 1934-35.

Theatre Needing Supervision, Says Mrs. McClure

"Joan Crawford, Jean Harlow and Clark Gable are unfit actors for children to see," Mrs. Richard M. McClure, film chairman of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, told the New York state federation convention in an address in Buffalo.

It was a session devoted to the furtherance of the campaigns of the Reverend William Harrison Short and his vest pocket organization, The Motion Picture Research Council, famous for its list of famous ex-presidents.

Mrs. McClure declared that in the United States 6,400,000 persons attend motion pictures daily. Of this number, she said, 100,000 are children under 5 and 2,000,000 are adolescents.

"This proves," she asserted, "that children are enjoying and acquiring a taste for adult life before they are educated to cope with it. The theatre has become a child's playground and requires supervision."

Kissing on the motion picture screen is frowned upon in better class Oriental theatres, Miss Rose Quong, Chinese actress, told the convention. But cheaper theatres "around the corner" show the deleted scenes at twice the price, she added, and marriage and lovemaking customs are becoming modernized.

On the same day was announced an active campaign of the Buffalo Advisory Council of the Motion Picture Research Council to secure these ends:

Production of a new type of non-commercial film;

Education of parents to the good and bad influences of pictures upon children;

Increased use of films as a means of educating children;

Abolition of block booking and blind buying.

Dr. Clara Harrison Town, director of the department of psychology of the Children's Aid department, is chairman of the committee, which will cooperate with the Buffalo Clean Film council and other groups. Paul L. Benjamin, secretary of the Council of Social Agencies, is vice-chairman, and Mrs. Howard W. Cowan is secretary.

Davee Named to Head Eastern SMPE Division

L. W. Davee of Electrical Research Products, Inc., has been elected president of the Atlantic Coast section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, succeeding Homer G. Tasker, who assumes the presidency of the parent organization in January. The election was held last week at a meeting of the section, when RCA Victor engineers demonstrated its new sound recording system, based on the "push-pull" method.

Radio Promotes Fleck

Fred Fleck has been appointed head of the sound recording department at the RKO Coast studio. He has been with RKO for five years in various production departments.

ERPI INCLUDED IN INQUIRY ON A.T.&T.

Federal Commission Order Follows Report Charging Film Activity Against Public Interest

Subsidiaries of American Telephone and Telegraph Company, including those directly connected with the motion picture business, will be made objects of an exhaustive inquiry, together with A. T. and T., by the Federal Communications Commission. The fact that Electrical Research Products, Inc.—a subsidiary of Western Electric, which, in turn, is an A. T. & T. subsidiary—would be investigated apart from the parent companies on the sole basis of its motion picture activities was not made known until last week.

Outlining the Western Electric and Erpi dealings in the field of sound recording and reproducing, a confidential report had been submitted to the Commission, just prior to the order, by Robert L. Robins, nominal head of an organization known as the "American Society for the Protection of the Motion Picture Theatre."

In his report, it is said, Mr. Robins asserted it is contrary to public interest for the telephone company, "a monopoly achieved by public grant," to venture into non-related business entailing great risks, "as in film production, which may affect telephone rates." Mr. Robins' report is said to have demanded that A. T. & T. divest itself of its film interests and "stick to its franchise field."

Telephone Division Established

To conduct its investigation with the minimum of red tape and a maximum of comprehensive efficiency, the Federal Communications Commission has set up a Telephone Division, which this week outlined this tentative program of investigation:

"A.—The investigation and study of the corporate history and the financial structure of the A. T. & T., including the connections and relationships with the Associated Bell companies and the other subsidiaries of the A. T. & T.

"This examination will also include subsidiaries which manufacture equipment and supplies for the parent A. T. & T. and for the Associated Bell companies, including all subsidiaries or related companies which affect the communications industry, under the jurisdiction of this commission.

"The examination will include the financial arrangements between the A. T. & T. and its subsidiaries, and the agreements, financial and otherwise, of the various subsidiaries with each other.

"B.—A general inquiry into the license and service contracts between the A. T. & T. and the Western Electric Company, Inc., also the contracts between the Western Electric Co. and the Associated Bell companies.

"C.—A general inquiry into the contracts between the A. T. & T. and the Western Electric Co., also contracts between the Western Electric Co. and the Associated Bell companies."

Independents' Hearing Later

After witnesses from the A. T. & T. and subsidiaries are heard, the hearings will be adjourned, and witnesses from independent companies will appear later.

"This inquiry will be directed at the financial structures, services, agreements and contracts" of independents engaged in interstate commerce, it was announced by the FCC.

The law authorizing cooperation with State regulatory commissions will be taken into consideration. In addition to witnesses from the telephone companies, it was said that "other interested parties" may appear.

Last June, Representative Rayburn, chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, said on the floor:

"There has been great complaint about excessive depreciation charges in these fields. There has been great complaint about so-called watered stock. There has been no complete regulation of security issues in these fields as there has been since 1920 in the railroad field.

"The Commission should study this question and make some recommendation to Congress as to further need for regulation along these lines."

Subjects of Erpi Inquiry

Among the matters with respect to Erpi to be investigated by the FCC are the financial relationships between Erpi and Western Electric; whether or not Western Electric or A. T. & T. makes advances to Erpi; what contracts exist between these companies in relation to licensing, manufacture, sale, rental or license of apparatus, and contractual relationships with motion picture producers.

Walter S. Gifford, president of A. T. & T., issued a statement to the investing public Monday in which he said he "welcomed" the forthcoming investigation by the FCC and the "giving to the public the fullest information concerning the affairs of the $5,000,000,000 telephone system."

"The company has no skeletons to be exposed," Mr. Gifford declared. "In a business as extensive as ours, which so vitally concerns so many people, the public has a right to the fullest information as to how its affairs are conducted. We therefore have no objections to investigation by properly constituted authorities at any time."

Bernerd Delays Departure To Gaumont-British Post Here

Jeffrey Bernerd, in charge of Gaumont-British activities in the United States, has postponed his scheduled departure from London for New York this week. The arrival in London this week of Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, is given as the reason. Cables from London, however, indicated the chief reason is that Mr. Bernerd is negotiating with RKO Radio for the post held by the late Sol G. Newman. Gaumont officials in New York and President Ned E. Depinet of RKO denied the report, as did Mr. Bernerd from London.

"Jack Ahoy," G-B musical featuring Jack Hulbert, will have a $10 per ticket opening at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, on the evening of December 3. It will be a private preview for the Travelers' Aid Society. It will play the Roxy theatre later. Harry Eagles has been named to handle Coast publicity for the company, with headquarters in Hollywood. George T. Pardy has been assigned to prepare special press material of "The Iron Duke," starring George Arliss. George Weeks, general sales manager, returns to New York December 1 after closing product deals in 14 key situations. He has appointed L. C. Montgomery, Dallas; Lee Scamahorn, salesman; Harry Goodwin, booker, and Paul De Outo, sales manager, Los Angeles.

Allied Directors Meet in Maryland

Allied's eastern regional directors—from New England, New York, New Jersey and Maryland—met in Baltimore Monday with members of the Maryland Motion Picture Theatre Owners for a one-day conference on exhibitor problems. Among directors who attended were Sidney E. Samuelson, national president; Abram F. Myers, general counsel; Walter Littlefield and Herman A. Blum. The meeting was called by the state MPTO, which is affiliated with Allied, with Frank A. Horning presiding.

In Cleveland the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association held an open meeting to which non-members were invited. The local price-slashing situation was discussed.

A movement was launched in Minneapolis by J. B. Clinton, Duluth exhibitor, to bring the state's theatre owners into a new organization having no affiliation with Northwest Allied States. Mr. Clinton, in a letter sent to 500 exhibitors, asserted Allied "is not filling the needs of the average exhibitor."

Charles W. Picquet, for 10 years president of the MPTO of North and South Carolina, Inc., plans to retire from that post this year, his headquarters announced this week. The organization will hold its annual meeting in Charlotte December 9-10.

Dion Titheradge, Author-Actor, Dies

Dion Titheradge, English actor, author and producer, died in London last week at the age of 45, after a brief illness. He had undergone an operation earlier in the week. He had appeared in numerous plays in New York and had written many motion picture scenarios.

Coming from a distinguished English theatrical family, Mr. Titheradge was known to American audiences chiefly for his performances between 1912 and 1926. He was already an experienced actor when, at the age of 23, he first came to New York to play in "Henry V" at Daly's theatre. During that time he appeared in several films, among them the first to be screened by the Goldwyn Company, which had its studio at Fort Lee, N. J.

Extremely versatile, Mr. Titheradge wrote and directed numerous plays and musical comedies. He returned to the New York stage in 1925 in his own play, "Loose Ends," in which he was seen here last in 1926. Since then he has written other plays and musicals and film scenarios in England.

Objections Cause Delay Of Allied Owners Hearing

When unexpected objections to the reorganization plan for Allied Theatre Owners, Inc., arose at the hearing last week before Special Master Oscar Lewis in New York, the hearing was postponed until Friday of this week. Jacob Shulman, attorney, who said he represented bondholders with securities totaling $400,000, presented the protest and asked for a delay in proceedings.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in the four weeks' period from October 6 to 27, 1934, with the previous four weeks from September 8 to 29, 1934. For each city, the total gross of the theatres in that city for the September period is taken as 100 per cent.

North Dakota Exhibitors Winning Sunday Shows

The statewide referendum on Sunday showings in North Dakota has resulted in what appears to be a victory for theatre interests. In the recount, with but three precincts uncounted, the tally this week showed a plurality of 1,090 for legalizing Sunday shows. At the last referendum, two years ago, the issue lost by 372 votes.

In Pennsylvania, film men are counting on the Democratic landslide to help them over the ancient blue law hurdle.

Fight on Censorship Organized in Capital

All forms of film censorship will be opposed at a "conference on civil liberties" called in Washington by the American Civil Liberties Union for December 8 and 9.

A tentative program made public this week revealed that film censorship will be a major subject on which the meeting will oppose proposals for federal censorship, either through the code or creation of a new authority, or state censorship.

Joseph Schenck, Jack Cohn Find Gains Overseas

England has completely emerged from the five-year depression, Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, said in New York Tuesday on his return from a month's trip abroad.

George Arliss, returning on the same ship with Mr. Schenck, reiterated the United Artists executive's statement, saying that business conditions, especially in the film industry, are extraordinarily good in Britain.

Jack Cohn, Columbia vice-president, who also returned, said his company's business abroad had improved 70 per cent in the last two years. "Business in England is terrific," he said. "Italy is anxious to make better pictures," he added.

Florence Strauss with Lyons

Florence Strauss, former story editor for several companies, has joined the A. & S. Lyons play and story department as an associate of Helen Strauss.

Plea for National Theatre Renewed by Gantvoort

Hope for a National Theatre, designed to bring the legitimate drama to every city and large town, was revived in Broadway agencies and production offices this week when Herman Gantvoort, New York producer, returned to the metropolis from Washington, declaring he had left a plan for the creation of such a movement—with a request for an initial $1,000,000 subsidy from the Government—within the White House doors. Mr. Gantvoort did not indicate for whose consideration the plan had been left, but it is known that Mrs. Roosevelt is sympathetic to the National Theatre movement and that Eddie Dowling, one of the stage's staunchest champions, is a close friend of the President.

It was Mr. Gantvoort, who, nearly a year ago, submitted the same plan, together with the identical financial request.

ITOA Wins Fight On Local 306 Writ

The temporary injunction issued to Harry Sherman during his presidency of Local 306, IATSE, ordering 14 members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association in New York City to reemploy 56 union members dismissed in August, 1933, was improperly granted, the New York court of appeals ruled Tuesday in Albany, reversing the decision.

Fred Stone at AMPA

Fred Stone was scheduled as the star attraction at the Thursday luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York this week. Other guests included Eva Le Gallienne, Jeanne Aubert, Eleanor Smith, Arthur Tracy, Jimmy Savo, Roy Atwell, Ned Wayburn, Dorothy Gish, Barbara Kent, Harry Edington, Sam Wood, Myrtle Leonard, Blossom Seeley, Harry Green, Eddie Peabody and Roy Ford's orchestra.

Charles Callahan Dead

Charles Callahan, 56, partner with Frank Good in the Iowana Theatre at Red Oak, Iowa, died following a heart attack and was buried Tuesday.

STAGE CODE AUTHORITY DEMANDS FREE BROADCASTS STOP AT ONCE

Committee Is Appointed to Place Charge of Unfair Competition before Federal Communications Commission

Radio broadcasters this week came in for further criticism from an organized branch of the entertainment industries when the Legitimate Theatre Code Authority publicly indicted radio's continued "free show" policy and announced that it would take drastic steps to stop the practice at once. The Code Authority held that, despite definite indications of upturn in the current season, free radio broadcasts are doing much to impede the theatre's rehabilitation.

This problem, probably more than any one of a half dozen other protested practices of the radio broadcasters, such as chain broadcast "appearances" of film personalities—has long been of vital concern to the legitimate theatre and the motion picture exhibitor alike.

Several months ago the Code Authorities of the motion picture and the legitimate theatres appointed committees which conferred in Washington with representatives of radio broadcasting, who promised to make a survey of the attendance at free broadcasts as a guide to future action.

Authority Threatens Action

The results have not been submitted and now the theatre's governing NRA body is threatening to take drastic action.

The first step was adoption last week by the Legitimate Code Authority of a resolution requesting that it be a condition in the licensing of all broadcasting stations that they shall not be permitted to present programs before large audiences. A committee, composed of Frank Gillmore, president of Actors' Equity, Dr. Henry Moskowitz, Marcus Heiman and William A. Brady, was named to go to Washington within a few weeks and place the matter before the Federal Communications Commission.

This committee was expected to act early this week on the advisability of again inviting the motion picture Code Authority to join in united action on the resolution.

Two Former Theatres Used

The Columbia Broadcasting System is operating two former legitimate theatres in the Times Square area—formerly known as the Avon and Hudson theatres—to which audiences are admitted without charge. In Radio City, the National Broadcasting Company has a half dozen large studios capable of seating audiences totaling about 1,200 each.

Throughout the country, in key radio centers, audiences flock to see their local radio favorites free of charge. In the larger centers, such as Chicago, Boston and Hollywood, the demand for free reservations for broadcasts is as great as in New York. Individuals will wait three and four weeks for tickets to a performance. The NBC publicity department recently estimated that more than 10,000 weekly ask for seats to watch the Eddie Cantor and Rudy Vallee programs.

The Federal Communications Commission had a prior complaint against the radio broadcasting industry last week when Irving Caesar, song writer, accused the radio of defeating the main purposes of NRA. It was Mr. Caesar's

CZECHS TO TAX RADIO FOR FILMS

Because radio broadcasts have adversely affected the attendance at film theatres in the smaller towns of Czechoslovakia, the government has ordered that a certain share of the receipts from radio license fees be turned over to the theatres, according to a report to the department of commerce at Washington from Sam E. Woods, commercial attache at Prague. Broadcasting in Czechoslovakia is a monopoly, operated by a company in which the government has a majority interest. During recent years, says the report, radio has become increasingly competitive with local film houses, resulting in a precarious financial situation for many theatres.

contention that an average of 40,000,000 spend weekly an average of 100,000,000 hours listening to their radio receivers, when they might be helping support other amusements such as "music, the theatre and the motion picture house."

As to comparison of radio, magazine and newspaper advertising, Columbia Broadcasting Company's statistical department this week, in a brochure to national advertisers, asserted that "radio offers actual, not hypothetical circulation at one-sixth to one-tenth the cost per thousand which prevails in standard publications." The CBS presentation summarized the relative merits of newspaper and radio advertising costs as follows:

1. Cost per thousand actual readers of a newspaper advertisement: from $12.08 per thousand, "apparently possible only for leading department stores," to $23.72 per thousand, "average cost."
2. Cost per thousand actual listeners to a radio program: from $2.02 per thousand, "readily possible of achievement," to $2.92 per thousand, "average cost."

Harold H. Anderson, newspaper research consultant of Chicago, charged several errors of interpretation in the CBS figures, declaring:

1. It was unfair to compare actual readers of individual newspaper advertisements with the total number of listeners to a radio program because not everyone listening to a particular program is conscious of the sponsor.
2. Columbia used the most advantageous period—a 15-minute evening broadcast—for its comparisons, citing programs offered at the peak listening period of the day.
3. CBS failed to consider summer listening habits.
4. The analyst assumed that a Columbia broadcasting hookup will cover every radio set in the country.
5. CBS did not include talent charges in computing radio advertising costs, these charges often being greater than time charges.
6. Figures which CBS quoted on reader interest of advertising in newspapers were inadequate.
7. Comparisons of listeners versus readers did not take into consideration the relative value of the printed and illustrated message with the spoken word.

Editor & Publisher, advertising trade journal, cited concrete evidence that general newspaper advertising is seen by as high as 50 per cent of all readers. Forty-six per cent read the headlines; 50 per cent remember the main picture; 16 per cent read any part of the copy, and 12 per cent read copy above the picture. The basis for these figures was a 1,225-line Standard Oil advertisement appearing in the Chicago Tribune last May. The advertisement appeared on a page with general news and a survey showed that 68 per cent of readers questioned saw something on the page where the ad appeared while no other single feature on the page was seen by 21 per cent.

Roxy to Operate Mastbaum, Large Philadelphia House

Samuel Lionel (Rox) Rothafel has completed a deal with Warner Brothers whereby he will take over personal management of the Mastbaum theatre in Philadelphia on Christmas Day. The deal actually is between the Roxy Philadelphia Corporation and the Warner circuit, the details having been arranged in New York.

The assumption of the Philadelphia post will mark the first time in 20 years that Roxy has gone outside New York for theatre operation. Coming to New York in 1913, he successively was managing director of the Strand, Rialto, Rivoli, Capitol and Roxy, subsequently having much to do with the development and operation, in its early stages, of the RKO Center and Radio City Music Hall in Rockefeller Center, resigning as managing director last year. He has since been active in radio and with his "gang" in vaudeville.

The Mastbaum, one of the largest in the country, seating 4,800, will be renamed the Roxy Mastbaum.

Radio Commentator Here

Adolfo R. Aviles, motion picture commentator for Radio Splendid of Buenos Aires, South American broadcasting company, is in New York, planning to go to Hollywood shortly. He is also a representative of El Diario, Buenos Aires newspaper.

Vallee in Air Contest

Rudy Vallee, on his radio broadcast this week, plans to launch a radio contest to select a title song for his first musical film for Warner, "Sweet Music." Listeners will be given two tunes from which to choose.

BRITISH NEWSREELS FACING CENSORSHIP

Fifteen Per Cent Tax on Theatres Threatened To Reach $500,000 Charity Guarantee

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Some disquiet is being felt in British trade circles over the increased tendency in official quarters to supervise program material. The recent pronouncement that newsreels would be subject to censorship if the events pictured were not current events was bad enough, following as it did on a hint from the British Board of Film Censors that the mere addition of a commentary might strictly render news films liable to censorship. Now there has been a plain statement that the exemption from censorship is being continued subject to "good behavior."

This is how most individuals, at any rate, read the pronouncement of Sir John Gilmour, the Home Secretary, in the House of Commons. Asked if he contemplated a formal censorship of newsreels, he replied: "No, sir, but I have thought it my duty to see representatives of this branch of the industry and point out that it rests with them so to handle their material as to make it unnecessary for the Government to arrange for any censorship of newsreels."

A Fine Distinction

The significant point about this statement was the additional comment by Sir John that he had taken action because of complaints of the "revolting" character of newsreel scenes of the Marseilles assassinations. There could not have been a plainer indication of the Government's desire to censor not newsreels but news.

It is obvious that the distinction between official deprecation of films which the public may find unpleasant and official disapproval of films conveying opinions which the Government finds inconvenient may prove to be a fine one. Sir John's warning to the newsreel companies will be taken as a hint to watch their step in regard to other than "revolting" incidents. It certainly is so regarded by many who have felt the newsreel as the one feature of the program in which one might hope to find uncensored views as well as uncensored news. What newsreel company will take a risk in future with the threat of censorship permanently over its head?

Taxing the Box Office

London exhibitors, already members of the most heavily taxed community in the country, are to be asked to pay still more.

Under Sunday Opening legislation, a contribution to charity has to be made. Legally, all Sunday profits may be taken, but there was a working arrangement by which exhibitors in the districts licensed by the London County Council paid 10 per cent of takings, with a minimum joint guarantee of $500,000 per annum, and a provision that the percentage would be increased if this sum were not reached.

The first year's 10 per cent levy amounted approximately to $435,000, and the next year's percentage (which also had to provide for the previous year's deficit) became 12½ per cent.

Now it is announced that a deficit on the expected $500,000 again is anticipated, and that the Council probably will take 15 per cent of the receipts during the coming year.

Cinemas already pay, in entertainment tax, a proportion of their receipts usually estimated as 16.33 per cent. Take 15 per cent of the remainder, allow for the fact that many Sunday patrons would come during the week if there were no Sunday showing and one will begin to understand that many managements are doubting the economic wisdom of opening on Sunday.

News Notes

Ralph Bromhead, managing director of the Regent Circuit, a subsidiary of the Maxwell A.B.C., has joined County Cinemas, the 30-odd circuit controlled by C. J. Donada, as general manager. Mr. Bromhead is a nephew of A. C. and R. C. Bromhead, founders of Gaumont-British organization, and was theatre controller on the absorption of P. C. T. (Provincial Cinematograph Theatres) by the former company. He joined A.B.C. as assistant general manager in 1929.

Literary Digest In Exhibitor Drive On Review Section

A. E. Siegel of the Motion Picture Division of "The Literary Digest" this week issued the following publicity statement:

The Literary Digest this week is conducting a direct-by-mail campaign to all American exhibitors.* Every theatre manager and motion picture executive in the country will receive an announcement outlining, in detail, the Digest's recently instituted department of motion picture reviews and rating method.

That a publication of the prestige of The Literary Digest, with a nation-wide reading circle of millions, should regularly review all worthwhile full-length features, is a significant tribute to the tremendous public appeal of motion pictures.

The Digest's review policy includes rating by letters. Four A's (AAAA) represent "outstanding films," three A's (AAA) represent "recommended films," etc., and ratings with a star (*) indicate films suitable for children. Alert theatre managers and exploiters, in many parts of the country, are already taking advantage of the Digest's popularity, as well as the magazine's wide and influential circulation, by tying up their advertising and publicity with Four-A and Three-A reviews appearing in the magazine every week.

While it is not generally known, the page is being edited by Richard Watts, Jr., of the Herald-Tribune, under the pen name of "Argus." Watts took first honors in the current season's "Film Critics Box Score" conducted by Variety.

Pathe Exchange Nets $78,165 in 39 Week Period

A net profit for the 39 weeks ended September 29, 1934, amounting to $78,165, after all charges, was reported this week by Pathe Exchange, Inc., through Stuart W. Webb, president. Profit before interest on the funded debt—amounting to $110,621—was $188,787.

According to the Pathe statement, the $188,787 figure compares with $508,881 for the same period of 1933, but the 1933 figure included an extra dividend of $441,000 received from Du Pont Film Manufacturing Corp. There were also received from the Film Corporation during the first nine months of 1934 and 1933 regular dividends of $147,000.

Profit for the third quarter of 1934, before interest charges but after deducting all expenses, taxes, amortization and depreciation of properties, was $72,353, as compared with $64,463 in the second quarter and $51,971 in the first quarter.

Pathe's total assets are listed as $7,086,789.

Exhibitor Protests Limiting of Press Books to Order on Each Film

"I have just found out something that I think is so very funny, that if more like it come out of the weird distributing layouts of this industry, you should add a regular colored comic section to your magazine, for the various jokes," writes Herman J. Brown of the New Majestic and Adelaide theatres at Nampa, Idaho.

"You perhaps are not aware of the enormous and senseless waste of the producing companies' money on leaflets, booklets, circulars that range from a foot square to the size of a 12 sheet, enormous circulars that can't be opened and read in an ordinary room for lack of space, huge handbills that fill the whole waste barrel in the post office, where of course the exhibitor throws them without reading the silly nonsense on them.

"We are swamped with inane and quite useless house organs; we receive armfuls of "surprise" and novelty "post-cards" and "ticklers" and similar tripe which is usually so silly and noncommittal that it can't be figured out as having any meaning at all.

"Well, take my word for it, we are now deluged with such stuff that it is a real handicap and a nuisance in the mail.

"Now, Mr. Editor, what do you think—while this battle of the boneheads is going on, to see who can waste the most on circulars, the exhibitor is being shut off on actual press books unless he specifically orders each, one by one. If he missed on this strange and incredible duty he gets none and on the date he is to run his picture finds that fact out with a start of horror.

"The reason given for this, Mr. Editor, is that press books cost money and can't be—of all things, get this—wasted.

"You perhaps are not aware of the extraordinary change in our press books in the last six months. They are now so huge that to store them or use them requires an auditorium. The press stories are not as good as they were and they were and they always were so puerile no editor would run them, and they never told much about the picture—I mean the big scenes—and they seldom have had decent mats, and that is true now. But they have been made so huge they are almost impossible. I have noticed several exhibitors have complained of this. The exhibitor should now know that they are so huge they cannot be given the exhibitor at all unless he takes diplomatic action.

"Can't the producers give us press books of a sane size, and with mats and information to sell our pictures, and can't they send them when pictures are dated, and can't they stop deluging us with such quantities of circulars that the post office officials complain that they must buy bigger garbage cans to hold what we dump on the spot.

"Can't the producer advertise in the trade press where it will be read, and keep the balance of his money?

"What I say above does not apply to the one company that really knows how to run an organization, who knows so well how that it is unnecessary to name it as all know who it is. That company has sanely sized press books and gets them to its customers as soon as it is possible to get them there, and so sells its merchandise."

lar dividend requirements," said Mr. Webb. "The Bound Brook laboratories during the first nine months of this year processed over 30,000,000 feet of positive film for various motion picture producers and realized a satisfactory profit, after absorbing the full depreciation and overhead of the laboratories, in spite of the low rate of operation—only 20 per cent of capacity."

Mr. Webb said a number of new contracts had been entered into by Pathe the past few months, but that as yet the effect of these is only partly reflected in the earnings.

"The outlook is encouraging," Mr. Webb said, "and, when the plan of reorganization is effected, it may be expected that the company will be able to take advantage of new opportunities as they present themselves."

Shortly after the first of the year a special meeting of Pathe stockholders will be held to reorganize the company.

Colonel Hinton, Noted Agent, Dies

Colonel George Frederic Hinton, retired theatrical manager and war veteran, died this week in the United States Military Home in Sawtelle, near Los Angeles. Colonel Hinton, who was 70, underwent an operation for a stomach ailment two weeks ago. He was buried in Arlington National Cemetery, Washington.

Born in New York, and following an education there, Colonel Hinton became a newspaper man, then the agent of such theatrical stars as John Philip Sousa, Lillian Russell, Elsie Janis, Blanche Ring, Fred Stone and others. He once estimated he had traveled 1,000,000 miles, which included 44 trips across the Atlantic.

Until recently he had been connected with United Artists in production work.

Marie Galante (Fox) Romantic Drama

A romantic drama studded with the elements of entertainment, this film should have a wide popular appeal, and at the same time presents to the motion picture public a new personality, a blondly attractive French girl, Ketti Gallian, who has been the subject of much exploitation by Fox and demonstrates a sound ability on the screen. Her personality is appealing, her French accent rather entertaining and a buildup by the exhibitor seems to be definitely in order.

The story is a screen adaptation of the highly popular novel of the same title by Jacques Deval, which has had a considerable sale over the country and offers a valuable selling point to the exhibitor. In support of Miss Gallian are players of popularity and unquestioned drawing power. Spencer Tracy plays the opposite lead, while the other good names are Ned Sparks, the vocal Helen Morgan, Leslie Fenton, who is extremely able in a Japanese characterization, and Stepin Fetchit for incidental moments of amusing comedy.

There are exploitable features in the locale and atmosphere of the story, which centers about an attempted sabotage of the all-important Panama Canal by interests who look to benefit hugely by instigated war. Armament and arms manufacture are subjects very much in the public prints at the moment. The massing and passing through the Canal of the American battle fleet is an interesting and spectacular note in the story. The singing of several numbers, notably by Miss Morgan, and a flash of girl chorus work, adds an entertainment element, while Miss Gallian sings a French number in attractive fashion.

Marie, a young, attractive and melodiously happy telegraph messenger girl in a French seacoast town, is virtually kidnapped by a drunken ship captain to whom she has delivered a telegram. To save himself, he reports the girl as a stowaway, and dumps her off at Yucatan, reporting her escape. Trying to get a ship for home, she makes her way to the Panama Canal zone, where, penniless, she attempts to earn money by singing in a cafe, from which point she is suddenly thrown into a criss-cross complication of international intelligence operatives, espionage and sabotage, centering about damage to the Panama Canal.

Unwittingly, having difficulty with her English, the girl comes into contact with Siegfried Rumann, posing as a bazaar owner, actually an espionage agent; Fenton, as a Japanese merchant, appearing also to be an agent; Tracy, who is early revealed as an intelligence officer from Washington, and Robert Loraine, an English navy operative. They are concentrating, under the supervision of Arthur Byron as the general in command of the zone, on the capture of a mysterious agent who has been causing trouble. There is a thorough complication of driving suspicion, with the girl, approached by first one, then another of those involved, while Tracy seeks to help her, believing her kidnapping story and falling in love with her.

The film moves at a rapid pace, with murder, romance and comedy moving against a background of militarism, fleet maneuvers and investigations. Eventually, in an active and suspense filled sequence, Rumann is revealed as the mysterious agent, and Fenton as a Japanese naval officer. Miss Gallian is free with home and Tracy in the future.

Lively, entertaining and exploitable, the film abounds in showmanship assets.—AARONSON, New York.

The President Vanishes (Paramount-Wanger) Drama

This is a showman's exploitation show as well as audience entertainment. Topical time-liness, made unusually significant by the daring novelty of its subject matter, qualifies it for the showmanship classification. It is entertainment not only because of the highly imaginative idea of its theme but because of its unique familiarity as contemporary history.

"The President Vanishes" is present day drama of fictional, yet possible, current events. In character, the President of the United States is the hero. With the full force of every entertainment and exploitation value being smartly realized, the picture is based on one courageous idea.

All Europe is at war. The president advocates a hands-off policy. Because of his personal popularity and the soundness of his policy, the country is with him almost to a man. On the other hand, and to the tune of the pre-conceived slogan, "Save Our Honor," a group composed of industrialists, international bankers, newspaper publishers and politicians—the profiteers—fan the nation into a fury of fanatic patriotism. Under the leadership of Lincoln Lee, the Grey Shirts, counterparting the Nazi-Fascist storm troopers, secretly financed and sponsored by the profiteers, use typical headline violence to aid the war hysteria cause.

To forestall the cataclysm into which the nation is being rushed, the president vanishes. Ostensibly he is kidnapped. As the slogan "Save Our Honor" is drowned in the surging roar, "Find Our President," the enraged profiteers try everything to discount the president and bamboozle the public. Unable to force the vice-president into assuming presidential prerogatives, the war-makers are helpless. Then, when the cause of the president's enemies is weakest, he reappears. The country is in the mood for a sane, sensible, fireside radio broadcast. War is averted and peace advocated.

So powerful is the dramatic tenor of the picture that the accompanying theatric elements, romance, comedy, color of inserted news-reel shots, and so on, are merely sustaining and necessary contrasting qualities. While there have been other current history political pictures, none seems to have captured the psychological popular spirit as completely as this. The elements with which it deals are either actual newspaper headlines or the subject of more erudite but nevertheless well read editorials or special articles. As a matter of fact, during the past year and a half the question "What would happen if something happened to the president?" has been mouthed times without number.

Here against a visionary situation, but one in which the lives and destinies of all in the country is concerned, the question is answered. That topicalness of kidnapping would lend vitality to the keynote of any interest-creating campaign. Approached from either a controversial or straight topical current history angle, the job of arousing patron curiosity should not be difficult. The big value in exploitation or publicity is a convincing implication that the picture has a personal interest for all potential patrons, that in this picture they will be taken behind the scenes of history in the making as it effects each one of them.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Babes in Toyland (MGM - Hal Roach) Fairyland Fantasy

As a seasonal holiday feature this fairyland fantasy appears to possess one quality which most of its predecessors lacked in that while it is exceptional juvenile entertainment it also is a potential adult attraction. Fundamentally and to the accompaniment of all the alluring spectacle and charming music that captivates the child mind, it is motivated by a comedy tinged melodramatic romantic story.

Because of the characters who portray "Babes in Toyland," the Mother Goose nursery rhyme folk, the picture is a natural exploitation feature. Paraded are The Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe, Mother Goose, Little Bo-Peep, Tom-Tom the Piper's Son, Tweedle (Stanley) Dum and Tweedle (Oliver) Dee, Little Boy Blue, Jack and Jill, Jack Horner, Curly Locks, The Sand Man, the Bogeyman, Santa Claus, Red Riding Hood, King Cole, Little Miss Muffet, Barnaby and all the rest. All are part of the story, made charming by fantastic settings and the well-known Victor Herbert music and thrilling by the climactic spectacle in which, to the tune of "Babes in Toyland," the toy soldiers repel the menace of Barnaby and his Bogeymen.

are to be turned out of the shoe, because Bo-Peep refuses to marry terrible old Mr. Barnaby. There is a spectacle of the toyland characters finding Bo-Peep's always lost sheep, before romance is established with Tom-Tom. Laurel and Hardy's clowning continually intervening, Barnaby frames Tom-Tom into being arrested for stealing one of the three little pigs. But Dum and Dee, finding the pignaped victim, frustrate Barnaby's villainy. Fleeing before the aroused fairyland folk, Barnaby arrives in Bogeyland with all his monsters. Endeavoring to capture him, Dum, Dee, Bo-Peep and Tom-Tom are trapped in the caverns to be scared out of their wits by the Bogeymen. Getting back to Toyland, they are besieged by the Bogeymen. As panic grips the town, Dum and Dee release the wooden soldiers, who in a thrilling sequence, made more dramatic by the stirring "March of the Toys" music, rout the menacing raiders, put Mr. Barnaby in his place, make the Bo-Peep-Tom-Tom romance possible, restore the shoe to Mother Goose and her brood, and make heroes of Dum and Dee.

Nobody should encounter any difficulty in obtaining sponsored backing of the groups advocating better films for this picture. For audiences, it's straightaway amusement every foot of the way; for exhibitors it's an exploitation gold mine, to be sold so that the maximum interest of both adults and children is aroused. —McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Maybe It's Love

(Warner)

Comedy Romance Drama

While there is nothing great in cast, story or production value of this picture, there is plenty of reason to assume that it should prove better than satisfactory average entertainment for the run of the mill picture fans.

In character, dealing with regular every-day folk, the yarn is a comedy romance drama. Two qualities, the menace of the wealthy employer's son attempting to come between the working boy and his working girl sweetheart, and the menace of the in-laws interfering with the young folk's married life, serve to add interesting and laugh-creating color to the basic idea. The familiar domestic angle gives the picture an intimate and understandable tone. As such, it is a family picture, one with entertainment for the more mature as well as for the 1934 moderns. Playing up the vital significance of family interference, financial difficulties and real and fancied jealousies, it hits a human note, the kind of entertainment that the general public is more apt to appreciate than any one else.

Bobby and Rims, working for the Mengle Shipping Company, are in love. Demon jealousy rears his head when Mengle's son, Adolph, comes to work in the office and takes a shine to Bobby. Between Bobby's natural inclination to keep her sweetie on the anxious seat and the smart advice of Rims' sister Florrie, the pair split. Offered a job in the Havana office, Rims realizes that his acceptance would leave Adolph a clear field. Instead of accepting, he marries Bobby. Between family interference, trying to keep the budget balanced and the continued threat of Adolph, plus in-law interference, things go haywire. Adolph, realizing his responsibility, decides that it's up to him to do something. To reunite the little family, he has to have Rims pinched for stealing his car. His explanation of the unusual act proving satisfactory, Rims and Bobby are in a clinch, when in troops the whole Sands melange with an idea of how they all can live happily in one house. Bobby and Rims put their respective feet down on that pronto, the family is invited to pass out of the picture as the young folk decide to work out their destiny alone.

While the leading names, Gloria Stuart and Ross Alexander, imply little of what to expect of the picture, this shortcoming is more than accounted for in the presence in the cast of Frank McHugh, Joseph Cawthorne, Ruth Donnelly, Helen Lowell and Henry Travers.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by William McGann. Based on the play "Saturday's Children" by Maxwell Anderson. Screen play by Jerry Wald and Harry Sauber. Pursued

(Fox)

Drama

Located somewhere in South America, this rather sordid story of a cafe hostess in a seaport town who was the object of too emphatic and unscrupulous attention of a crooked and evil-appearing plantation operator, hardly has the value of a standard major studio production.

The rejuvenation of the girl, through romance developing when she nurses a man who has been brutally attacked near her dwelling, despite the efforts of the crook to keep her for himself, forms the backbone of the not particularly new yarn around which the story is built.

The small cast is headed by Rosemary Ames, as the cafe girl; Victor Jory, as her pursuer; Pert Kelton, as her friend and sister hostess, and Russell Hardie as the man with whom she falls in love. These names will mean comparatively little to the box office in drawing power. Copy lines might be developed about the title, conveying the idea that the girl, pursued by the stigma attached to her position, nevertheless found her way to freedom and romantic happiness.

Jory, it is understood, is posing as owner of a plantation he is operating, after having successfully disposed of the rightful owner, the father of Hardie, who is en route to claim his property following the death of his father. Jory is ready and waiting to meet him. After cleverly relieving him of his suitcase which he drops in the sea, Jory has his employees follow Hardie, slug him, remove his papers and leave him for dead. Miss Ames finds him, brings him into her own house, and nurses him back to health, although he is afflicted with temporary blindness caused by a blow on the head. She, meanwhile, is the object of the greasy and extremely unappetizing affection of Jory, who tries to bribe her with pearls and promises. She is obdurate, although Miss Kelton cannot quite appreciate her fussiness.

She and Hardie fall in love with one another, he, still unable to see, believing she is a wealthy girl, an idea fostered through the connivance of the knowing doctor. When he asks her to marry him immediately, she leaves, with the cooperation of the doctor, planning to rehabilitate herself in San Francisco, then return to Hardie when she feels she is fit to marry him. Finding her gone, Hardie, now able to see, tries to find her, and finally goes to his plantation, where he finds Jory and Miss Ames, who, trying to leave the country, had been kidnaped by Jory. When Jory attempts to kill Hardie, Miss Ames saves his life, and in the ensuing rough and tumble, she kills Jory. The conclusion is as expected.

Comedy

As may be readily imagined, W. C. Fields heading the cast, this picture is nonsensical, laugh-packed comedy. For both commercial and entertainment purposes, Fields with his brand of comedy, is the whole show. Gags that follow fast and furiously in dialogue, action and situations, are the basis of all the fun-making. In each, absurd foolishness is stressed.

In this character of entertainment, the sustaining story is insignificant. While one idea carries all the way through, the picture is actually an amalgamation of a series of situations, wherein when the last drop of hilarity is squeezed out of one, the whole melange moves on to another. Bissonette, a successful failure at running a country grocery store, comes into an inheritance which enables him to realize his life's dream, a California orange ranch. Bought through a sales pamphlet, and also as a mean of furthering the romance of his daughter Mildred and salesman John Durston, he auto-caravans to the state of lemonade, wells and rock-candy mines. His beautifully depicted orange grove is a sun-baked desert and the junk of a broken-down shack, but when fortune is at its lowest ebb, along comes a race track promoter to buy up the ground at a fabulous figure to make Bissonette a 1934 Midas.

Not much to that, but plenty in what accompanies it. The shaving gag with which the picture opens has all the fun necessary to put audiences in the proper mood. The fun with the blind man in the grocery store gives way to more with Baby Dunk and Everett Ricks. Field's attempt to get some sleep on the back porch is a riot of nonsense. The auto trip is funny and the California climax is clever, laugh-loaded satirical buffoonery.

By this time, most patrons know what to expect of Fields, but his value in this particular instance should be completely realized. It automatically suggests endless interest-creating gags, all of which can be adapted from sequences in the show, promising audiences nothing but laughs and using the title significance to assure them that this attraction is a gift to everybody's happiness.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Name the Woman

(Columbia)

Drama

There is plenty of action and punch in this lively little yarn of a young newspaper reporter, crooked politics, romance and comedy. An unpretentious story, well handled, the picture may well fill an action position on the theatre program.

There is a murder, but not a murder mystery, to add momentum to the story, which is paced rapidly throughout, and an automobile pursuit over many miles injects thrill and suspense. In the fact that a woman is seen leaving the house where the murder takes place, the film acquires its title, although it is not an altogether happy choice, giving implication rather of a society drama.

The reasonably popular young Richard Cromwell has the lead, supported by Arline Judge, Rita La Roy and Charles Wilson, while several other familiar names are scattered through the cast.

Cromwell is the young, ambitious and wholly incompetent reporter on a large local daily, ridden by his fellow reporters, and the bane of the existence of city editor Wilson. Henry Kolker is running for mayor on a clean platform, opposed by the figurehead, Crane Wilbur, in the employ of Stanley Fields, the "boss" of the city. The district attorney tells Kolker's daughter, Miss Judge, that he has valuable papers which will incriminate Wilbur and Fields, and insure the election of Kolker. She goes to the house of the district attorney and is followed by Bradley Page, one of the Fields henchmen, who kills the district attorney.

When the flash comes in, Cromwell is the only reporter in the place, and Wilson unwillingly sends him. Unable to get in, he discovers that Miss Judge has been in the place. He visits her, apologizes for the trouble into which he has gotten her, and the two frame a method of getting the papers, electing her father thereby and freeing Miss Judge of the suspicion of murder.

From that point the film moves rapidly, as Cromwell and she take the papers from the district attorney's desk, trap Page, and Cromwell discovers the hideout of a woman with whom Wilbur has been friendly. Then there's the chase as Cromwell is pursued by the Fields gang. With Cromwell accepted as a capable newspaper man, he and Miss Judge conclude the film on the expected romantic note.—AARONSON, New York.

(Mascot)

Western

More or less routine western material, this film moves rather slowly, not hitting the real action, riding, shooting, scrapping sequences looked for by western audiences, until the last half of the picture. The chief showmanship value lies in the name of the star, Ken Maynard, who has a considerable following among youngsters and the adult western fans, and his horse, Tarzan.

In support of Maynard are Evalyn Knapp and H. B. Warner, two good names in western material, and George Hayes, who, as the old cowboy partner of Maynard, has developed popularity which he justly earns.

The locale is a dude ranch in the west, with the usual romance having its part in the story, and a cross-country horse race adding a bit of early excitement. The dude ranch setting adds something of a different touch in westerns, but on the other hand, the film, especially in the earlier sequences, loses out in anticipated action.

Maynard and Hayes, itinerant cowboys who move from race to race where Maynard and Tarzan are consistent winners, accidentally meet Miss Knapp, and are invited to visit at her home, the dude ranch operated by her father, Warner. Arriving at the same time are Kenneth Thomson and his employee, Wheeler Oakman, Thomson having "something on" Warner, as the result of an episode in Warner's past. Sensing danger in the presence of Maynard, Thomson and Oakman arrange to beat him in the race, by means of a cut saddle strap and a wire stretched across the course. The trick works, after Hayes has been talked into betting everything he and Maynard have, including Tarzan. Maynard loses the race, but finds evidence of the crooked work, and has his own suspicions.

Thomson and Oakman arrange the holdup of the stage carrying gold from Warner's mine back in the hills, with Oakman doing a bit of double crossing on the side. Thomson makes a play for Miss Knapp, threatening Warner with exposure if he does not arrange the affair. But Maynard trails and traps the employed stage bandits, catches Thomson trying to rob the safe in the ranch office, and despite an attempt to frame him, which includes a jailbreak, he causes Thomson's arrest. Then it is learned that the old charge against Warner has long since been dropped. The romance completes the picture.—AARONSON, New York.

Fugitive Road

(Chesterfield)

Drama

A somewhat different story, this picture contains elements of mild entertainment. It combines a somewhat unusual romance with some comedy and an unusual setting, an Austrian border post on the Italo-Austrian frontier. Its theme is the manner in which a wanted American crook is ready to sacrifice his freedom to aid a girl in distress, and the assistance rendered by the hard-bitten captain of that post.

Along those lines the title may be developed for selling purposes in copy. The only outstanding name in the cast is that of Erich von Stroheim, with Wera Engels and Leslie Fenton in chief support.

Stroheim is the typically tough German officer in charge of the border post, who is disgusted with his assignment and takes it out on the men under his command. Among a group of emigrants crossing the border at his location is Wera Engels, Russian girl bound for a seaport and a brother in Brooklyn, from whom she has not heard recently. Stroheim is attracted to her and plans to enjoy her company for a few days, pleading an inaccuracy in her passport which makes it necessary to detain her. Trying to crash through the town comes Leslie Fenton, who is recognized by Stroheim as a wanted American criminal.

In the detention room Fenton suddenly discovers the girl is a sister of a prison companion who had been killed in the jailbreak through which he had escaped. Determined that the girl shall not be molested by Stroheim, Fenton exercises his American ingenuity and nerve to surprise Stroheim at dinner with the girl, hold him up with his own pistol and force him to accompany them to a neighboring town, there to be married by the burgomaster, in order to give the girl the protection of Fenton's American citizenship. Stroheim is stunned by the sheer nerve of the American, and does his part at the point of the gun, which he later shows Fenton to have been empty all the time.

Stroheim does the decent thing by permitting the two to go after making them comfortable, while Fenton, falling in love with the girl, takes her with him, the implication being that she will be waiting for him when he completes his prison term in America.—AARONSON, New York.

Love Time

(Fox)

Romantic Drama

With much of the beautiful music of Franz Schubert forming a background, Fox has woven a sentimental story about the life and love of the composer, drawing an entirely sympathetic and somewhat moving portrayal of the young, emotional and brilliant Austrian and his romance with a simple country girl who turns out to be one of the nobility. Set in the early nineteenth century, during the reign of Francis I, the story has been presented with the attractive atmosphere of middle Europe of that early day.

It is a picture in which music lovers may well find much that is enjoyable, and a picture which may have a reader appeal to women than to men, by reason of its concentration on a wholly romantic theme almost throughout the film. It has been performed engagingly and often with excellent use of genuinely amusing comedy. It is not a big picture in the spectacular sense that that word is often applied to films depicting stories of the time about which this centers, but in its simplicity lies an asset.

The exhibitor may well make full use of the title in directing his selling appeal to the feminine portion of his patronage, and make an effort to contact women's groups.

Heading the cast is the attractive "Pat" Paterson, who, a comparative newcomer, has developed a reasonable popularity which may make emphasis on her name worthwhile. Nils Asther, in the role of Schubert, offers an engaging side to his personality in the type of role in which he rarely has appeared, one that he handles intelligently. Other familiar names in a highly competent cast are those of Herbert Mundin, Henry H. Walthall and Lucien Littlefield.

Miss Paterson, living in the country, is understood to be the daughter of Walthall, a duke to whom the king is greatly indebted. The girl is not aware of the relationship. Accidentally she meets Schubert, living in the small house in the woods which has been offered him by a noble patron of the arts. They fall in love and when Schubert is suddenly forced to leave for Vienna, she determines to leave with him. But an emissary from the king comes for her. She escapes, falls in with friendly tramps, and, dressed as a boy, makes her way with them to Vienna. Schubert, meanwhile, not wanting the girl to undertake the hardships which bare existence would impose, leaves without her.

In Vienna she finds him, living in a garret, hounded by a stubborn landlady, whose husband, Littlefield, is his only friend. Miss Paterson nurses him when he is ill, but finally is spirited away during his absence by searching soldiers. Established in her rightful place at court, she gains the king's intercession for Schubert, who is accorded royal approval, a certain step to success. Walthall forced him to promise not to see her again, their stations permitting of no marriage, but after a royal concert, Miss Paterson refuses to countenance such conventionality, and goes to Schubert.

Whatever may be the historical accuracy of the story is of little importance. The film is a wholly entertaining, simple, romantic story, the Schubert music being an asset.—AARONSON, New York.

Man of Courage

Italy and Il Duce

Termed "the American adaptation of the Italian epic, 'Carmicia Nera,'" this picture is said to have had considerable of the guiding hand of Il Duce, Benito Mussolini of Italy. The picture appears to be straight Fascist propaganda, despite the weaving of a plot structure involving an ordinary poor Italian family.

In a lengthy screen "after-word" there is an apparent effort to offset what is propaganda by an emphasis on the idea that the film is rather an exemplification of the honor that lies in the fidelity of a people to its country and its leaders, with an indirect reference to President Roosevelt and the United States, and designed for American consumption. But the "after-word" is too obvious. The English dialogue which has been dubbed in is stilted, unnatural and not so well synchronized.

As far as exhibition generally in this country is concerned, the only real market for the film lies in those communities where the population is predominantly Italian, or where the exhibitor may feel reasonably certain of drawing on that nationality for his audience. For them the film offers a highly laudatory presentation of the accomplishments of the master of Italy, indicating via the story the manner in which the common people of the country gained by his achievements.

The picture is divided, by subtitle, into three periods, the first depicting the conditions immediately prior to the World War, and centering about this family in the malaria-infested Pontine Marshes near Rome, with the first appearance of the sharp newspaper utterances of this man Mussolini, coming to be a voice of increasing import. The second phase concerned is the uprising of the Black Shirts after the war, the almost bloodless March on Rome, where thousands of his followers hailed the new leader. This phase indicates the manner in which the family is aided by the Black Shirts, who were for the most part returned war veterans, dissatisfied with the treatment their country accorded them when they returned for their jobs and found nothing. The third division pictures that which Mussolini has accomplished for his country in industry, agriculture, militarization, and the training of the feminine element of the population for one major purpose, to beget children, preferably men-children.

The film comes back to the family, as is pictured the engineering achievement which resulted in the draining and complete rehabilitation of the treacherous and disease-breeding Pontine Marshes. Through the entire film runs the voice, the personality and finally the person of Benito Mussolini. In certain sequences, obviously newsreel material, are pictured Mussolini addressing vast throngs which greet him everywhere, the Pope, following the re-establishment of amicable relations between the Vatican and the Italian government, and the royal family of the country, wisely left undisturbed by Il Duce.

There are values in the pictures for communities where there is a definitely nationalistic feeling.—AARONSON, New York.

The Forbidden Territory

(Gaumont-British)

Drama

American values are offered, in this British production, by the appearance of Gregory Ratoff and Binnie Barnes in leading parts. There is good story appeal of the melodramatic type and the background of Soviet Russia is one which can be made a selling point.

Without any pretensions to be a super picture, and with a suggestion of the old type silent "thriller" about some of its details, "The Forbidden Territory" nevertheless has its appeal, though it is not the sort of fare which will appeal to connoisseurs of the ultra-sophisticated. It is popular material which will appeal to those who put incident before finesse and a happy ending before probability of detail.

The story pictures an expedition to Russia by Sir Charles Farrington and his son Michael, in search of another son Rex, a victim of the Red government. Although they believe their identity is secret, their guide is really a Soviet secret service man instructed by Leshkin, a Moscow official. After adventures in the underworld of Moscow and meetings with mysterious British secret service agents and others, they encounter Valeria Petrovna, a singer with whom Michael fell in love in London.

Valeria assists them to discover and rescue Rex and finally effects their getaway after they have been captured and sentenced to execution when an attempt to escape from Russia by airplane is frustrated.

The ultra-melodramatic action is balanced by excellent settings, both interior and exterior, and there is a good musical element.

The line of salesmanship likely to be most successful with this feature is an insistence on its realism as a lurid picture of Russia, even if it is the Russia of the yellow press rather than of fact. You can safely promise them thrills in a story which shows Westerners at war with the Soviet's secret forces.—ALLAN, London.

One In a Million

(Chesterfield)

Comedy-Drama

Here is moderately entertaining comedy-drama. Mistaken identity and a light romance feature largely in the plot structure of this mild affair, with a portion of comedy which serves to enliven proceedings to an extent.

When a wealthy young man is thrown over at the last minute by his fiancée, he is attracted to and avidly pursues a young dressmaker's assistant, and that is approximately all there is to the story. On that premise the exhibitor will have to attract his patronage, with the possibility that the gowns incidentally displayed and worn may open the way for an exploitation idea or two, perhaps with the cooperation of the local stores.

Of cast there is little of drawing caliber, the leading names being Dorothy Wilson, Charles Starrett, "Big Boy" Williams and Gwen Lee. In general the film is an amiable little yarn of a boy and girl, with the complications resulting from the girl's mistaken idea of her own guilt of theft, and the stubbornness of the boy's father, who has had previous experience with the romantic episodes in his son's career.

Miss Wilson, employed as a clerk in a department store, is called to the home of Francis Sayles, a major employee, there told that she is under suspicion for store thefts, but will be safe if she is nice to him. She pushes him, he stumbles and falls to the street from an open window and is injured. Miss Wilson, afraid he has been killed, rushes away, and Miss Lee, a dressmaker's assistant, who is to go to a smart country hotel to bring the trousseau of a wealthy girl about to be married, takes Miss Wilson with her to hide out.

Starrett, at the hotel with his bodyguard and companion, Williams, mistakes Miss Wilson for his fiancée, and kisses her. When Starrett's fiancée jilts him, he pursues his initial attraction for Miss Wilson to the home of his aunt, to which he has had the girls decoyed by a fake telegram. A store detective, meanwhile, has trailed the girl, and arrests her, with Starrett declaring he will stick by her. Eventually the girl is cleared and the father made to see the light of real love, while Williams and Miss Lee decide to follow suit.

The film's locale seems chiefly concerned with moving from hotel room to hotel room, and from house to house, with very little action, and a not particularly accelerated pace. Somewhere in the midweek might be the place to show it.—AARONSON, New York.

The Port of Lost Dreams

(Chesterfield)

Drama

Well executed, this independently produced drama has the elements of satisfying entertainment, uniformly good performances and rather effective atmosphere. Set in and about San Francisco's water front and the sea outside the harbor, it presents a somewhat different setting to a yarn which is hardly new but is well developed, with a twist at the end which in novel fashion sets everything right.

In the rejuvenation of a girl through romance with a fisherman, the complication into which their marriage runs, through unexpected contact with a shadow of her past deviation from the straight and narrow, and her effort to sac-rice herself and her liberty to save her husband, lies the exhibitor's opportunity for copy selling lines.

Bill Boyd and Lola Lane are the two really familiar names in the cast, although Ed Gargan, as Boyd's best friend, offers considerable amusing comedy, and George Marion, as an old sea captain, is good in his portrayal of an excellent character role.

Boyd and Gargan, ashore after a good catch on the fishing boat which Boyd owns, are having a good time in the saloon of Evelyn Carrington, playing as Mother McGee, when Gargan's instrumental effort on a small accordion arouses neighboring ire and causes a riot. Boyd and Gargan escape before the police arrive, and make a quick getaway in their ship. At sea in the harbor, Boyd finds Miss Lane stowed away in his bunk. Involved in a holdup with gangster, Harold Huber, she sought refuge at first with Mother McGee, then escaped as the police arrived on the riot call.

Boyd makes life as miserable as possible for the girl, not believing her lame excuses for being aboard, and not daring to put back to shore until the riot excitement has quieted down. Despite Gargan's effort to promote harmony between the two, they are constantly bickering, until a truly explosive argument ends in Boyd's asking Miss Lane to marry him. She accepts, and Boyd refuses to listen to her effort to tell him something about her. Determined to live ashore, he sells his boat to a ship line. But Huber escaped, saw Miss Lane and took Boyd's gun from their luggage. The ship line owner is killed shortly after Boyd leaves, his holster is found and he is arrested for the murder.

When Huber attempts to escape, Marion, taking him into the harbor, sees to it that he does not return, and Boyd is released when Huber's body is discovered with Boyd's gun in the clothing. Miss Lane, to save Boyd, incriminates herself, and she is imprisoned on the old charge. When Boyd finally sees the light, he deliberately commits a crime, and is sentenced to the penitentiary, in order to be near his wife and be "in the same boat" as she. Early parole, and reconciliation, is the pleasant prospect as the story ends. It appears to be good midweek material.—AARONSON, New York.

Once Upon a Time (Metropolitan Life)

Exploitable

Produced by Audio Productions for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, this subject, excellently done in Technicolor, is nominally a part of a motoring safety promotion campaign by the insurance company, but actually becomes a valuable piece of exploitable material for any exhibitor.

In entertaining cartoon style, it pictures the famed characters of fairy tales committing those careless acts which lead to common street accidents in automobiles. When the king of Once Upon a Time becomes angry, the magician prepares a concoction of carefulness and courtesy, and safety comes to the land. Police department, school and general community tieups are ready to the hand of any exhibitor showing the film, which becomes a good will builder of real importance. The film is free to all exhibitors, and may be obtained through the welfare division of Metropolitan Life. Sales accessories are available, and the subject is entirely devoid of any company advertising material.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Girl from Paradise (Educational)

Excellent Entertainment

Here is entertainment in its fullest sense, with good singing, brisk comedy, and likable flash of girl dancing groups. Elements for all types of audiences have been compiled in a production which demonstrates what the short feature field really can achieve. N. T. G. (Nils T. Granlund), night club impresario, and the Paradise Revue are the foundation of the picture. Sylvia Froos, cashier, and Frank Luther and George Shelton are the other principals. Miss Froos' singing is good, with the Maurice Kusell chorus routines, piquant and colorful. Story, music and lyrics for the Al Christie production are by Charles Williams and Marcy Klauber, additional music by Sam Stept, and Johnny Johnson's band does the work.—Running time, 22 minutes.

It's a Bird (General Films)

Fair

Supposedly a picturization of a prize winning example of the efforts of members of the Tall Story Club, with an introduction by Lowell Thomas, this short subject is certainly a tall story, but so tall as to border on the completely ridiculous, and thereby be weakened for general appreciation. It is an amazing yarn of the man whose job it is to break up old automobiles, who hears about a metal eating bird, and goes to capture one. The bird is an ingenious mechanical concoction of long neck and shoes, which decimates machinery with neatness and dispatch, then hatches a complete automobile.—Running time, 14 minutes.

Rural Romeos (Educational)

Good Second Half

After a first half in which there is little action and much dialogue, though Gribbon's crooner burlesque has its moment, partly because of his clear enunciation, the comedy really gets down to business and from that point on there's an abundance of swift-moving laugh material. The hog-calling contest with its characterizations is uproarious both in content and reaction. Shortened, the production would be strengthened. It's a Coronet piece produced by Al Christie.—Running time, 20 minutes.

How to Break 90 at Croquet (RKO Radio)

Enjoyable

The clever and amusing Robert Benchley, humorist of note, indicates pictorially and vocally, the how, why and what have you concerning the viciously active and rough and tumble sport of croquet. Benchley, as the player of the piece and engagingly attired, is definitely amusing in his comment, the subject rating as highly entertaining and amusing.—Running time, 15 minutes.

The Hollywood Gad-About (Educational)

Good

A personality picture-story of the studios, continuity is achieved with a Film Frolic in which stars are introduced in various elements of locomotion, from horseback riding to chariot racing, and there's Walter Winchell's broadcasting, and the pursuit of Mary Astor's pearl necklace. The peddler, who has hidden it in a toy balloon, promises Spanky McFarland a penny for each balloon that he can puncture, and when Winchell tells 'em all about it by loud-speaker they all join in the game. It's a fair lot of fun. This is one of the Treasure Chest group and is produced by Louis Lewyn.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Crossroads of the World (Fox)

Humanly Interesting

Often missing in the travelogue is the human touch, the pictorial study of out-of-the-way peoples in small groups of two or three individuals. Not so in this Magic Carpet visit to Singapore. True, there are shots of masses of men, but where, for example, a crowded downtown intersection is shown, the predominant figure is the Sikh policeman. That intimate contact with subject matter obtains throughout.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Big Mouthpiece (RKO Radio)

Weak

A comedy which is something less than comic features Chick Chandler and Tom Kennedy, the latter as the hapless truck driver who engages in an altercation with a girl motorist, and who gets a ticket for parking beside a hydrant, and Chandler, acting as his attorney, insisting on a jury trial, and successfully complicating matters. When eventually the case is dismissed, the two crash into another car, and its occupant turns out to be the judge who had dropped the case.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Magic Fish (Educational)

Swimming in Fun

Ideas—or gags, if you will—make the cartoon comedy, and the wealth of story-freshness in "The Magic Fish" establishes this Terry-Toon as fast-moving and enjoyable. An asset of more than average standard also is the music, scored and conducted by Philip A. Scheib. From the standpoint of child entertainment, the appearance of the skeleton and wrathful octopus is something of a drawback.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Dumb-bell Letters (RKO Radio)

Laugh-Spotted

In common with the earlier numbers of this series, of which this is Number four, the subject, with musical accompaniment, pictures the actual letters which are said to have been received by various business houses by not-too-literate questioners. There is almost certainly a laugh for every one somewhere in the subject.—Running time, 5 minutes.

Your Stars for 1935 (Educational)

Some Interest

With Wynn doing the astrology work, background shots relieve somewhat the dialogue, vigorously-presented though it is. Current news articles of the daily press are interwoven into the predictions, at times obvious, at times cautious, the entertainment value lying chiefly in the tieup with background. The picture ends on a note of Administration ballyhoo. It's a Treasure Chest production.—Running time, 11 minutes.

An Old Spanish Onion (RKO Radio)

Fair

Only fair as entertainment material, this number has as its asset the voice of Ruth Etting, radio star, rendering two songs in effective style. Miss Etting, visiting friends in a setting of old Mexico, saves a young girl from losing her fiancé by impersonating her at a festival, singing from a balcony while the girl moves her lips appropriately. A fair subject.—Running time, 20 minutes.

FILMING CLASSICS AIDS TICKET AND BOOK SALES

Teachers' Chairman Urges All Bookstores to Cooperate in Sales of the Study Guides

Transformation of literary classics from the book to the screen is stimulating interest of students everywhere in both mediums of dramatic expression, and aid to theatre owners and publishers.

To the booksellers, according to their own Publishers' Weekly, an extraordinary opportunity has been created through public demand for good books, and, conversely, it has been found that many films are now being chosen by patrons because they read the books. Progress in the sale of theatre tickets and in the sale of the classics lies in the development of closer relationships between booksellers, theatre managers, librarians and teachers.

Urges Cooperation

Concluding a firsthand field investigation, William Lewin, chairman of the Committee on Photoplay Appreciation of the National Council of Teachers of English, made this observation: "Every local bookstore will do well to cooperate in the sale of packets of study guides in relation to film books, with a view to having local theatre managers, perhaps, offer copies of photoplay editions of books as prizes for essays comparing photoplays with their literary sources." This would throw the spotlight of interest on the theatre showing such films.

Paramount, on October 1, set out to enlist some 10 million high school and college students in a study and discussion of the treatment of history in motion pictures as related in the Cecil B. DeMille production of "Cleopatra." Some 20,000 teachers of English were contacted personally by the company—all being members of the National Council. A special "Study Guide and Manual" was prepared by educators with the cooperation of Mr. Lewin and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. Several $500 scholarships were offered by Paramount for the best essays. (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, September 22, page 22.)

At about the same time Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer got out a national study guide for "Treasure Island," the Robert Louis Stevenson classic. Working closely with the National Council, MGM prepared a manual for teachers and students in comparing the photoplay with the book. (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, September 29, page 31.)

Require Viewing Films

All these study guides require that the student view the motion picture. In some places the student is given English credit for having seen the film.

Any idea that attendance at photoplays tends to decrease reading was exploded by the findings of Mr. Lewin and his National Council, and the Council has now set out to encourage interest in both the classic and its photoplay version.

Statistically, the study dealt with the habits of high school children in 44 groups in 21 cities.

It was found that the new units of instruction sent pupils to libraries and bookstores in greater numbers, stimulated the reading of difficult texts, and created new consumers of books and a greater interest in the motion picture.

Tens of thousands of letters were said by

Mr. Lewin to have been written to producers by students asking more screen versions of literary classics.

At this moment the motion picture industry is releasing or preparing for release dozens of screen translations of classics, among them "David Copperfield," "Tale of the Two Cities," "Pickwick Papers," "Pride and Prejudice," "Last Days of Pompeii," "Vanity Fair," "Kim," "Gulliver's Travels," "Rip Van Winkle," "Treasure Island," "Les Miserables," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Captains Courageous," "Green Mansions," "Hoosier Schoolmaster," "Puddin' Head Wilson," "Great Expectations," "Age of Innocence," "Joan of Arc," "What Every Woman Knows," "Jane Eyre," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

Library Copies Exhausted

Mr. Lewin, predicting "an unprecedented box-office success for pictures of this type," said that as a result of the interest created in the motion picture "Treasure Island" it is almost impossible to obtain a copy of the Stevenson book at any public library without going on the waiting list. "Indications are that additional hundreds of thousands of reprints of the Stevenson classic of adventure, which would not ordinarily be sold during the 1934-35 season, will be sold as a direct result of the photoplay version, aided by the distribution of study-guides in cooperation with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer," Mr. Lewin declared. And the fact that the study guides require the child to read the book before or after seeing the film caused thousands of theatre tickets to be sold.

"In general," added Mr. Lewin, "it may be said that two-thirds of the children attending American high schools can mention books they have read as a direct result of seeing photoplays."

"Conversely, there are many examples of films which pupils chose because they had read the books, indicating that photoplays increase children's enjoyment of books as much as books increase their enjoyment of photoplays. As a result of experimental instruction it was found that the ratio of such pupils could be increased by about 14 per cent within a few months."

See Aid to Juvenile Programs

"The democratization of good taste in literature can go hand in hand with the democratization of good taste in photoplays."

Neighborhood exhibitors are interested in the development of "juvenile programs." Educators believe these shows, usually conducted on Saturday mornings, are most beneficial to pupils. The new book-film movement, it was felt, should do much to develop these programs.

Teaching of discrimination in motion pictures in an effort to instill in the students an adequate sense of film values is as much an obligation of schools as the teaching of arts, sciences and literatures, declared Dr. Edgar Dale, associate professor in the College of Education, Ohio State University.

The possibility of motion pictures as a teaching device was stressed by W. C. Dyer, principal of McKinley High School, Columbus, Ohio, in an address last week before the Central Ohio Teachers' Association.

That educators have not fully come to realize the powerful means of the film as a teaching element to the child was expressed by Dr. W. W. Charters, director of educational research of Ohio State University.

Dr. Leon H. Westfall, surveying 25 fifth-grade classes in New York's schools, which have some 2,000,000 students enrolled—all prospective theatre customers—found that talking pictures in the classroom are a five-to-one

DICKENS PREMIERE IN HIS OWN STUDY

The world premiere of Universal's screen adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations" was held last week, appropriately enough, in the study of Dickens' house at 48 Doughty Street, London. A small audience, comprising trustees of the Dickens house and the council of the Dickens Fellowship, was reported as raptly attentive during the showing. At its conclusion Walter Dexter, editor of The Dickensian, paid tribute to Universal's faithful adaptation of the story.

preference over the old stereopticon slide with a lecture by the teacher.

"The quite general belief among educators that motion pictures can effect economies both educationally and financially has been brought about by conclusive evidence," reported Dr. Westfall, wellknown in the East for educational research.

The American Museum of Natural History reported an increase in the number of pupils who have seen its educational films, from 1,576,000 in 1928 to 10,450,000 in 1933.

Dickens Study Starts

The National Association of Teachers of English will use the Universal screen adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations," starring Henry Hull, to aid high school students in the study of literature. A radio dramatization of scenes from the film was broadcast last Friday over WEAF, New York, with school pupils in the cast.

Study guides have been issued to the pupils of 18,000 high schools over the country, to be used when the film is shown in the community. Dr. Walter Barnes of New York University prepared the guides.

The MPPDA has prepared a teachers' manual on the RKO Radio screen version of "Anne of Green Gables." The manual includes an adaptation of a scene from the film suitable for classroom dramatization by children. A students' study guide also has been prepared on the film by the MPPDA.

Theatre Suit in Brooklyn

Dave Rosenzweig, Mitchell Kay and Max Shapiro have filed suit in Brooklyn, N. Y., supreme court, against Louis Frisch, Sam Rinzler and Foxrand Realty Corporation, contending the defendants are "depriving the plaintiffs of 50 per cent interest in the ownership, management and control of the newly constructed Waldorf in Brooklyn."

Nizer in Charity Drive

James G. Blaine, chairman of the Citizens Family Welfare Committee, New York, has announced the acceptance of Louis Nizer, of the New York Film Board of Trade, as head of the motion picture division of the commerce and industry committee of the forthcoming $2,000,000 appeal to aid private home welfare activities.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

BRIGHT EYES

Fox

In this production Shirley Temple again is starred with James Dunn, with whom she appeared in "Baby Take a Bow." There being plenty of showmanship in that combination, the fact that the yarn is a different kind of Christmas story to be released during the Yule season provides a ray of hope for exhibitors who have come to look gloomily upon the holiday seasons. The story is not a seasonal fantasy, rather it is one packed with heart interest, romance, laughs and thrills.

The original is by David Butler and Edwin Burke; the screen play by William Conselman. Butler also is directing. The music and lyrics, which feature Shirley in one song, "On the Good Ship Lollipop," are by Richard Whiting and Sidney Clare and Sammy Lee has staged the accompanying dance number.

The story has Shirley, daughter of an aviator who cracked up, living with a family of newly rich snobs. On Christmas Day her dad's old flying buddies, headed by Dunn, give a party for the child in a big plane. Her mother, en route to the festivities, is killed. To inform Shirley, Dunn takes her up to the skies, the heaven where she knows her father is, to break the news.

Litigation for the child's guardianship developing, Dunn is making a sensational cross-country flight to provide funds to fight the case when he finds Shirley a stowaway on the plane. A storm provides the big thrill as the pals have to bale out. Coincidentally, Dunn is reviving romance with a former sweetheart, and the trio with the assistance of Charles Sellon present a case to the judge that assures the happiness of all when his decision is made.

In support of the two leads will be seen Jane Darwell, a sensation of "The White Parade;" Judith Allen, Lois Wilson, Theodore Von Eltz, Dorothy Christy, little Jane Withers, now to be seen in "Kid Millions" and "Great Expectations" and "It's a Gift," Charles Sellon, Brandon Hurst, Walter Johnson, currently in "The White Parade," and George Irving.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY

Monogram

The idea on which this story is based should be productive of much enthusiastic natural showmanship. It's the story of a search for another Shirley Temple, a great hoax, topped off with an exciting climax in which the world is held spellbound as every law-sustaining agency in the country is turned out to find the million dollar baby.

The original story, screen play and direction is by Joseph Santley, who also contributed incidental music and lyrics. He will be remembered for the direction of "Young And Beautiful," and the screen play of "I Like It That Way."

The yarn is told against a typical Hollywood atmosphere. Colossal Pictures conducts a nationwide contest for another Shirley. A pair of pork and bean vaudevillains dress their young son in girl's clothes and he is selected as the million dollar baby. The feted kid, tired of being a girl, runs away and to the tune of gripping suspense and hilarious comedy the search for him or her is staged.

Jimmy Fay, 4 years old boy and new to pictures, plays the million dollar baby role. His parents are Arline Judge and Ray Walker. Colossal's publicity man with the big idea is George E. Stone. Others in the cast are Eddie Kane, Willard Robertson, Ralf Harolde, Lee Shumway, Ed Peil, Paul Porcasi, Wilbur Mack and Jeanette Loff.

Comedy in action, dialogue and situation being the outstanding entertainment element inasmuch as anything savoring of romantic love interest is ignored, the story type suggests its own showmanship exploitation. The star resemblance contest, always an interest creator and particularly so in this case as it pertains to Shirley Temple, looks to be only one of the many ideas that can be used.

SWEET MUSIC

Warner

While the combination of the title and Rudy Vallee's name graphically indicates this production's entertainment character, there is much additional, from a showmanship point of view, that should not be overlooked. It's a story of radioland and radio folk. Fundamentally it's comedy with music, elements which accompany the romantic love interest story of a celebrated crooner and band leader, who falls in love with a song and dance artist. Applying a unique technique, he gets her one big job after another, continually kids and ridicules her, and with the unlooked for assistance of her ambitious press agent, gets her fired. Eventually the girl uncovers the nigger in the woodpile for the expected surprise and happy ending.

Vallee, still the idol of the airways, is teamed with Ann Dvorak in the leads. Six noted comics, Ned Sparks, Robert Armstrong, Allen Jenkins, Joseph Cawthorn, Al Shean (Gallagher and Shean) and Alice White are featured in support. Included also are Helen Morgan, noted piano-sitting blues singer, Vallee's Connecticut Yankees, the Frank and Milt Britten instrument-demolishing comedy band, and Chic Ender and Charley Farrell, song team.

The picture is being directed by Alfred E. Green, recently credited with "Gentlemen Are Born" and "A Lost Lady." A specialty dance number featuring several score girls is directed by Bobby Connolly, who created the routines for "Flirtation Walk." The music and lyrics, which feature Vallee in six numbers, were provided by Harry Warren, Al Dubin, Sammy Fain, Irving Kahal, Allie Wrubel and Mort Dixon.

Settings and costumes for the production are unusually elaborate and beautiful. The picture, which is being built around a showmanship idea, should, by merely adapting ideas utilized in its telling, be a carnival for aggressive exploiters.

ONE HOUR LATE

Paramount

Essentially this is a modernly timed comedy romance. It is the first starring picture for Joe Morrison, radio and vaudeville stage favorite, who previously was seen in "Old Fashioned Way." Being directed by Ralph Murphy, the story is adapted from a Libbie Block yarn by Kathryn Scola and Paul Gerard Smith. Accompanying music and lyrics, which feature Morrison in several numbers, are by Sam Coslow, Lewis Gensler and Leo Robin.

Helen Twelvetrees, last seen in "All Men Are Enemies" and "Now I'll Tell," is teamed with Morrison in the lead. Prominent in the support is Conrad Nagel. Others are Arline Judge and Ray Walker, currently in Monogram's "Million Dollar Baby," also several of Paramount's younger feminine juveniles including Toby Wing, Gail Patrick, Gladys Hulette and Diana Lewis. Other names are Charles Sellon, Ray Milland, George E. Stone, Bradley Page, Jed Prouty and Alfred Delcambre.

An atmosphere of gayety and sparkle predominating the yarn is basically a love story of many unexpected complications. Morrison, in love with Helen Twelvetrees, is given the air because, instead of being just a good mechanic, he aspires to be a radio crooner. When the demon jealousy lifts his head, a situation, packed with potential comedy, develops that not only makes it possible for the hero to prove he is a good mechanic but smooths the pathway to realization of his burning ambition.

Aided by peppy music, the production seems to have that color and appeal which always has proved its popularity. Comedy, however, which is wrapped up in a lot of theatrical hokum, appears to be the best selling quality. The title has unusual value, permitting its adaptation in many tricky ways.

THE DEPTHS BELOW

Columbia

This story is an action thriller. The title providing a ready clue to the atmosphere and establishing it as a drama, potential showmanship in the story is of the type that should stir the enthusiasm of any exploiter. Basically it is the romance-tinged yarn of conflict between two men, buddies, separated and made foes by a series of circumstances. It promises a new and novel lot of undersea stuff. Paced by an undersea rescue, the story moves into a unique diamond smuggling plot which places the former buddies in open conflict. Anticlimaxed by a battle with sharks, the thrill finish is below the water where a diving bell is destroyed and the fight for life and the rescue hit a smashing page.

The original story is by Kurt Kempler, who did "Shriek in the Night." The screen play is by Ethel Hill and Bruce Manning, with direction by Erle Kenton, who did "Island of Lost Souls," "From Hell to Heaven" and "Search for Beauty."

Jack Holt and Edmund Lowe, who have scored some of their best successes in this kind of entertainment, are teamed in the leading roles. Florence Rice is the reason for the romantic vein. Supporting players include Bela Lugosi, Forrester Harvey, Frank Sheridan, Mitchell Lewis, Harry Holman, Irma Harrison, Adda Gleason and many others.

With the title serving as a premise and the names of Holt and Lowe featured, the production looks to be one that can be given an unusually interesting campaign. The dramatic glamour surrounding deep sea divers can be furthered by special lobby displays of all kinds of available or specially constructed diving paraphernalia.

WITH 8 per cent more stars, featured players and directors under long term contract than last year, the large studios have settled down to a heavy production season. In the comparison were taken MGM, Fox, Paramount, Radio, Columbia, Warner and Universal. Of these, MGM leads the field with 17 stars, 59 featured players, and 26 directors: a total of 102. Paramount follows with 6 stars, 68 featured players, and 21 directors: a total of 95. Warner comes next with 88, including 17 stars, 48 featured players, and 23 directors. Fox is fourth with 5 stars, 44 featured players, and 19 directors: altogether, 68. Universal follows with 10 stars, 33 featured players, and 16 directors: a total of 59. Columbia and Radio tie with 42 each. Radio has 7 stars, 22 featured players and 13 directors. Columbia reports 3 stars, 38 featured players and 11 directors. This makes a grand total of 596 stars, featured players, and directors under long term contract to seven major studios.

Keep Screen Free, Says Wanger

Walter Wanger speaking:
"I don't believe films should be played down. The world today is crowded with events of expanding proportions. They belong on the screen. The public is interested in vital subjects. Motion pictures ask no favors of anybody. People of their own free will go to pictures and pay their money to see them."

"To me there is no reason other media should have a monopoly in disseminating the facts and impressions of the world drama."

"That's what I mean by not playing the screen down."

"Motion pictures are recognized as the potent form of entertainment, and the picture industry is too big to permit organizations of ice men, cut-rate chain stores, racketeers, lawyer groups, quacks, cultists, and even nudists, to tell us what and how we should produce."

"Things are happening today as great as any movement of the past. In my estimation it is the plain duty of producers to record these happenings in simple story and stirring romance. I've tried to blaze a trail with 'Washington Merry-go-Round,' 'Gabriel Over the White House' and now with 'The President Vanishes.'"

"I am against the indecent film. I have never made one and I don't intend to. But as important as the trend of decency is to keep the screen vital, free."

"If the newspapers can print, and do print, those things surging across the country today, the screen ought to catch today's portentous parade, while it is passing and not wait for historians to dry it up in heavy volumes."

Selznick, Mystery Man

David O. Selznick zoomed into the headlines last week with so many conflicting stories concerning his future affiliations, following expiration of his current contract with MGM in March, that he has become a mystery.

One day reports have him affiliating with

John Hay Whitney, another says he will revive the old banner of Selznick Productions with his brother Myron contributing his share of the finances and influence with so many of Hollywood's top line artists and directors. That story links Louis B. Mayer with the venture, which seems incredible in view of Mayer's long years of association and financial interest in the MGM organization.

Mr. Selznick himself is non-committal.

Awaiting Marion Davies Plans

Major Albert Warner arrived in town this week by plane for conferences with Jack Warner regarding plans for the Marion Davies films and other Cosmopolitan productions which Warner will release next year. Accompanying Major Warner were A. W. Smith and Gradwell Sears. Miss Davies' first picture may or may not be based on the life of Marie Antoinette. MGM has postponed a similar vehicle for Norma Shearer who is expecting a blessed event. Whatever the picture is, Frank Borzage has been signed to direct.

The famous Davies bungalow at MGM is being moved, in seven parts, to the Burbank studio where, with no other space available, it will repose on the front lawn.

Nine Pictures Start

Nine new productions went into work in the past week, as four were completed. Fox, MGM and Paramount each started two, Columbia, Universal and Monogram one each. Completed pictures are two for Fox and one each for Radio and Universal.

"Charlie Chan in Paris," ninth of the series starring Warner Oland, started at Fox. The second is "Mystery Blonde," featuring Mona Barrie, Gilbert Roland, John Halliday and Mischa Auer.

Both the new MGM pictures have the earmarks of importance. "West Point of the Air," will feature Wallace Beery, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Russell Hardie and Robert Taylor. In "Vanessa," Robert Montgomery and Helen Hayes will be starred.

In "Rumba," Paramount is reuniting George Raft and Carole Lombard, the dancing stars of "Bolero." "Mississippi" features Bing Crosby, with Joan Bennett and W. C. Fields. It also will introduce the radio favorites Queenie Smith, and Molasses and January.

Columbia put "Against the Evidence" before the cameras. The cast includes Norman Foster, Donald Cook, Sheila Mannors, Frank Darien and Pat O'Malley.

Universal's new feature is "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," a Charles Dickens classic, with Claude Rains, Douglass Montgomery, Heather Angel.

Monogram's "Texas Terror" will have John Wayne, Lucille Brown.

Richard Arlen and Madge Evans head the cast of "Helldorado," completed by Fox, and "Lottery Lover" features "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres and Peggy Fears.

Radio transferred "The Little Minister" to the cutting rooms. Katharine Hepburn is starred.

Fourth of the finished pictures, Universal's "Rendezvous at Midnight" features Ralph Bellamy, Valerie Hobson. Catherine Doucet, Irene Ware, Purnell Pratt, Edgar Kennedy, Arthur Vinton and Helen Jerome Eddy.

Settle Libel Suit On "American Tragedy"

The libel suit brought against Paramount Publix last summer by Minerva Brown, mother of Grace Brown, whose tragic romance with Chester Gillette formed the basis of "An American Tragedy," was settled in Syracuse, N. FILM AND STAR 'BOUND FOR STUDIO'

Says DeCasseres of the Selwyn-Franklin "Conversation Piece" and the Chic Yvonne Printemps

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

CONVERSATION PIECE

Arch Selwyn and Harold B. Franklin, in association with Charles B. Cochran, of London, put on "Conversation Piece," a glamorous romantic musical comedy by Noel Coward. It has a mechanical music-box flavor which makes it tiresomely enchanting.

As it starred the famous French comedienne, Yvonne Printemps, there is no doubt in my mind that "Conversation Piece" and the enticing Printemps are bound for the studios. And there are certainly fine picture possibilities both in La Printemps and the curious piece of highly colored Franco-English life that Mr. Coward has put together. La Printemps' personality is comic and alluring. Her English is full of tang and twirls.

It is all moonlight (without pretzels), sophisticated romance and uniforms, uniforms, uniforms, costumes, costumes, costumes, costumes. For it is laid in Brighton, England, in 1811, when Bonaparte was the big noise in the world and the English were not over-sure of who was who on the high seas.

The story is thin—just thin enough for a good musical score to lift it up when it reaches the films. For the music in the play, mainly from the trained and melodious vocal chords of Mademoiselle Printemps herself, is nothing to boast of, although some of her songs are at times pleasing enough.

The story tells us of how Paul, Duc de Chaucigny-Varennnes (played somewhat gorgeously by Pierre Fresnay), a refugee from France, has trained Melanie (Yvonne herself) for the high-stakes marriage market in England—Paul himself looking for a high time out of the dough that will come to Melanie when she hooks her titled English sucker (the English language has a piercing four-letter word for this Duke—and it is used on the stage). Shakespeare veiled it as Sir Pandarus.

Melanie was a French music-hall singer, and is not above playing Paul's game in her chic and comic way.

After this and that, it looks as if Melanie has hooked the Marquis of Sheere, when Noel Coward (that exotic and unexpected Noel!) goes suddenly sentimental.

For—od zooks!—Melanie falls desperately in love with Paul himself, who passes in Brighton as her guardian.

And further zooks!—Paul is in love with her too. And the end is about as pretty and as enchanting a piece of saccharine hokey as you'd want to see anywhere. In fact, you've seen it six thousand times in pictures.

It's a lady's show and will be a lady's picture. It is now marred by too much French dialogue and a cheap, pediculous song about "the French are a fishy people." Noel Coward is clever; but when he attempts to be "smart" he's not so caloric.

A nice bit of Lubitsch bric-à-brac.

Picture value (with Printemps), 70 per cent.

GERANIUMS IN MY WINDOW

This play, "Geraniums in My Window," will make a pretty little picture comedy of no great moment.

There is a lot of hard-knuckled slang in it which might suggest Ned Sparks or some other hard-boiled guy (and, incidentally, for the kind of work that he is cut out for they do not make them more entertaining than Ned. It's time they headlined him—I hear they have).

This amusing opus is by Samuel Ornitz and Vera Caspary, two persons who know what's what in writing and in Hollywood (Laura Wilck and Accordeon Phil Baker producing). It was ragged more than necessary by our sometimes over-careful New York critics and it may not have a long run. But the audience reaction was decidedly in its favor.

And then, too, Ornitz-Caspary-Wilck-Baker probably already in their mind's eye have split the Hollywood buy of this play four ways. For a little robin on my windowsill told me that it was written for no other purpose.

We open on an employment agency. Toby Starr, poet and romancer, lots of jack, swell family, turns up for a job under the name of Slater Jones (Bruce MacFarlane).

Toby-Slater's game is the old one of getting "local color" in the Lower World and "sociological data" for his romances.

There are many comedy angles in an ex-pug teaching the cultured Toby how to use slang and sling it like a native of the Lower World, where the impeccable English of Swinburne and William Powell are barred forevermore.

Slater, who pretends he cannot even write, gets a job as a dishwasher in the same Sixth Avenue eats joint as Nellie Quinn (Audrey Christie).

Nellie is a comely waitress. Slater met her in the employment agency, where he soaked a guy in the mug for insulting Nellie (Hey, Harry Miner, where are ye?). They are going to arrest Toby-Slater, but Nellie ups and pays for the damage done to the property of the agency. (And the ghost of Corse Payton walks again!)

After work Nellie teaches the bogus Slater "how to write." This is pretty stuff and is giggle-potential.

Marriage. And now all is sweetly idyllic between the waitress and the swell fakir until some one in the boarding-house discovers Toby-Slater's picture and the whole story of his experiment in the Lower Depths in Mr. Crowninshield's smart monthly.

A blow-up. Wow!—Nellie is angry! But—you know the end. You guessed? Smart boy!

It is described as a "Manhattan folk-comedy." Just Folks will enjoy it on the screen.

Picture value, 60 per cent.

BETWEEN TWO WORLDS

Elmer Rice having recovered from the terrific emotional jamboree that gave Broadway "Judgment Day," piped down so low on his newest product (he is now both author and producer) that "Between Two Worlds" is lost completely in a maze of words and the meaningless (but photographically correct) entrances and exits of a raft of competent actors and actresses.

Add, unfortunately, here again is Rice the Communist tomtomer. The craftsman is lost in three snoreful acts of nothing-at-all.

It all takes place on the promenade deck of one of those transatlantic floating hotels bound for New York to the old cockpit, Europe.

Mr. Rice's object, no doubt, was to show us the comedy, the tragedy and the intrigues of such a holiday at sea, where all the inhibitions let down like a bunch of Up-lifters in an old Turkish harem. He didn't near do it.

For picture purposes there is hardly any story. "Characters" swarm everywhere, and they are all dialogue-addicts.

The ghost of the story is woven around N. N. Kovolev, a Russian Communist picture director, who has just been shooed out of Hollywood for trying to make pictures that will point a moral, adorn a proletarian tail, razz our capitalistic democracy and otherwise give you a pain wherever you are most subject to pains. This part is played more than well by Joseph Schildkraut.

He swaggers around, emptying his Moscow slaver into everybody's ears. Among them a Margaret Bowen, a good bourgeois girl who falls for his "biological necessity" stuff, goes to his cabin (the moon is shining, you know) and—yes, just what you think.

She has an admirer, a poet, who is rather dumbfounded at the swift neck-work of the Moscow arty boy. But poets do nothing—they were made, like this one, to remain everlastingly dumbfounded.

There is also a Russian Princess on board. The White Russian and Red Russian come to talk. He tells her that he butchered all her relatives because her relatives, under the late Uncle Nicky, did the same to his mespocah. So he slaps her in the face just for quits. And he also quits Margaret, Russian style, as they all get into port. His only friend on the boat is a negress, a maid—a "Comrade"!

Picture value, 15 per cent.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Chesterfield

MURDER ON THE CAMPUS: Shirley Grey, Charles Starrett—This is better than average for Chesterfield but at that is only fair entertainment. Like most independent mystery films, it is rather talky and is best suited for double feature programs. Sound and photography are fair.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RAINBOW OVER BROADWAY: Joan Marsh, Frank Albertson, Grace Hayes—With the exception of an unusually good musical sequence, this feature is below average and did not please the customers. The cutting on this film is very poor and sound is bad.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Columbia

BLIND DATE: Neil Hamilton, Ann Sothern—Fair play of a girl being in love with one man who she owed nothing to and another man who she was engaged to, and owed him everything. Fair business and good characters in the play. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 30-31.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Walter Connolly, John Gilbert, Victor McLaglen, Wynne Gibson—Positively disappointing and should have never been released. Trade paper reviews would lead you to believe this feature compares with "It Happened One Night." Better see this one before you play it.—L. H. Lano, Cozy Theatre, Long Prairie, Minn. General patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones, Diane Sinclair—We were a little disappointed in the business for this Buck Jones picture, but it gave satisfaction to the western fans who were present. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Nov. 3.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodas, N. Y. Family patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—A good western picture. Jones is one of our best drawing western star.—J. O. Smith, Paramount & Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt—A good play. Jack Holt plays the part of a politician who has everything his own way for a while, but in the end his political ring is broken up and he falls in love with the girl who broke it up. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Nov. 6-7.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

KING OF WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—We played this very old as a fill-in, but it did a better business than a lot of new ones have done. Played Oct. 26-27.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—A mighty good comedy drama. Very funny. Story good and a splendid cast. Erwin is in a class by himself as a comedian and he pleases them all. Played on a double bill but the picture would have stood alone and given satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SHADOW RANCH: Buck Jones—This is a good Western full of action, thrills and fighting with a touch of romance. This is one of Jones' best pictures, presenting him as a cowhand who finds the killer of his best friend and wins the hand of the heroine. This is a reissue but pleased much better than many of the new ones. We played this one day (Saturday) to very good business. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Nov. 3.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—I'm not a fighting man, but I believe I could whip any man after Tim had worked on him a while. In this story, two telephone companies were fighting each other and Tim was fighting any and every man who was on the wrong side. You can't go to sleep on Tim unless you stop one of his uppercuts. But he ought to have some daredevil "double" to do his kissing. He has a new leading lady in every picture. Can that be the reason? Played Nov. 6.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

DuWorld

DAWN TO DAWN: Julie Hayden—Do most of your customers enjoy opera, read Shakespeare and encourage the finer arts? If so, they will enjoy this artistic little featurette which runs 35 minutes. It is

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—art at its artiest, for the story is sad, the settings are drab, and the actors are unattractive. Few words are spoken and a symphony orchestra furnishes background music. All of the action takes place on a lonely farm and there are only three characters. The acting is excellent and the whole film is daringly different. It will please your class patronage. Our customers did not like it but had little to say as we played it with an excellent feature, "Twenty Million Sweethearts" (First National).—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

What the Picture Did For Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

First National

BRITISH AGENT: Leslie Howard, Kay Francis—For some reason this failed to click at the box office. Those who did come out were glad they had done so, but business was only slightly above average. It's a fine picture and deserved to do a better business. Used it on a Sunday to Tuesday change.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Good entertainment but not as amusing as some of the Browns have been. Played No. 3.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Will be pleasant entertainment in any theatre. Dick Powell and Josephine Hutchinson are good. The Vitaphone orchestra is getting monotonous; it is too harsh. Have heard several comments about it. I am not a musician but I think there is too much brass. Am I right? Running time, 86 minutes. Played Nov. 10.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak—This is a very good picture of the comedy type and will appeal to all classes. The story deals with the inside workings of the "auction sale" racket, with spicy dialogue, action and romance. This is good entertainment and has an excellent supporting cast. The trailer will sell the picture and is sure to draw the crowd. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 2.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez, Lyle Talbot, Warner Oland—Our customers enjoyed this picture, which is a little different from the average program picture. Kay Francis has appeared in better films but this will prove acceptable if the women will come not expecting to see too many dresses.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor, Ricardo Cortez—A very good picture but not up to the Robinson standard. Pleased all who came but not so good at box office. Mary Astor gives a very good performance and so does Mae Clark. Good if you can get them in. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF THE TERROR: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—A good horror picture. Very interesting story. Well acted but did not draw any business.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SIDE STREETS: Aline MacMahon, Paul Kelly, Ann Dvorak—A splendid program picture. Story good and splendid acting by a great cast. Good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—The Fox Corporation can also take a bow on this one. While this little lady may not grow up to be an adult star, she and her parents as well can always point back with pride to her record while a juvenile. Her future, of course, is on the knees of the gods. May they be kind to her. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker—"Caravan's" music and chorus work is entrancing. The picture is semi-opera and is an innovation. It is marred by a rather thin story of the wine spoiling if the Gypsies don't play during the harvesting. Phillips Holmes went through his part like a wooden soldier. Noah Beery with his marvelous bass voice leads one chorus. It has spectacle and beauty of scenes with the high spots being the "Hot Cha Cha" and wine song numbers. The class that supports opera will like it but the fact that the second day's business was practically nothing shows that the average audience is not ready for this type.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—We must admit it was a good picture but not the kind of picture the patrons expected of Lloyd. The recording could have been much better. Business not so hot for a Lloyd picture.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—He's through, although this one is a good picture. Harold Lloyd don't mean a thing at the box office. What makes it worse is that I paid big money for it. The next Lloyd will have to be at program picture prices. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Nov. 3-4.—Harold Haubert, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Lloyd has made another good comedy picture but he has been off the screen too long. The public has forgotten him. Receipts far below average even with heavy advertising. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Nov. 8-9.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE: Warner Oland—More women patrons complimented us on this than, I might say, any mystery picture we have ever run here. They all went for it in a big way. The men and kids liked it too. Business fair for these times.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans—This is an entertaining, though not outstanding, film which will appeal to women more than men, as it is rather slow. Baxter has made better films. We find Fox our most dependable product as, with but few exceptions, the pictures are entertaining and most of them have box office names. The Dallas exchange has given us excellent service.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Will gets better and better at the box office and dearer and dearer to the hearts of the American people. This picture, however, reflects at its worst the current art trend to slurred and mushy photography, of bad and inadequate lighting. The expression of the faces of the principal actors was impossible to see in big scenes. Someone should shoot people who sacrifice the story and the work of real artists to faddy, arty photographic ideas that fail miserably in clicking.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—The too often repeated comment—those who came liked it! You know what that means—another Viennese picture that will go better in Vienna than America. Good, but unappreciated! Swell music. Running time, 75 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—Based on the life of the composer, Franz Schubert, this picture for some reason fails to rise above the mediocre stage. Slow moving, obvious plot, stilted dialogue, but the musical score and the musical numbers are beautiful. Even though they are classical, and moviegoers are supposed to be unappreciative of the classics, our patrons stuck to the final fadeout and came out with nothing but praise for the picture, particularly for the music. And was I surprised? Especially when we had used it on a midnight surprise show, where comedy or fast action pictures are favorites. All of which proves something or other—but I don't know what.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Helen Twelvet-trees—Good picture. Pleased all who saw it. Fair business, two days. Played Nov. 5-6.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper—Very good picture for the whole family. The trouble we had was getting the adults to attend. Played Oct. 25-26.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Dorothy Peterson—Super, Colossal! Oh, yeah? This is sold as a special and it belongs on the kerosene circuit and the ten, twenty, thirty days. I'm a monkey's cousin if this is not the cheapest picture they have so far turned out this year. You will get a lot of kids and some of the old timers but watch the regulars take a runout on it or they are a different audience than this of mine. The large house in a neighborhood city pulled it and then double-featured it in their second-run house. It isn't exactly terrible, but it is so decidedly ham in theme that it burns me up.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor—A very good picture. Gaynor, as usual, steals the whole show. Drawing power way off, probably due to the poor title. Played Nov. 1-2.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—While Ayres and Faye were the leads, Durant and Mitchell provided the sparkle and fun. They kept the audience in an uproar throughout the entire picture. Incidentally, they proved that one can be funny without being vulgar. I am glad to state that this is one picture that can be seen and enjoyed by the whole family. Played Oct. 30.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Alice Faye, Lew Ayres—Mitchell and Durant deserve most of the credit for the success of this, while the others were capable enough; but without Mitchell and Durant it is hard to imagine what this would be like. There is a distinct place for these two comedians and acrobats. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers—Did well on a repeat run.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Zasu Pitts, Henrietta Crosman, Charles Starrett, John Mack Brown—This is an amusing little picture that our patrons enjoyed. Zasu Pitts was the whole show and did better than she has done in some of her starring efforts.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—No, I'm not acting as press agent for the Fox Corporation. It just happened that I booked three of their pictures in one week and it also happened (or did it just "happen") that they were all good. No company can win a favorable report from me that is not justified. It may happen later, that I will get two or three that do not deserve praise. In that case, what I write will not be preserved by the Fox Corporation. "The World Moves On" had very little comedy, but it taught a very good lesson in that it pointed out the great difference between Cupid and cupidty. In other words, two people, though wedded, cannot remain as one where their ideals drift apart. In this case, the World War completely wrecked the once lofty ideals of the man and in so doing nearly wrecked the happiness of the married lovers, but not quite. A good picture. Running time, 10 reels. Played Nov. 2.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Hard to classify, and opinion divided, but it will get by if bolstered up with good shorts. A burlesque on "acting schools." Some thought it silly; others said "different." Running time, 80 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Another "She Learned About Sailors," possibly not quite as good, but will please. Mitchell and Durant are O. K. So is Alice Faye's singing. Would have done more business if I had played it a month later. Too hot is worse than too cold in this town. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. General patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: James Dunn, Alice Faye—This is way off from Fox's usual standard. Alice Faye is too good to be wasted with such poor material. They never have made a story of Hollywood that had any box office pull. Better luck next time, Fox. Played Oct. 17-18.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

Majestic

WORLD GONE MAD, THE: Pat O'Brien—This is a nice little picture and more entertainment than lots of the high price ones. Played Nov. 7-8.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

LIKE THOUSANDS OF OTHER EXHIBITORS

Writes J. W. Noah of the advertising department of the New Liberty theatre at Fort Worth, Texas, to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department:

"Like thousands of other exhibitors, the manager of the New Liberty finds the reports on current pictures invaluable."

MGM

BARRETT'S OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—One of the best of the year—step on it. Played Oct. 7-8-9.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont. General patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Otto Kruger, Stuart Erwin—A very good picture that drew and satisfied. Played Sept. 30, Oct. 1-2.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont. General patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—The story is an old timer that we have all seen lots of times but the presence of an excellent cast, good photography and all-around class in the production, makes this worth while entertainment. Satisfied the cash customers and did fairly good business. Played Oct. 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker—Just a fair program picture. No kicks, no boosts and just fair at the box office. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Nov. 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—Not as good as "The Thin Man" but still a very satisfactory program picture. Played Oct. 5-6.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable—This is one of the very best from Metro this season. Pleased everyone. Pictures like this and "Sadie McKee" will improve anyone's business. Metro has given us consistently good pictures this year with the exception of "Riptide," which was the world's worst. Played Oct. 25-26.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—A great show that pleased all. Played Nov. 4-5-6.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont. General patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—Did a nice business and pleased the patrons. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Oct. 19-20.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Hugh Williams—The folks in this oasis in the desert don't dislike Constance Bennett more than the smallpox—on the other hand, they would rather have a medium severe toothache than attend one of her pictures. Why don't these titled aristocrats get off the screen and make room for some proletarians who act like human beings on and off stage. Here is an example of publicity or rather notoriety that misses fire at the B. O. A bad flop.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SADIE MCKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—I can but add my feeble voice and stumbling pen to what has been voiced and written before. It does not soar way beyond the grasp of the everyday mind. It is not a "class" picture but has class written all over it. It is that type that makes a hit on Broadway, on Main Street in the small town; yes, even the dirt road in the sticks. It's both class and mass. When any picture is all that, nuf sed. Edward Arnold as the drunk was convincing and at the same time quite lovable. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Nov. 4-5.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley, May Robson, Gladys George—A very good week end picture. However, the title of the play was a bit misleading; it drew them in. Played two days to very good business. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Nov. 2-3.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley—This is very poor entertainment based on the gangster theme. It is a romantic drama but will not appeal to the masses. This has an excellent supporting cast and they play their parts well but this is not enough to pull up a poor story. Too bad the producers cannot get away from the gangster stories. Played on late Saturday night show to only fair business. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Nov. 3.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan, Nat Pendleton—Did a nice average business and seemed to please the patrons. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Nov. 2-3.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger—Did a nice business with this one. The kids particularly fall for this sort. Beery and Cooper put on a very good performance. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Nov. 9-10.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Colo. Farming community patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Another good picture to help along the new season. Little better than average business. Played "Poor Cinderella" with it and the women liked it better than feature. Running time, 111 minutes. Played Sept. 23-25.—Mrs. T. C. McElroy, Rex Theatre, Vale, Ore. Small town patronage.

Monogram

CITY LIMITS: Ray Walker—A nice little picture; nothing big but OK. Played this with a vaudeville act and it seemed to please. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Nov. 12-13.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Got the money but not what we expected. If this had been made by a major company it would have been better. However, it's OK, as is and worth running anywhere. Go after the older patrons on this type of picture. Extra nice weather hurt our Sunday business; too many went to the mountains or just "drove around." Running time, 86 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

HE COULDN'T TAKE IT: Ray Walker, Virginia Cherrill, George E. Stone—A pleasing little program that pleased about ninety per cent. Small town patronage.—L. Gordon Evanson, McIntosh, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

MAN FROM UTAH, THE: John Wayne—This western was really above the average and pleased quite a few of our patrons who usually are not what might be called "Cowboy Conscious." As I heard no word of adverse criticism, it must have pleased 100 per cent and that's something. Played Nov. 3.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

MOONSTONE, THE: David Manners, Phyllis Barry—A good program picture. Played on a double bill and gave satisfaction as half the show.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI, THE: Buster Crabbe, Mary Carlisle, Charles Starrett, Sally Starr—When independents can produce pictures of this type, they should not be passed by. Played it a little late. An exhibitor does not have to hide away after this show. Pleased ninety-five per cent.—L. Gordon Evanson, McIntosh, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Verna Hillie—It is a great Western picture. Well acted and wonderful scenery. I call it extra good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—We had the best business of the year on this play. Mae West spells prosperity in the show business. Give us more Mae Wests, Paramount. Played Oct. 19-20-21.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine DeMille, Duke Ellington and his orchestra—Mae West is through, I'm afraid. The "kick" they expected wasn't there. A few expected "cracks"—but after all day Sunday run, people "heard it wasn't up to expectations" and it was a flop after that. The Decency Campaign, with everybody hearing the picture had been changed, re-titled twice, etc., took the edge off Mae. Running time, 75 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley—Pretty good picture. Folks seem to like Haley. Good for Sunday showing. Lots of laughs.—Jack Greene, Genesee Theatre, Genesee, Ill. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant—Fair play of a doctor who specializes in beauty work and how he moulds an artificial beauty and thinks he is in love with her but is in love with his cute little secretary. Will do a fair business for any theatre. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Oct. 23-24.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott, Barbara Fritchie, Monte Blue—A western that draws the second night even if there is very little plot to the picture.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Theatre Circuit, McIntosh, S. Dak. General patronage.

LEMON DROP KID: Helen Mack, Lee Tracy—Lee Tracy in another of his characteristic roles, supported by Helen Mack and Baby Leroy. With lots of punch, this one is a real program picture that everyone liked. Not too much race track stuff, as is so often the case in pictures of this type. A well-balanced production. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Nov. 7-8.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID: Lee Tracy—A good picture. Will please everyone. A few complained about it being too sad. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Oct. 15-16.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MENACE: Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh, Henrietta Crossman, John Lodge—No stars to help the draw, but our patrons thought it a swell mystery. Only sixty minutes, but they said it seemed like 10—due to the suspense. Ran one night with big shorts bill and everybody was more than pleased. Running time, 60 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh—A good play. A story of two noted criminals playing against the other and in the end falling in love with one another. Good play and fair business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Oct. 9-10.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple—Do they like Shirley Temple! Hope they keep her busy for the next year, hold back the pictures, and give us one every other month! We lost Marie Dressler, but a new star is born. Running time, 82 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple—Just fair and that is all that can be said about it and that it had Shirley Temple in for some short sequences. Just gets by as a program picture and that says it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard—Our folks came out to see Shirley Temple, giving us a little better than ordinary business. The kid is wonderful and we had no kicks. Played Oct. 24-25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodas, N. Y. Family patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen—A fairly good program picture with no drawing power. Will please with strong shorts in support. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Oct. 29-30.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Joan Bennett, Charles Ruggles—This is a good picture with plenty of comedy. The fans will talk about "bundling" for a long time. This story is laid in the revolutionary war times, and it did not draw, but if you can get them in, it will please. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Nov. 5-6-7-8.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, John Lodge—The star alone was the picture. Not for small towns; slow and has no drawing power.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Theatre Circuit, McIntosh, S. Dak. General patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, John Lodge—13 reels—100 minutes of "opus" acting, direction and camera work—but unappreciated! Hot in spots—a real picture—better than "Rasputin"—but how many small towns care about Russia? Wake up, fellows! Kick about these Hollywood American versions of pictures intended for Europe! A few are O. K., but they're making too many. Running time, 100 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

SHE LOVES ME NOT: Bing Crosby, Miriam Hopkins—Bing Crosby at his best as an actor and singer. This one was well received by the regular fans. Played three days to satisfactory business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Nov. 4-5-6.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston—The Zane Greys seem to be losing their grip. This was a big flop here. As a westerner it is okay. Played Nov. 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott—A re-take of "Fighting Caravans" by Zane Grey. Not as good as the "Last Round-up" but still way ahead of most westerns. Play it; it will make money. Played Oct. 5-6.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Another of Zane Grey's famous stories, which was well received by everyone. This one brought in the regular patrons as well as a large number of new ones. A very satisfactory business for the two-day run. Running time, 57 minutes. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, Larry "Buster" Crabbe, Adrienne Ames—Here is a small town natural. If we could secure more pictures of this type, we might get some sleep after the show.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Theatre Circuit, McIntosh, S. Dak. General patronage.

Pathe

KING OF KINGS: H. B. Warner—A fine picture that every one should see. No one tires of a picture depicting Christ. Any exhibitor should play this picture. It will do business for him. No talking, just sound. Beautiful music and recording good. Churches will buy out your house. It is really a great production. My theatre received favorable comments from church heads and it means a great deal to have the churches behind you on a picture. Packed house every performance. This is a good picture for the entire family. One does not need to run shorts as the picture is two hours long. Running time, 120 minutes. Played Nov. 7-8-9-10.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Child and adult patronage.

RKO

BACHELOR BAIT: Pert Kelton, Stuart Erwin—Patrons thought it extra good. Can run two days anywhere. Sorry we only ran it one night. A little snappy in dialogue in spots, but the laughs kill the reaction of anybody. Running time, 74 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—There was a time when this team was a mop-up. Dirt was added more and more to each release in which they appeared; as a result, they are very little above a program picture draw. Too late to clean them up now.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This play starts out with singing, but soon changes to their usual foolishness. Some liked it and others didn't. It looks like this team is losing out with the public. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 6-7.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Our patrons stated that they liked this Wheeler and Woolsey offering better than any they had seen before. Several remarked that it was not as smutty as previous pictures, and commended this. Business normal. Played October 27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodas, N. Y. Family patronage.

DANGEROUS CORNER: Melvyn Douglas, Virginia Bruce, Conrad Nagel—This is very poor entertainment and will appeal only to the sophisticated type of patrons. It is different from the usual run of pictures, depending entirely upon conversation to please the patrons. The action is lacking and the continual talking will bore the average person. The trick ending spoiled the entire show. Played one day to poor business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played November 7.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Sidney Blackmer, Sidney Fox—Funny and in many ways silly. Some thought it was fair; others thought it was punk. Not in the same class as "Flying Down to Rio," though. Running time, 64 minutes. Played November 3-4.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

FINISHING SCHOOL: Ginger Rogers, Bruce Cabot—Fair play with a lot of sex in it. We did a fair business on just another love play. About the same thing as Paramount's "Eight Girls in a Boat." Running time, 73 minutes. Played October 2-3.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Listen! Our patrons said this was better than "Rio." Undoubtedly, it is extremely excellent entertainment. Dancing by the two leads is remarkable. Music is splendidly recorded and it is certainly pleasing in every respect. If the "Continental" spectacle had been in the new Technicolor, what a scene it would have been! This picture is deserving of all the exploitation you can command. If you haven't presented this feature, then you and your patrons have something to look forward to. It is a sensation! Entire cast is above average. Running time, 102 minutes. Played November 7-8.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE: Ricardo Cortez, Barbara Robbins, John Beal—Mystery drama that proved to be just a fair piece of entertainment. We used it on a midnight surprise show, where it got by nicely, but it is hardly strong enough to stand a run on its own merits.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix—Dix is a great actor and was supported with a great cast. Will make any show a fair business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played October 27-28.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. Fair patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—Good dramatic offering that is different. Did not please generally, on a Friday-Saturday change, and pulled just an average business, even though Dix is a favorite here.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—The Chamber of Commerce provided free tickets to all school children for our first performance and we had a crowded house, although we gave a greatly reduced price in the matter of tickets. The object was to keep the youngsters from Halloween depredations. It worked out very nicely. We had snow the second night, which killed the attendance. Picture very good, but hardly a family offering. Running time, 70½ minutes. Played October 31-November 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York. Family patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding, John Boles—This story is sad. The story of a woman waiting patiently for the man she loved and when she was about to get her happiness, the man was killed. Running time, 82 minutes. Played October 13-14.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis, Frances Dee, Kay Johnson, Reginald Denny—This is a fine intelligent picture that was never intended for the masses. Personally, I consider it one of the best films of the year as it has a story that is different, superb acting, and excellent production. Although Leslie Howard receives top billing, it is really Bette Davis who is the star, for her acting, in view of her past efforts, is nothing less than amazing; she is so thoroughly convincing as the heartless little waitress, that you cannot help but dislike her after she has been on the screen only 10 minutes.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summer-ville—Just a fair program production to poor business. Played October 31.—B. Hollenberg, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summer-ville—This is absolutely the worst attempt at comedy that any company has ever made. With a vaudeville act, we barely grossed film rental. Universal made some good pictures with these stars which drew fine, but leave it to RKO to kill them. RKO's have sure been poor this season, which makes me glad that my competitor has them next season. They won't do any one any good. Played October 10. J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, "Buster" Crabbe, Edna May Oliver—Very good comedy that seemed to please my family night patrons. Edna May Oliver is very good. Marian Nixon and Billie Burke put on a talking marathon for speed and endurance. Nothing to write home about, but got a lot of laughs. Running time, 71 minutes. Played November 7-8.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—This is a very good picture that is very interesting and entertaining. It is a typical jungle expedition, presenting the many dangers encountered only in the jungle. This is really a circus by itself and will prove good entertainment for every one. The photography is excellent as well as the narrative by Frank Buck himself. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 96 minutes. Played November 9.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Fredric March, Constance Bennett, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray—What a pleasant surprise this one proved for us. Expected a flop and enjoyed two better than average days in mid-week, in spite of a bad storm. Ordinarily, this would not be a small town picture, but here was an exception. And it pleased, for our patrons stopped to say they had enjoyed it. Not for the kiddies.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Our patrons enjoyed this more than anything we have had for some time. It's real entertainment from start to finish and the laughs are plentiful. Did only average business on a three-day run, but the weather kept many away. O. K. for the family, with the exception of a couple of spots in the dialogue.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

Universal

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—This is a big picture. A lot of the biggest stars on the stage and radio. It did not draw business here, but no fault of the picture. All that saw it liked it. But could not advertise it properly. All I can say is I think too many stars and not enough story. They all worked hard to make it interesting.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HUMAN SIDE, THE: Adolphe Menjou—Entertaining little show that had no drawing power for us. Played October 28-29.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Mary Carlisle, Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes—A fine entertainment. Great acting. Interesting story. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard, Colin Clive, Frank Lawton, Jane Wyatt, Reginald Denny—A mighty good picture. Fine story. Good picture. No drawing power in this town, but no fault of the picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Esther Ralston, Victor Moore—Good entertainment that pleased generally. Not a special, but it is slightly above the program class and is good for all the family. We used it on a Friday-Saturday change to an average business.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

Warner

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir, Donald Woods—Very good show of rural life in Vermont. Played October 27.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir, Donald Woods—This is a very good picture, based on the book of the same name, but will not appeal to the masses. It is a story of the people who earn their living from the earth—a typical farm picture. This is good entertainment with plenty of romance, drama, comedy, human interest and should please the whole family. The trailer sold the show and we played one day to good business. Running time, 73 minutes. Played November 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—A clever comedy that pleased. The last 20 minutes is positively a panic. As it is very short, would advise building it up with select short subjects. Did fair business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played October 27-29.—Harold Haubien, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. General patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—Clever detective mystery drama, that pleased generally. If there is any fault to find, it is in the slow action and the fact that it is a very talking talkie. Entertained and business O. K.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—Drew above average business and many favorable comments were given this one. Personally I thought it was a mystery of the highest type. It's grand entertainment and should please any audience. Running time, 73 minutes. Played November 7-8.—Harold Haubien, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. General patronage.

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak, Pat O'Brien, Lyle Talbot—This is a pleasant little picture that is a little different from most pictures of college life in that it deals principally with the coach and his affairs. Dick Powell has an unimportant part, but he manages to sing most of one song, "Lonely Lane."—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Another very good musical from Warner Bros. Guy Kibbee almost steals the show and furnishes most of the comedy. Several good song hits and some beautiful dance sequences. Not so good at the box office on account of being shown in an adjoining town and thoroughly advertised here. Running time, 90 minutes. Played November 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—This is the last thing in the musical productions to date. I ain't got room to tell you how big it is. See it and you will see the best yet. The story in this is the best entertainment of any of these big musicals we have played. Lots of comedy that was funny and not tiresome. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DESIRABLE: Jean Muir, George Brent—Sweet little show. Jean Muir is a honey and should get places with the proper stories. Played October 21-22.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HEAT LIGHTNING: Aline MacMahon—An old one we picked up that should have been left. Played October 23-24.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Here was a picture ballyhooed to the skies and, believe it or not, lived up to the advance raves. You can promise your patrons entertainment and spell it with capital letters. Pleased in our case just about 100 per cent, and while business was off, that was due to a terrific storm and not the picture. Family picture, too.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Joan Blondell—It has what it takes for the masses. Plenty of wisecracking fun. Played November 1-2.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Robert Armstrong—Typical of the light farces that this company has been putting out for so long that the patrons know the plot as soon as they have read the cast of characters. Just another picture, with a few laughs, but it missed fire for us. Played on a Friday-Saturday change to slightly better than average business.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—This is only fair entertainment and not as good as "Havana Widows." It is straight comedy with spicy dialogue and fast moving. It is the story of two girls who are interested only in money. There are no objectionable scenes and this will prove good entertainment for the entire family. The trailer will do the selling. Played one day to good business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played November 8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MADAME DU BARRY: Dolores Del Rio, Victor Jory—Extremely lavish production that pleased the few that saw it. It is not a small town picture. Warners spared no expense in producing this picture. Running time, 76 minutes. Played November 5-6.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

MADAME DU BARRY: Dolores Del Rio, Victor Jory—If Warner Bros. are out for an all-time record for poor pictures, they certainly scored here. Pleased about three per cent. Seven per cent walked out and five per cent stayed, evidently to tell me what they thought of the picture. The other 85 per cent showed their good judgment by staying away. I would like to sentence Warner Bros. to thirty days continuous performance of this masterpiece (?). If you have to run this one, double feature it and then tell the operator to forget to run it. One show like this does more harm to the small town theatre than the good shows can overcome in two months. If the cities want this kind of bunk, why don't they sell it to them exclusively and give the small town theatres down-to-earth every-day shows that are liked and patronized? The only big thing about this is the press book and the price. All I got out of showing this one was a fifteen-dollar overdraft and a bad headache. Running time, 77 minutes, but it seemed longer. Played November 3-4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MADAME DU BARRY: Dolores Del Rio, Victor Jory—This is a very good picture of its type, but did not please our patrons. This is not a historical drama, as many will think, but is more of a farce comedy. It presents the intimate life of Louis XV, King of France, and is another costume picture. This would be great for the larger cities, but in the small towns it will not go over. Played two days to only fair business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played November 5-6.—J. J. Medford, Oxford Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID: James Cagney, Allen Jenkins—If your patrons like plenty of action, this picture will make a hit. It is packed with wallops. Is clean and story is just strong enough to hold interest. Good picture for Cagney and Jenkins admirers. They are good. Running time, 67 minutes. Played November 13-14.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

UPPER WORLD: Warren William—Okay entertainment with comedy and action. Played October 30-31.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

MICKEY'S MEDICINE MAN: Mickey McGuire Comedies Series—Mickey McGuire comedies are the big things on Saturday, for the kids, with a western feature. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

MICKEY'S TENT SHOW: Mickey McGuire Comedies—This is a fairly good two-reel comedy featuring Mickey McGuire and his gang putting on a tent show. Good entertainment for the kids, but the adults did not care for it. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MICKEY'S TENT SHOW: Mickey McGuire and his gang—I nominate this two-reeler as the best short comedy of the past six months. Our audience was kept laughing from beginning to end at the clever antics of these youngsters who make you forget they are small.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TRAPEZE ARTIST, THE: Krazy Kat Kartoons—This is a fairly good cartoon that pleased most of my patrons, especially the kids. It presents the popular song, "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," with good music and drawings. Running time, seven minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TRIPPING THROUGH THE TROPICS: Musical—A good comedy with lots of laughs and some good singing. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

Educational

DOG-GONE BABIES: Star Comedy Specials—Absolutely the worst attempt at comedy that we have had. Leave it in the can.—J. O. Smith, Paramount & Dixie Theatres, Ashland & Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

DOMESTIC BLISS-TERS: Marriage Wows Series—Not the poorest attempt at comedy, but it sure is second to the worst.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HELLO, SAILOR: Coronet Comedy—Good slapstick with some good eccentric tap dancing.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MICE IN COUNCIL: Terry-Toon—This is our first cartoon from Education and if the others are no better, I hope this will be the last. Educational seems to be falling down on their product lately. They should wake up before it is too late. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NO SLEEP ON THE DEEP: Mermaid Comedies Series—Poor comedy. Twenty minutes wasted. Running time, 20 minutes.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. General patronage.

ONE MORE CHANCE: Bing Crosby—Reissue that doesn't compliment Bing Crosby.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHY MULES LEAVE HOME: Extra good cartoon. Most of this series is fine.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

Fox

FOX MOVIE NEWS: This newsreel is now far above other newsreels and is more than a filler. Its various departments, sports, fashions, etc., are excellently presented and beautifully photographed. Our patrons no longer resent the newsreel since it is being so carefully produced.—New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

DISCONTENTED CANARY, THE: Happy Harmonies (Technicolor)—This is the best single reel I ever exhibited. Advertise it like a feature. It pleased the adults as much as the children. Coloring is beautiful. You can't go wrong on this series. Running time, 9 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMAN OF POLISH: A good musical comedy. Plenty of slapsticks, very suitable for Saturday booking.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HELLO, POP! Ted Healy and his Stooges—I find it increasingly difficult to get a two-reel comedy that merits a report of any kind. The color in this was pleasing to the eye. The loud and continual shouting about nothing in particular, as a prologue or introduction, or whatever you want to call it, is something like putting salt in your ice cream. The so-called funny sequences were funny only in the sense that they were so altogether out of place. Had the director pruned all this nonsense away, instead letting it clutter up the artistic and musical features, it would have been good. It was good, but it could have been better.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HELL FIRE: Willie Whopper—This one is in color. Better than the average Metro cartoon but still not good.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HI, NEIGHBOR: A good gang comedy. Plenty of laughs.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

JAIL BIRDS OF PARADISE: Colortone Musical Revue—This is a very good two-reel all done in beautiful color. The recording seems bad in several places, especially when Shirley Ross sings. However, this pleased my patrons and is good entertainment with many beautiful scenes. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAID IN HOLLYWOOD: Thelma Todd, Patsy Kelly—Poor. The worst one this team has ever made.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

NOSED OUT: Irvin S. Cobb—Have seen worse comedies, but Cobb is such a good writer, perhaps we expect too much from his comedies.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ROAMIN' VANDALS: Musical Comedies—One of the best musicals. Has plenty of comedy. Fine for Saturday booking.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

TALE OF THE VIENNA WOODS, A: Happy Harmonies (Technicolor)—One of MGM's new series, Happy Harmonies, and it is excellent. Beautiful color and very clever story. Running time, 9 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THEM THAR HILLS: Laurel & Hardy—Another good Laurel & Hardy comedy. They always please.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

Oliver Film

ROSS-McLARNIN FIGHT: Good fighting by light-weights, good photography, etc., but these boys were so evenly matched it got tiresome during 33 minutes. Doesn't get the money the big fighters do. Running time, 33 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

THREE MORE FROM WEST CONTRIBUTING

From Northwest and Southwest come three new contributors this week to "What the Picture Did for Me." They are:

New Liberty Theatre, Ft. Worth, Texas.

L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Theatre Circuit, McIntosh, S. D.

L. H. Lano, Cozy Theatre, Long Prairie, Minn.

Read their reports in this issue.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S LITTLE PAL: A good cartoon. Much better than average.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

CLUB CONTINENTAL: Headliner—Not much to this one. Better skip it.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

A DREAM WALKING: Popeye the Sailor—Another good Popeye cartoon. Helps the drawing power almost as much as the feature.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HI DE HO: Cab Calloway—Not so good. Not near as good as some of Calloway's previous shorts.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 10:—This is a very good one-reeler, but not as good as some of the previous issues. It presents many of Hollywood's famous movie stars and also a Hollywood premiere which was very interesting to our patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MADHOUSE MOVIES: No. 1:—Only fair. Recording bad.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

NERVE OF SOME WOMEN, THE: Paramount Variety—An unusually good short, showing daring stunts. Will please; book it.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT NEWS: We find this the best newsreel on the market and the recording is excellent.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Color Classics—Positively the best color cartoon we have ever played. The most beautiful color, and Paramount's new process sure makes the figures stand out on the screen. Will cause plenty of comment.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

RADIO ANNOUNCER'S REVUE, THE: Headliner—Not much to this short. Might interest a few radio fans.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM ON THE ROOF: Headliner—A very good short. Has plenty of singing of Crosby's tunes from "She Loves Me Not."—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT A SOLDIER: Betty Boop—Good Betty Boop cartoon. Will please.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

RKO

BLASTED EVENT: Edgar Kennedy Comedies Series—Average comedy in the "Average Man" series. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

HIZZONER: Bert Lahr—This is very poor entertainment of the slapstick variety. This series of shorts appear to be reissues of shorts produced many years ago. RKO should specialize in features and they might improve them. As for shorts, they produce poor entertainment.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—Color that is unbelievable. Certainly was different from old process. Let us have more like it. Why not feature some popular orchestras in a series? There are many that have yet to appear on the screen. And our patrons are waiting for more colored subjects like this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

SONGS OF THE COLLEGES: Headliner Series—Great short for college towns. Will please others, too. Another neat recording job by Faulkner and Spivack, who gave us the "Gay Divorcee." Was liked here.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

United Artists

KING NEPTUNE: Silly Symphonies—These colored Silly Symphonies are good, but they are still not worth the price we paid for them.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

Universal

AT THE MIKE: Mentone No. 3-A—Extra good Mentone musical. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

GOING PLACES WITH LOWELL THOMAS: No. 1—First of this series of travel subjects. Extra good—particularly because there are three or four subjects in the reel, instead of 10 minutes of boredom as in the average scenic filler. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

Vitaphone

ALL SEALED UP: Ben Blue—This is a very good comedy of the slapstick variety with plenty of laughs throughout. Blue is very good in this one and it pleased all of my patrons. Come on, Ben, let's have more of these shorts to cheer up the patrons. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BUSINESS IS A PLEASURE: Broadway Brevities Series—Color musical of a jazzed-up department store, with each department putting on a dance spectacle, vying for a prize. Very good. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

CAMERA SPEAKS: Pepper Pot Series—Old time reel. If your show is long enough, don't even take this one to the booth. Better—don't book it. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

ISN'T THAT AWFUL?: Easy Aces—"Easy Aces" trying to do a "Burns and Allen" with mild results. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

KING FOR A DAY: Bill Robinson—Colored acts, with Bill Robinson the hit of the show with his dancing. Swell on any program. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

LITTLE GIRL WITH BIG IDEAS, A: Broadway Brevity—This is very poor entertainment of the musical type and entirely too slow moving. Molly Picon did not go over well here and many left before this was over. It would have made much better two-reel entertainment. Running time, 29 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE: Pepper Pot Series—This is what I call a swell short. Enough talent for a couple of ordinary shorts.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE: Pepper Pot Series—An entertaining short subject; will build up any program. Cleverly produced. Running time, 10 minutes.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. General patronage.

SONG OF FAME, THE: Ruth Etting—This is one of the best of this Broadway Brevities series. Our patrons like the specialties in these subjects. If they are not included then it is a failure. Hill Billies were the sensation here. Why not feature them in a subject? Running time, 19 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

SONGS THAT LIVE: Gus Edwards—Another good Pepper Pot. Will please most audiences. Running time, 11 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

YEAST IS YEAST: Tom Patricola—Short two-reel comedy with musical numbers. Tom Patricola dances, Hollywood Hawaiian beauties do several dance numbers with overhead shots. Good, but not extra good. Running time, 17 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada, Monte Vista, Colo. General patronage.

Serial

Universal

VANISHING SHADOW, THE: Onslow Stevens—On the seventh chapter and going good. Pleases the Saturday action fans.—J. O. Smith, Paramount and Dixie, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

Coming in

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

J. C. JENKINS--His COLYUM

Enid, Oklahoma

DEAR HERALD:

Enid is a right smart town. It has about 28,000 Sooners and a few Swedes, but not many. It is located right in the heart of a large wheat section and one can see green wheat fields in every direction as far as one can look, but you can't look far unless you get out of town.

The wheat is getting so large that some of it has begun to joint, and after it joints in the fall it is a gonner. The farmers are kicking because the government is killing cattle and hogs instead of sending them down here to pasture this wheat and keep it down until winter comes. Oklahoma don't think much of killing stock when they have so much pasture going to waste.

As we said before, Enid is quite a town, in fact it is the best town we have visited since we left Neligh, Nebraska, but Sam Blair of Belleville, Kansas, won't agree with us on this. In fact, Sam won't agree with anything except the Democratic ticket, but he didn't win anything off of us this last election, that's why he is still able to keep his theatre open. The whole family had gone away when we called, except one pup.

The north half of Oklahoma, all of Kansas and the south half of Nebraska is what is known as "the bread basket of America" and if you would remove that territory from the country it wouldn't be long until a loaf of bread would look as good to a hungry man as a screen star to a director, and the north half of Missouri, all of Iowa and the north half of Nebraska is the territory where the bulk of the hogs and cattle come from, and listen Charlie, if you should remove that territory from the country it wouldn't be long until the squeal of an old sow would sound as good to 'em as a symphony orchestra playing the "William Tell" overture. If you want to see green wheatfields come to Kansas and Oklahoma.

When we came through Nebraska we stopped at David City to call on our old friend A. F. Jenkins, who operates the theatre there. Those of you who are not acquainted with this guy might conclude from the name that he is a relative of ours, but you better not tell him so or you will start a roughhouse.

As Good as New

When we called on A. F. before, he was in bed recovering from an operation, that is, he thought he was recovering, anyhow he was able to talk to us and he said that the Doc had cut him open with a cleaver and had removed his gall appendix, a chunk of his liver, a part of his constitution and had filled him up with some wheels from a Model T, a few Bermuda onions, a Hubbard squash and some carrots, and had sewed him up with baling wire and now he was as good as new, if not a little better. That's the way it is with some of these exhibitors, this kind of an operation improves some of 'em, but not all. We are glad we are not an exhibitor, although they are about the best people we know of, for you seldom find one of 'em in the penitentiary, which goes to prove that our laws are becoming more lax every day.

A. W. Persons of the Lyric theatre at Crete, Nebraska, is considerably like M. Bemond at Ord, Nebraska, except that one is a little better than the other, but not much. A. W. said we ought to come around there some time and visit him. We did. We drove fifty miles out of our way to see him and we had a dandy visit with him and his estimable wife. A. W. is happy now for we renewed his subscription to the HERALD for him, there is nothing that makes 'em happy like that. We tried to find Burrows, the old patriarch who operates the Iris theatre, but he had gone down to the Blue River fishing for bullheads. We can't understand why an exhibitor don't eat liver once-in-a-while, and forget about these bullheads.

Cheering Up Henderson

The first Sooner we called on was W. T. Henderson of the Alvo theatre at Medford, Oklahoma. He had been without the HERALD for several months and he looked like he had lost the last friend he ever had, but he brightened up when he learned that we were out on parole and would renew his subscription. Medford is another town that is surrounded by wheatfields, and with Henderson operating the popular playhouse, she ought to come out all right.

Say, if you don't mind our changing the subject too abruptly, we'd like to say that we smoked for sixty years until last March when the Doctor told us we ought to quit, and we did, we haven't smoked since, and whenever anyone tells you that he can't quit smoking, you just say to him, "Oh phooey on you."

People who claim to know, tell us that the nearer one gets to the ocean the easier it is on his heart action, and if that is true we are going to work our way down to the lower Rio Grande and when we get to the Gulf of Mexico we are going to wade in and soak up our corns, and if you boys think you can struggle along without this colyum for a couple or three weeks we may take a layoff and rest up for a while, by gosh. There now, don't get panicky, maybe we won't take a layoff.

Art Record, the guy who presides over the destinies of the people of Hebron, Nebraska, by furnishing them with the best of movies, told us, when we called on him the other day, that the best place for us was right down next to the ocean, and he said, "Don't worry any, Colonel, about your bull colyum, we exhibitors have been fed up on bull so long that we won't miss it." There is no doggone sense in a man talking like that.

We are told that in the recent election Kansas voted against repeal of the 18th Amendment. Kansas has always remained dry (except when she wanted a drink) but that's all right, Kansas. Whenever you want a drink come over into Nebraska and the bootleggers will take care of you, for--

You can get a drink of bootleg booze

Upon which there is no tax,

And it will make you want to choose

To hit grandma with an ax.

And say, you Jayhawkers, don't worry about the officers, they have never done anything yet. A bootlegger looks like so many dollars to a prohibition enforcement officer.

When we were going down the street in Enid last night we heard a boy singing--

When Sally Ann Spooner

Fell in love with a Sooner

She wanted to elope with her crush,

But the poor timid Sooner

Said to Sally Ann Spooner

Don't be in such a belluva rush.

Here in Enid we met a couple of very high class gentlemen, Mr. Arlie Crites, who manages the Aztec theatre, and Mr. John Gray, who manages the Mecca theatre, both houses belonging to the Griffith Bros. at Oklahoma City. These two gentlemen showed us every courtesy, for which we are very thankful. Our guess is that the Griffith Bros. make a very wise selection of managers when they picked these two. We have met some very fine gentlemen managing houses in the Griffith circuit, in fact we have never found any yet who weren't Ace high. We hope to meet more of them. Thanks, boys, for your courtesy.

Monogram May Produce 52 for 1935-36 Season

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, on his return from the Coast this week, expressed the expectation that the company will increase its 1935-36 production schedule to 52 pictures. Proposal for an increased schedule will be submitted to Monogram's annual convention, set for Hollywood next April. Two sets of westerns, of eight features each, would be part of the schedule. The current schedule includes 20 features and eight westerns.

Mr. Johnston cited an increase in the number of Monogram theatre accounts as the reason for the possible schedule increase. He termed the account gain a vindication of the Monogram policy of producing family type entertainment.

Munitions Film Finished

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 249.—(A) Wherein lies the real evil of picture distortion known as the "keystone effect"? (B) Assume you are employed to take a position as chief projectionist in a theatre under construction. The exhibitor shows you the blueprints and asks what size of picture you recommend and why you recommend that size; also what kind of screen surface you suggest. He directs you to put your ideas in the form of a letter. Just what kind of letter would you write? We will assume the blueprints show the screen to be located on a stage 10 feet in back of the proscenium; that there will be 130 feet from the screen to the rear row of seats, and 23 feet from the screen to the front row of seats. The seating space will be 47 feet wide. There is a balcony. Projection angle is 16 degrees.

Answer to Question No. 243

Bluebook School Question No. 243 was: (A) May a motor-generator be rather heavily overloaded for a short space of time without injury? (B) Of what does a motor-generator set consist? (C) Why is it necessary to have the generator voltage higher than the arc voltage? (D) Why is ballast resistance necessary?

Moderately acceptable answers were received from S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; T. Van Valkenburg; C. Oldham; D. Ferguson, who also sent a correct answer to 242 too late for consideration; R. J. Arntson; H. Edwards; R. and K. Wells; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; T. R. Rosche; J. Wentworth; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; M. L. Spooner; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; D. Johnson; D. L. Danielson and T. Morris; N. L. Simms; F. H. and L. Klar; R. Geddings and L. Grant; P. and L. Felt; A. Richardson and N. L. Haynes; H. Haber and D. Breaston; T. Turk; G. Lathrop and N. L. Tomlinson; G. Harrison and F. Harlow; S. Johnson and E. Hodson; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Svalor; D. L. Kinklow; F. L. Benton and F. L. Five hundred and eighty-two answer Section A substantially as follows: "Yes, a motor-generator set may be overloaded from 75 to 100 per cent for a moment or two without injury."

However, what is by far the best answer comes from R. and K. Wells, who say, "Whether a motor-generator set may be heavily overloaded for a short space of time or not depends upon just what is meant by a 'short space of time,' whether the insulation of the set is in good condition, and what condition the set is in, generally speaking. We have seen sets that we do not believe would stand much overload for any space of time, short or long. They had already been abused by poor care until they certainly would not stand much more of it."

"We would answer the question by saying: Provided the set be itself well designed and constructed, and further provided it is in good condition throughout, it should stand up under even as much as a 100 per cent overload for one, two or even three minutes without sustaining any damage whatsoever."

An excellent answer, gentlemen. You may give teacher a nice red apple and pass up to the head of the class.

(B) I really should have left most of you out of the list on this one. Where on earth did you acquire the idea that the motor must be an a.c. one? G. E. Doe says, "A motor-generator set, as employed for projection work, may be for either of two purposes—(a) to reduce a.c. supply voltage and supply d.c. to the projector light source, or only to reduce 220 or higher d.c. line voltage to a lower voltage. Motor-generator sets have in the past been employed for the latter purpose, and I believe they still are in a few cases."

"In the first instance the set consists of an a.c. motor driving a d.c. generator; in the second instance, a 220 or higher voltage d.c. motor driving a d.c. generator of lower voltage. Usually the d.c. generator voltage is approximately 80, which permits the use of sufficient ballast resistance to permit striking the arc without a short; also to supply suitable stability to the arc."

"Such sets consist, aside from the two machines already named, of (a) a suitable cast-iron base upon which both motor and generator are mounted and are by it held in proper position with relation to each other (such a base is not absolutely necessary but is ordinarily used); (b) a suitable starting device; (c) an ammeter and a voltmeter, suitable switches, etc. I do not understand the question to mean that we are to name such items as brushes, armatures, commutators, etc."

J. T. Seiler sent in an answer to Section B that really was excellent. He says: "As a rule a motor-generator consists of a motor which is designed to operate from the commercial power lines found in the particular locality; i.e., a motor which has the proper voltage, phase and design as to frequency in a.c. motors to produce the required power and speed of rotation. The motor may of course be d.c., if one is required. This motor is mechanically coupled, usually direct, to the armature shaft of a direct-current generator. This generator may vary widely in design according to operating conditions to be encountered. In more modern machines of this type, both motor and generator are mounted on a solid subbase, to which the bases of the units are bolted. Some older types may be found that are individually mounted or even separated so that a belt drive may be employed. This type, however, falls in the category of the hand-fed arc lamp. If one holds a financial interest in the local power company, the installation of a belt connected M. G. set will help next year's dividend immeasurably. Motor-generator sets have associated equipment which allow the adjustment of the voltage delivered, as well as observation of the voltage delivered and current being passed through the external circuits."

(C) I again had to squeeze pretty hard to get some of you by on this one. T. Van Valkenburg says, "In the first place, if the generator and arc voltage be the same there would be no ballast resistance, and when the arc was struck it would mean a dead short-circuit, with probably a fuse gone haywire. Secondly, it would be impossible to get steady light from an electric arc without ballast resistance, a certain definite amount of which is necessary to steady or stabilize the arc."

(D) Odd as it seems, out of all the great mass of answers only one made a complete reply, and he was hopelessly wrong on all the others. J. L. Hammerley says, "Ballast resistance is necessary for three purposes, as follows: (1) To prevent a dead short when the carbons are brought together in striking an arc, (2) to steady the arc and enable us to get steady illumination from it, (3) to break down the difference in arc and line or supply voltage."

Fox West Coast Expands In Southern California

Fox West Coast is undertaking expansion, with the acquisition of several theatres, some of which have been dark. The new houses will bring the circuit's total in southern California to 180 active theatres.

The circuit is taking over the Fox West Coast houses in Hollywood, the M. Y. Herond circuit and all but one of the theatres operated by Pacific National Theatres.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended November 17, 1934, from 103 houses in 18 major cities of the country, reached $1,123,843, a decrease of $15,693 over the total for the preceding calendar week ended November 10, when 104 houses in 18 major cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,139,536.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Ground was broken last week for the new $200,000 theatre to be erected at Ashland avenue and Ninety-fifth street, which will be leased by Warner Bros. The house is being constructed by the Ashland-Ninety-fifth Street Properties, Inc., of which James Coston, Warner zone manager, is vice-president. Ronald Perry is the architect.

Film Row expectantly is awaiting the return of Jack Miller and other local nimrods in the hope of getting a free Thanksgiving dinner.

Great States Theatres, it is understood, has taken back from Mark Margolis several theatres in Hammond, Marion and Anderson, Ind.

Harry (Daddy) Goldson, who operates the Plaza, Gold Coast and Ideal theatres, is sunning himself down in Florida.

Charles Kamp has succeeded Fred Marton as office manager at the local United Artists exchange. Kamp was formerly with Balaban & Katz as manager of the Lakeside theatre. Harry Goldberg is a new member of the United Artists sales staff.

"Jane Eyre," handled by Security Pictures, will be the opening attraction at the McVickers theatre under the Jones, Linick & Schaefer regime, Irving Mandel announces. "Girl of the Limberlost" also is set for McVickers.

Decisions of the local grievance board last week were given on several cases. The Rivoli theatre, Monmouth, Ill., was ordered to discontinue bank nights on complaint filed by the Ada theatre of Monmouth. Glickmans Palace theatre was ordered to cease giving away tickets good for subsequent nights to children under 10 years for leaving the theatre immediately after the first matinee Sunday. Essaness was the complainant. Following a complaint filed by Great States Theatres, the Grand, at Peoria, was ordered to cease two-for-one admissions. A complaint brought by the Orpheum theatre, Galesburg, against the Tivoli, Knoxville, for charging 20-cent admissions with the privilege of two admissions for 35 cents, was dismissed when the Tivoli established that this had been a policy of the house for the past five years.

Nagel in Mascot Film

Conrad Nagel, after a year on the legitimate stage will return to the screen in a leading role in the Mascot production, "The Marines Have Landed."

Radio to Produce Six Musicals During Season

Radio Pictures plans production of six musicals as part of its schedule of 50 features. The first, already completed, is "The Gay Divorcee." Others are "Ho for Shanghai," "Adios Argentina," "Roberta," "Radio City Revels," and an untitled film featuring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers.

Mark Sandrich, who produced "The Gay Divorcee," was in New York in search of talent. He departed for the Coast the end of last week. "Musicals have definitely established themselves as entertainment," he declared, "and they will always have a definite place in the scheme of production"

16mm. Projector in Test

In a Chicago test of the new Filmo 100-Watt 16 mm. projector, made by Bell & Howell, Chicago equipment manufacturer, a 15x20-foot picture was thrown 110 feet, a 2-inch lens being used. The company claimed the result was the equal of projection with a 35 mm. arc projector.

Seattle Club Planned

A new social club in Seattle is in the process of formation. Headquarters will be at the New Washington Hotel. Neal East, manager of the local Paramount exchange, will be in charge of film exchange memberships. Al Rosenberg will handle theatre memberships, each heading a committee.

New Fox House Opens

The Hanlon theatre has been opened at Vallejo, Calif., as a unit in the Fox-West Coast Circuit. The house, formerly known as the Fox Virginia, has been completely remodeled and refurnished. Jack Ryan is manager.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

*An international association of showmen meeting weekly
in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress*

POISONING INITIATIVE

Constructive criticism from managers in the field will never become general or, for that matter, effective until the muzzle of fear is removed so that the theatremen may speak his piece in these pages without requesting his name not to be revealed.

Managers' Round Table Club in the past few weeks has published criticisms from showmen on various matters important to the proper conduct of this industry. But it is to be regretted that appended to certain of these contributions were requests for anonymity—a sad commentary indeed.

No good can come of this. Many ready reasons are at hand to be offered glibly by lightweight executives for the deplorable state in which the theatre now finds itself. But few if any have spoken of the crippling fear that poisons initiative, reduces able workers to automatons and reflects itself in lowered grosses.

There is little protection for the manager today—no stout arm upon which he may lean. The code-makers ignored him entirely and the rest of the industry enthusiastically has followed suit. Indifference and callousness on the part of superiors to his welfare have reduced this important worker in many cases to a point little removed from desperation.

Denied honest freedom of speech, held under heel, fear is causing the theatremen in spite of himself to become hard and sullen—qualities, so history records, generally ascribed to those engaged in every successful struggle for betterment of working conditions.

ON PICTURE LABELING

To be questioned are the results that may be looked for in the plan initiated by Warner Brothers and adopted by other circuits to label films with "adult" or "family" markings.

Offhand one might reason that this voluntary gesture can do nothing but strengthen the prestige of the motion picture among those who view much of Hollywood's finished product with alarm. But it may also be regarded as a cheerful willingness on the part of exhibitors to remove from the shoulders of parents the responsibility of selecting proper screen fare for their offspring. And any such indication obviously is fraught with many dangers.

For the information of theatremen, the general designation now adopted by Motion Picture Daily, and shortly by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, will no doubt prove helpful in arranging advertising and exploitation campaigns. Wider use, however, might tempt snipers from those elements ever eager to use the screen as a ready target.

GETTIER, HAVE A HEART

Yearning for Missouri in hog-killin' time, Terry Ramsaye, of Silvermine, Connecticut, a few weeks back broke out with mouth-dripping memories of Ozark vittles when the frost is on the ground. Acknowledging these sentiments now does Vogel Gettier, of Springfield, Mo., who further injects the "needles" thusly:

"Now boy, you're talkin' . . . it's 'Flaming Fall Festival' in the Ozarks . . . the smell of new made sorghum's in the air . . . fresh cider on the bench . . . name your ticket boy and wend your way westward . . . Bob White season is on and the old Remington is rarin to bark."

"DOCTOR P. A."

From Baltimore comes the tale of the eminent surgeon of Johns Hopkins Hospital who, noticing a patient enjoying the daily newspaper philosophies of Will Rogers, prescribed a dose of "Judge Priest" playing at Morris Mechanic's local Hippodrome Theatre. The patient took the prescription, enjoyed the picture and the newspapers broke the story.

The publicity was no doubt appreciated by Doctor, exhibitor and patient. But in taking the bows, one curtain might be spared for the original "doctor," the press agent who no doubt was responsible for planting the gag.

It seems that Manager Stanley Sumner, of the University Theatre, Cambridge, just a short step from the Harvard campus, offered his juvenile clientele a refund of a nickel if the youngsters would leave immediately after the showing of "Little Orphan Annie" and pass up the other picture on the double bill, which he thought more suitable for adult consumption. The idea proved successful and will be continued—that is, unless the grownups begin to conclude they are entitled to the same break.

Melniker Promotes Unusual Co-op Ad on "Transatlantic"

Though many Round Tablers have secured excellent cooperation from radio dealers on "Transatlantic," out of the ordinary is the double truck put over by Manager Ed Melniker for the date at the Grand, Atlanta, Ga. The display was taken by one dealer who devoted almost half the space to star cuts of Benny, Parker, the Boswell Sisters and scenes from the picture, tying all this into the advertising of the new models. Ed secured further breaks on a circulation buildup in one newspaper and additional ads from other radio merchants.

Clicking also for sizeable space was a cut of Benny and Mary Livingstone showing the radio stars reading copy of local paper, caption carrying theatre credits. And for lots of extra promoted space, Melniker worked a classified tieup with yet another daily.

The radio sponsors distributed the window strips and displays at all grocers, hotels and restaurants carrying mention of the picture in menus. Compelling attention was a broadcast stunt from atop the marquee (see photo) two nights ahead and opening day wherein song hits were played by a local name orchestra.

"Flirtation" Press Book

Plenty of care and loads of meat indicated in the Warner press book on the forthcoming "Flirtation Walk." Special features include five prepared national tieups, scores of specially posed star stills for newspaper and dealer displays, full page co-op ad, 10-day serialization, and a fictionization complete in one instalment. More than the usual number of ads also offered.

Many National Tieups Ready for "Green Gables"

The national sampler contest that proved so successful on "Little Women" is being adapted by RKO Radio on "Anne of Green Gables" in the form of what is called waffle weaving, said to be new in the field of needlework and which will be featured by many leading stores.

English classes will make a study of the picture through the guide issued to English departments by National Committee on Photoplay Appreciation and sample copy of the guide has already been sent out. Available also are special one sheets for schools and libraries portraying historic and educational highlights of the production. And what no doubt will appeal to children is a unique cutout idea involving the making of a green gable house from cardboard.

Whitaker Obtains Coverage on 'Wiggs'

The rarely used personal endorsement angle was put to work by Lucas and Jenkins' City Manager E. E. Whitaker for the premiere of "Mrs. Wiggs" at the Fox, Atlanta, Ga., this strong selling slant being used in trailer form and in other potent media.

For instance, in personal letters to thousands of Atlanta mothers, and as a feature of the advance screening for the Better Films Committee, P. T. A., school teachers and the press. Opinion cards were filled out by those in attendance and copy from them used in publicity. Cards were stamped and invited guests requested to mail them to theatre. In connection with this, school officials present were asked to have announcements made in classes on opening day. English teachers also assisted on essay contest.

As a tiein with local paper subscription drive, daily printed extra tear sheets for free distribution and other newspaper hook-ins were the advance series of "home spun" cartoon strips and the Wiggs Family puzzle contest.

Five different radio tieins were also made featured by dramatization by students from local university. Two effective street ballys were created, one being man carrying huge compo board book and another decorated truck with heads of stars bordering a giant cutout book, the featured display.

Distinctive and unique were the lobby decorations, two attractive 24s being topped by a reproduction of a scene from the picture (see photo) rustic lumber being used for the front of the house and stills placed back of the window for further atmosphere.

Watson Holds Crippled Kids "Limberlost" Show

A special matinee of "Girl of the Limberlost" was staged by Richard Watson, Gladmer Theatre, Lansing, Mich., in cooperation with the leading newspaper there and crippled children's home. Classified ad contest was run week prior.

Jeweler advertised a Marion Marsh diamond ring and displayed photo enlargements and stills of the star in their window. Letters were sent to all members of the clergy calling attention to the picture.

Book matches were distributed by cigar stores, restaurants and hotels; bookmarks in libraries and book stores and heralds given out in five and tens.

Click Campaign for Lower Price Policy

A campaign to put over a lower price policy at the Schenley, a Pittsburgh neighborhood house, is credited to Don Wermuth of Joe Feldman's Warner publicity department and Manager Harry Thomas, their efforts returning evident success in the first week of the new price range with a gratifying rise in the number of admissions sold.

Without extensive newspaper facilities other than nearby weekly and semi-weekly college publications, these showmen concentrated their ammunition otherwise, securing the widest possible coverage with the distribution of advertising literature of various kinds.

Folders were put into every home and apartment in the drawing area through a uniformed crew of house-to-house workers whose movements were systematized so that a close check could be made, cards and folders planted in all fraternity and sorority houses at both nearby universities, lists being supplied by college officials. Adequate displays were also obtained in stores and eating places patronized by students.

Many radio tieups were effected, a plane with p. a. system broadcasting at local football game, and daily announcements made over local stations in exchange for star stills given free to listeners-in. In addition to publicity stories carried in the downtown papers, including generous mention made by one of the leading columnists, gratis display ads were obtained in exchange for short trailer plugging the dailies.

Entire theatre and face of building were decorated with flags, bunting and drapes a few days ahead and marquee of nearby house in same chain was also given over to announcements, this sign work being done by talented usher at no cost.

Inadvertently—

For their excellent campaign on "Affairs of Cellini" at the State, St. Louis, Manager H. W. (Chick) Evens and Jimmy Harris inadvertently were not credited in the Honorable Mention list for the Quigley October Competition. Pardon the error, gentlemen.

Two Outstanding Exploitations

Ingenious, audacious and admirable are only a few of the fitting adjectives that may be applied to the featured exploitations that distinguished the entries in the Quigley October competitions of Award winner Manager Bob Suits, Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa., on MGM's "What Every Woman Knows" and Manager Sig Solomon, Regent Theatre, Newark, N. J., who was voted the only First Mention, on RKO's "Richest Girl in the World". The headlined stunts put on by these theatremen were their own creations, and the following is a brief description of what they did.

• • • • •

Suits Ties Cinderella Stunt To "What Every Woman Knows"

Two weeks ahead, local newspapers began playing up story of a "slave girl" who had been sold to a backwoods family operating a quarry. Girl, now 17, had never seen a city, but one movie, had never worn girl's clothes, etc. Brought into court, girl made page one copy until her name was widely known. As Suits' playdate neared, he suggested girl be brought to Reading for shopping and sightseeing tour and that she be shown "what every woman knows" about the city and shopping district.

Paper went strong for this with five days of page one breaks with photographs, all captions and stories including title of picture that girl was to see as guest of the theatre. Schedule was followed in which visitor was greeted by Mayor, given complete outfit of new clothes, had police escort and presidential suite at best hotel. Most commendable was this publicity barrage, especially since Reading papers are reported to be a bit conservative where any widespread theatre exploitation is concerned.

On day of visit, Suits put over double truck with title of picture as streamer tying into copy that girl would visit all stores whose ads appeared on the pages, theatre ad spotted in center of display. Three days ahead all cooperating merchants placed window cards announcing time girl would appear, posters carrying theatre credits.

Solomon Promotes Doris Duke As Judge in "Richest" Contest

As part of his campaign on "Richest Girl in the World", Sig Solomon put over an essay contest on the following question: "If the richest girl in the world visited you, how would you entertain her?" Winner was awarded diamond studded wrist watch and entertained as befits the world's richest person.

Because she is said to be the world's richest girl, Sig, through some important contacts, was able to obtain permission from Miss Doris Duke to use her name as a judge in the contest, the widely publicized young lady also agreeing, if possible, to visit the theatre on opening night.

Naturally, this was broadcast in many ways via trailer, heralds, newspapers, etc., and in spite of Sig's house being a neighborhood situation he also obtained news stories in the downtown Newark newspapers. Although Miss Duke could not appear as planned, all entries were addressed to her in care of the theatre, over 500 being received.

In addition to wrist watch awarded on stage to winner by prominent congressman, winner was given trip to Warner Brothers Brooklyn studio, was guest of theatre in New York, made appearance at the Regent and was honored at Hallowe'en party.

A CHALLENGE FROM THE LOEW CIRCUIT. Commenting on the excellent showing made by the Loew managers in the Quigley Awards competition for October, Oscar A. Doob, director of advertising and publicity of Loew Theatres, states that a still higher score will be rolled up by the Loew theatremen in this month's competition. Says Mr. Doob:

"With a flock of exceptional pictures due at our houses in November, the Loew ball-carriers are going to cop all the Awards. That's a challenge you can broadcast to all other circuits, independents and whatnots."

This definite challenge indicates the widespread participation to be looked forward to from the far-flung Loew circuit. Evidently these showmen expect to go places fast, but whether or not they will outstep the field in grabbing off the lion's share of the prizes remains to be seen. Two weeks still remain to forward campaigns for November consideration, as the deadline for this month has been set for midnight of Thursday, December 6, which gives ample time for all showmen who wish to accept the challenge of the Loew ad head.—A-MIKE.

$1,500 Cash Prizes Offered On "Imitation of Life"

As we go to press, Terry Turner, of Quaker Oats, announces a new exploitation contest on Universal's "Imitation of Life," sponsored by "Aunt Jemima's Pancakes"—a Quaker Oats product, and in which at least $1,500 is offered in cash prizes to exhibitors and other theatremen. Further details on this next week.

For the information of entrants in the "Six Day Bike Rider" contest, Turner states that it is intended to award the prizes as soon as possible after the decisions have been reached by the judges so winners can have the cash in time for Christmas.

Rain Effects Heighten "Romance" Lobby Display

Actual rain effects were employed by Manager Joe Feldman and publicist Arthur Cohn for lobby displays on "Romance in the Rain" at the Earle, Philadelphia, following the press suggestions that running water be used to create this illusion.

Accompanying photo illustrates how the idea was used on inside lobby above exit doors. A white screen was set against a scenic background and in front of screen was placed a sheet of plate glass over which a stream of water coursed to a trough below. Lantern slide flashed the title through water and glass onto the screen, rainbow effects helping to heighten the illusion.

Newspaper and Merchants Co-op on Baseball Contest

A stunt that can either be filed away for next year's baseball season or still used for football games was that put over by Merrill F. Hanna at the Hollywood Theatre, Detroit, Mich., in the form of a double truck in which the newspaper offered 50 free tickets to the theatre in cooperation with the advertisers. Each merchant's ad carried picture of one of the baseball stars with tie-in copy.

Contestants were asked to list the advertisers together with the name of the ball player whose picture appeared in each ad, plus the batting average of the particular player up to the time the ad appeared. Tickets were awarded to those coming nearest to the correct answer.

Animates Clown Cutout For Street Float Bally

The ingenuity that seems to be the stock in trade of most able showmen was brought into play by Manager F. D. Padgett, Capitol, Clearwater, Fla., who gathered a lot of old circus posters from vacant stores and barns which had advertised the local appearance of a tent show some weeks back. Padgett removed the name of the circus and plain wrapping paper was pasted over the old date strips upon which was lettered title of picture and date.

For an animated street bally, a five foot clown cutout was mounted on a pivot on a platform of a flat-bottomed truck and under each side of the bottom cross piece were installed coil springs taken from an old bed. Small wire was connected from top of the cutout to the driver seat and by pulling on the wire at intervals, the clown rocked from

What also proved another crowd stopper was the use of a vacant store window in which a thin gauze screen was hung and from the rear, in reverse, house artist Ed Hamilton with his projection machine projected photos and cards with theatre copy.

Dunne Fan Club Attends Opening

Yarborough, who planned the entire affair, has made arrangements with the fan club for circularizing of friends and mouth-to-mouth advertising on all forthcoming Dunne pictures.

Calcutta Critics Aid Crasto's Campaign

There are a number of newspaper picture critics in Calcutta, India, with sizeable followings, and for this reason J. Remi Crasto featured his advance on "Flying Down to Rio" at the Elphinstone with the unique slant of reproducing cuts with the handwritten endorsements of the reviewers in especially prepared newspaper ad. For two weeks previous to this flash, Crasto had built up further interest with additional publicity and a spirited teaser campaign.

Reported as unusually effective were the window displays in the many stores selling records of the song hits, stills and posters in the background being attached with ribbon streamers to records resulting in a wide demand which speedily exhausted all stocks.

At a popular race meet, Crasto had yellow envelopes printed with copy reading "Next Saturday Hot Tip," the tip of course being on the picture. These were placed in all the cars parked at the track and also distributed after the races.

Unusual also was the garden effect arranged in the lobby and inside the theatre wherein fresh flowers were secured each day, the decorations said to have caused much curiosity among the passersby many of whom stopped to enjoy the exhibit. Handbills in vernacular as well as in English also helped to spread the word and during the engagement further stories were carried regarding the strong demand for seats.

Girls Plug "Dames"

A little different way of putting over the song hits from "Dames" was that used by J. L. Thomas, State Theatre, Mt. Carmel, Pa., when he promoted a street car for three hours each day, three days prior and filled it with girls. Car itself was bannered and it went through streets, girls sang the tunes.

Balcony Hanger Plugs Advance on "Walk"

Skip Weshner, before moving to Philadelphia, forwarded a shot of the 21-foot balcony hanger already installed to excite interest on coming date at the Milwaukee Warner of "Flirtation Walk." Accompanying photo shows blowup of star still and fluttered names that formed top center of the flash.

Title was arched across the foyer, flanked with military figure cutouts of Keeler and Powell. Steps on each side carried stills and copy, entire display highlighted with hidden spots and other indirect lighting.

As part of his third anniversary celebration, Joe Goetz, RKO Paramount, Cincinnati, Ohio, arranged to have orphan kiddies from a convalescent home attend a showing of "Treasure Island." Goetz reports the occasion created city-wide commendation from both trade and public and was one of the best good-will builders he's ever used.

"Dames" Puzzle Contest Clicks for Walter Morris

A picture poem puzzle contest with gratis tickets given for "Dames" was one of the stunts put on with local paper by Walter Morris, Stanley Theatre, Baltimore, Md., before he left that spot. Local golf course cooperated during one of their week-end tournaments by placing posters in prominent spots near club house and making frequent announcements over p. a.

Tinted photos of Keeler were distributed in lobby, and stills in men's haberdasher window (see photo) were used as were bumper cards on taxis. Walter also erected a special 28-foot electric upright sign over marquee with letters three feet wide spelling out title.

Prior to election time, Taylor Myers, Loew's Broad, Columbus, Ohio, planted window cards with copy urging citizens to vote for "Big Hearted Herbert" informing them that the big rally would be held at the theatre. Halloween falling few days ahead of opening Taylor staged a torchlight election parade with marchers carrying banners. Paraders distributed literature similar to political campaign card with theatre copy. Vacant store window near theatre dressed up to resemble campaign headquarters also plugged theatre and date. Man dressed in full dress pushed baby carriage in which was concealed phonograph playing laugh record to stress comedy angle of picture.

Kann and Addison Work Campaign on "Treasure"

A sizable raft of snappy angles were put across by George Kann and H. M. Addison, Jr., for "Treasure Island" at the Willard, Woodhaven, L. I., featured by a number of "hunts" and tieups that received plenty of cooperation from the two weekly neighborhood papers and local merchants.

Coloring contest was used for two weeks ahead in both papers, which also put over "hunts" in co-op pages, prizes and passes given for correct lists of misspelled words in each ad. Another "hunt" idea that brought good returns was the distribution of thousands of small yellow envelopes, all containing copy on the picture and quite a few prizes and passes. The papers went strong for this, and each participating merchant carried window strips, copy including dates.

Parade was held for newsboys who marched to theatre behind bannered cars, floats, brass band, etc., paper carrying page

MORE ON THE PRESS BOOK

Below are the first reactions from the field on the press book article written by one of the members and published in the November 10th issue. Opinions were requested from the various advertising, home office heads, picture company heads, as well as managers. The letter from one of the latter by his request remains anonymous.—A-MIKE.

INVITES LETTERS FROM MANAGERS

I think the suggestions made in the article on press sheets are most constructive and I have turned this article over to our press sheet department.

Since our advertising and publicity department is primarily a service organization, we are naturally glad to revise our press sheets as is most consistent with the best interest of the exhibitors, and any exhibitors who wish to write detailed analyses of press sheets and describe what they wish eliminated or what they wish added, we are only too glad to hear from them.—ROBERT M. GILLHAM, ADVERTISING AND PUBLICITY DIRECTOR, PARAMOUNT PICTURES, NEW YORK.

ROUND TABLER MAKES SOME SUGGESTIONS

Your open discussion regarding the press sheet angle is about the best thing you have started to date.

Any common sense manager or ad man realizes that it is a damn tough job for an ad department to turn out 30 to 50 press sheets yearly. I can imagine that each department head and his assistants go stale from time to time and do a poor job, once in a while; however, that is no excuse for faking which to date becomes a common habit.

Many tieups are created for the "show" runs and the exploiter takes it for granted that it is a national hookup. Result is that the so-called sponsor knows nothing about the stunt.

Another common fault of the pressbooks is release dating. By that I mean tieups are created for a certain period, say from September to October. The first run houses in certain sections can't take advantage of the tieup because of a later run and the manager will waste a lot of time contacting sponsors to no avail. I believe the exploitation departments should set the date of the tieup in their books.

I offer this fact as a suggestion and not as a criticism. There has not been one press sheet to date which offers a complete ad campaign for the "town" trade. Each ad section appears to be keyed to big city business. I suggest that the ad writers adjust their ads and accessories to assist the manager of a town house in this fashion.

Mats:—Set the ad to include space for second feature or shorts; set up two or three opening day ads breaking down to subsequent running days. Have two sets of mats—one set for program, one set for ads. In this way, managers can use reverse ads without toning them down. United Artists is about the only company realizing this fact and turns out very effective ads. Last but not least, on the question of mats, I for one am going to discontinue the use of exchange mats unless the ad departments realize that space costs money. It appears that they can only turn out an effective ad by setting up a quarter page ad.

When I look at the illustrations of their paper, I sometimes wonder whether or not they would not make better ads. Look at them closely and judge for yourself. They are simple and simplicity seems to be the best attention getter of the day.

In my opinion, Mike, what is really needed is a return to the old time bally, with all this high class lush thrown in the can. You can't kid the public these days, but many a manager can kid himself by becoming too conservative in his operation. People look to the theatre for entertainment and in my opinion the bally is part of that entertainment. My patrons demand that and are getting it. They get just as much entertainment out of monkeys riding a bicycle in the lobby as they get out of a good comedy. So does the manager get a great kick out of a good press sheet.

Tell these guys at the home office to take off the high hat and come down to real old fashioned showmanship, and they can go home and sleep nights with a clear conscience because they will really earn their dough.—ANONYMOUS

ASKS COMMENT ON NEW BOOKS

The manager who wrote anonymously in the issue of Nov. 10 on the subject of pressbooks, knows what he wants and I believe he also knows how to get it. We will try to make Columbia pressbooks more useful to all exhibitors. We think managers will like the posters, the ads, and the exploitation in our two newest pressbooks. One is for "The Captain Hates the Sea" and the other for "Broadway Bill."

If the gentleman who wrote the article in the Herald will write me a letter of comment on these two pressbooks, we will try to make the following ones even more to his measure.—HERSCHEL STUART, ADVERTISING AND PUBLICITY DIRECTOR, COLUMBIA PICTURES DISTRIBUTING CO., INC., NEW YORK.

ERNOON—THE LEXINGTON LEADER—NOVEMBER 3, 1934

Now They're Aides Of Gov. Laffoon

Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, world-renowned film comedians, recently were made Kentucky colonels on the staff of Gov. Laffoon. The comedians are headlined in the forthcoming RKO picture, "Kentucky Kernels," which starts Sunday at the Ben Ali theatre. Ralph Houpe, a Henry Clay high school student, drew the cartoon above. The showing of the Wheeler-Woolsey picture at the Ben Ali theatre will mark the world premiere of the production.

Anna Bell Plants Cartoon In Many Newspapers

Recently a story and cut was run on the appointment of screen comics Wheeler and Woolsey as Kentucky Colonels, Bob Woolsey accepting the new titles on behalf of the well known team. The stunt was worked out by Anna Bell Ward for the world premiere of "Kentucky Kernels" at the Ben Ali, Lexington, and as additional blanket coverage, Anna Bell planted the three column, eleven inch gratis cartoon illustrated above in ten newspapers, local and in surrounding areas. Ralph Houpe is the artist.

Two Colonels in open face carriage with driver and footman in uniforms made "stopper" street bally, banner copy on rig reading, "we're racing to the Ben Ali, to see, etc., etc." Lobby in keeping with the importance of the event, special heralds, and a raft of other smart ideas were put over by Anna Bell to announce the opening.

Katz Builds Up Dance For Returns on "Divorcee"

Although Ben Katz turned in his usual adequate quota of selling slants on "Gay Divorcee" at the Warner, Milwaukee, he highlighted the possibilities of the Continental, the featured dance in the picture, building up a solid campaign on this angle.

Ben augmented his regular trailer with additions of clips showing the "Carioca" and "La Cucaracha" dances, working these into a finale on the new picture's step. Displays were also planted at various ballrooms, contacts made with music stores and hotels' orchestras, radio transcripts used on two stations, and dance angle was further promoted in half-page co-op ad.

Recent Highlights On "Barretts" Dates

Advertising the date on "Barretts" at the Palace, Dallas, Texas, as a world premiere, Manager James O. Cherry aided by MGM Exploiteer E. B. Coleman signalized the engagement as something more than just another opening by selling reserved seats, a stage show also being put on for the first performances.

Giant spot and searchlights played on the lobby and a radio broadcast from the theatre was featured. Katherine Cornell, star of the stage play cabled her greetings, message being blown up for lobby display and used for special newspaper story.

In Cumberland, Md.—

MGM Exploiteer Norman Pyle planted a classified contest for the date at the Embassy, said to be the first time local paper had co-operated on an idea of this kind. Pyle also tied in on a missing word contest with a number of merchants who bought space in an eight-page giveaway, each ad featuring a missing word, with guest tickets given as prizes. Front page of herald was devoted to theatre ads and details of contest.

In Minneapolis, Minn.—

Exploiteer Morris Abrams put on a street stunt that rated a notice in popular newspaper column. As part of the campaign at the Century, Abrams had man stopping people and asking them the way to Wimpole Street, it going over so well that the story describing the gag included the name of the picture.

And in Montreal—

George Rotsky had holdover business on the picture at the Palace and continued his exploitation for the second week by arranging further broadcasts which included air dramatization. Cigarette company in exchange for lucky number contest at theatre sponsored program. Extra windows were obtained and increased business secured from publicity in the Jewish press on newsreel picture on opening of new Jewish hospital.

For his advance on the first week, George tied in with leading pet store on "Flush," the dog in picture, store using big displays. Prominent paper put out 50th anniversary number among the features on woman's page being pictures of Shearer and March in costumes from the picture to emphasize styles of long ago. Rotsky also promoted a department store to use still of stars in newspaper jewelry ad.

AN OUTSTANDING KID SHOW

What Manager Kendrick Did at the Enright, Pittsburgh, to Increase Attendance on Saturday Mornings

What is reported to have become one of the outstanding Saturday morning children's shows in the Pittsburgh area is that put across by Manager H. M. S. Kendrick, recently assigned by Warner division director Harry M. Kalmine to take over the helm at the 4,000-seat Enright Theatre.

Kendrick found bright prospects on his arrival with the endorsement of the Junior Matinee Council of the State Federation of Women's Clubs under whose auspices the shows were given, and this support confirmed his opinion that the idea could be built up to real box-office strength.

As a start, the performance which previously had consisted entirely of approved films was added to with the cooperation of the Fairgrieve School, said to be one of the most exclusive dancing schools in the district. From among the pupils, the most talented were allowed to present their offerings from the stage for a brief period each week.

Costumed Organist Featured

Next, Kendrick engaged an organist who outfitted in real cow-hand costume, was dubbed "Cowboy" Johnny Mitchell, and in character performed for the pleasure of the children. From time to time, Mitchell changes his front, dressing as a clown, mounted policeman, etc., and already is a definite click with the juvenile audience.

Community singing was then introduced with slides, song leader selected by Kendrick each week from the audience. The same procedure was followed for the stage show, a boy acting as M. C. for the first half and a girl for the last. Recently a discovery was made of a nine year old youth, singer, dancer and musician, son of a neighborhood doctor. Having a good stage presence in addition, the lad has been appointed as the regular M. C. and has greatly added to the enjoyment of the weekly stage show.

Boy Scouts Cooperate

With the inclusion of these extra features, attendance began to mount so that extra ushers were required. As the house budget did not permit the added expense, a local Boy Scout troop was contacted and a safety patrol in uniform assists at street crossings before and after the show and in the theatre during the two hour performance. To further publicize the program through the sponsorship of the club women, Kendrick reports it is possible to distribute circulars to all schools in his section by sending the literature directly to the Superintendent of the schools and to the many private academies nearby.

The stage show usually runs from 15 to 18 minutes, and after the performance the juvenile performers are allowed to meet the audience in the mezzanine. As an added attractor, the youthful artists are permitted to wear their stage costumes at these gatherings.

The youngsters receive the same services as adults, such as checking facilities, matron service, free telephone service, etc. Most amusing is that due to the great number of pet dogs which accompany their young masters and mistresses to the theater, a checking service had to be inaugurated to keep the frisky canines under control.

As a result of this showman's efforts, in the 20 odd weeks of building up the Saturday morning matinee, attendance has jumped to an average of 1,500 children plus the usual number of adults. As the house opens daily at noon, the kid show starts at 10 a. m. and continues for the best part of two hours.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified.

ABOUT A FEW BIRDS

In one of those periodic leaflets which flutter across the Hollywood scene, known as Cinema Hall-Marks, Mr. John C. Moffitt, also motion picture editor of the Kansas City Star, opens his weekly contribution with: "In the midst of the current hullabaloo for the movie to be clean (meaning sentimental and unrealistic), the intellectuals who lured the magnates along the primrose path of realism and literature now turn and lambast the poor moguls with carping and quibbling that would drive a statue daft."

"For instance, the New York Sun requires a column and a half to record the distress of Lee S. Crandall of the Bronx Zoo, who upon paying his 40 cents to see 'Treasure Island', has it all turned to dross because he saw a macaw from Brazil sharing the jungles of Jim Hawkins' mythical island with a cassowary bird from Australia. . . ."

In the first place, even if Mr. Moffitt is so far from his catechism, he might get closer to the Production Code, with which he appears equally unfamiliar. When he decides that "the current hullabaloo" means a demand that the pictures be "sentimental and unrealistic" he betrays almost as great an understanding of the current situation as that held by Mr. Ernst Lubitsch, also vociferous about Code restrictions, without having read the Code. And when Mr. Moffitt decides that a feature writer for the New York Sun, estimable paper though it be, is one of "the intellectuals who lured the magnates along the primrose path of realism" he is being funny. One more crack like that from Mr. Moffitt of the Kansas City Star and we shall have to ask Mr. Andre Sennwald of the New York Times and Mr. Richard Watts, Jr., of The New Theatre, the New York Herald Tribune and The Literary Digest, to move over and make room.

DEMOCRACY and "ART"

"... NOTHING is so starkly stupid as the vague new notion that everything is for everybody. . . ." observes Mr. G. K. Chesterton, the eminent British commentator, in a discussion of "clean pictures" in the New York American.

It is well that Mr. Chesterton has said this. It cannot be said too often concerning the motion picture, which in the present status of the industry—rather of the industry than the art—is made "for everybody", or at least is delivered to everybody.

If pictures of special message, of special purpose, of sophistication, in the proper rather than the popular meaning of the word, could be delivered to the audiences to which they are suited—and to no other audiences—the screen would be well away from many of its current problems.

Our marketing machine must sell to everybody who can be induced to buy, regardless of the fitness of the wares. Until that condition is changed by the force of the inevitable if slow evolutions of the industry, it will be necessary to safeguard the industry by restricting and controlling its art.

And controlling the art, or restricting it if you will, means nothing more than that the nudity of a Pompeian frieze is permitted to a museum, a textbook, an art manual, but is not looked upon as decoration for a candy box to go in Schrafft's show case.

It will be easier to make better motion pictures when they do not have to be made, as now, for everybody.

Meanwhile the screen's decency must be not the decency of any smart set, any intellectual or artistic or scientific minority, but instead the decency to which the great commonality aspires and to which it publicly, if not privately, adheres. And that is just business. This amusement industry is a business—a very good business. If any "art" gets into it, that's velvet.

ALL MOTION PICTURE

THE conspicuous box office success of "The First World War", brought to the screen by the labors of Mr. Truman Talley, and graced by the ministrations of Mr. Laurence Stallings, is one of those rare demonstrations of the power and scope of the medium of the motion picture, so often boasted and so seldom delivered. In this production is the utilization of the medium for a product that in no manner could have been achieved or approximated by another form of expression. It is also interesting as being decidedly pure cinema, in that the picture says it all in pictures, while the words of the accompanying discourse truly accompany and parallel the picture to which they relate without directly invading or occupying any part of the pictorial job of narration. The technique is illuminating in the light of today's talking picture art which has yet to find proper relation between action and dialogue. "The First World War" would still be a great picture if the sound strip were left off, and to any mildly literate audience it would still convey its message without words.

"BIG STEVE", a Cossack who came this way from out of Siberia a few years ago, is back tending our Connecticut garden affairs, moving stones and hewing wood, again. He is rather a philosopher. When we expressed surprise at his return with: "I thought you were making twenty dollars a day on piece work at the tire factory," he had the simple and final answer: "Yes, mistaire, I get rich but I never see sky."

THIS WEEK ---

BOARD DECISION

In a decision last week the Buffalo grievance board declared the transfer of a theatre from husband to wife, while both apparently continue operation, does not affect operation of existing film contracts. The case involved transfer of the Majestic, Rochester, from Morris Zimmerman to his wife, the complainant having been MGM. The board called the maneuver subterfuge, holding the contract must be performed by Zimmerman and his wife. . . .

CANADIAN CLOSINGS

Only 6.7 per cent of Canada's 883 wired film houses are closed, according to official Toronto figures. Ontario, one closed of 288; Quebec, 18 closed of 146; British Columbia, one closed of 94; Midwest, 19 closed of 120; Maritime Provinces, 11 closed of 93. . . .

NEW THEATRE

General improvement is further indicated in the announcement of plans for a new Toronto theatre, to cost $70,000, for the Parkway Theatre Company. . . .

SAFETY FILMS

Allentown, Pa., police have plans afoot to sentence violators of traffic ordinances to "go to the movies," there to see films relative to motoring safety. Already a projector has been obtained, and safety films are sought. Violators would be fined $5, required to attend the pictures at night. . . .

$2 VERDICT

The Artkino Guild, operating a foreign film house in Boston, last week was awarded $1 on each of two $100,000 libel suits brought against the Industrial Defense Association, anti-Communist organization, and Edward H. Hunter, secretary. The suit charged the organization with representing the plaintiff as radical. . . .

AFRICA PROMOTED

The government of South Africa and the South African railways plan production of news films of natives of the country which are intended for world distribution as a method of promoting travel to South Africa by foreigners. The proposed productions are to be made under the supervision of the publicity and travel department of the South African railways. . . .

ROXY AIDE

Mrs. J. D. Williams has been appointed as assistant to Samuel Lionel (Roxy) Rothafel, under whose operating hand the large Mastbaum theatre in Philadelphia will open on December 24. Last week police were called to handle 2,000 applicants for jobs as Roxy ushers, the advertisement calling for inexperienced boys. . . .

SIR ARTHUR PINERO

Sir Arthur Pinero, one of the most noted of contemporary dramatists, died in a London nursing home late last week after an operation, at the age of 79. Born in 1855, Pinero left the study of law for the Edinburgh theatre at the age of 19, began to write plays for his own performances, and continued on to a success which included "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and "Trelawney of the Wells," two of the most popular of his large output. . . .

NEW BLANK HOUSE

A. H. Blank, president of Tri-State Theatre Corporation, Des Moines, will operate the 600-seat Roosevelt theatre, a suburban Des Moines house nearing completion and expected to open within a month, which will mark his first venture in the suburban theatre field. The theatre is owned by T. I. Stoner. . . .

RIALTO TO STAY

Despite the purchase by new interests into the Rialto theatre and building property on Broadway in New York, and their desire to add several stores and make the theatre smaller, no new structure will be erected to replace the present theatre for at least one year, or until November 1, 1935, since the lease of Arthur Mayer, now operating the house, has until that date to run. . . .

GOOD REACTION

Considerable good advertising came to T. A. Mangan, manager of the Stanley in Chester, Pa., recently, when, during the evening performance, a woman patron was so carried away by the filmed attitude of a tyrannical father toward his daughter that she cried aloud, "You devil, you!" A startled audience burst into roars of laughter, and the episode was carried over the entire city. . . .

IMPATIENT CHILDREN

On hand early to attend a matinee at the Broadway theatre, Lawrence, Mass., last Saturday, the admission to which was a bag of vegetables designed for charity, 500 children, unaware of an unavoidable postponement of the performance, became impatient after a long wait, expressed that impatience in action. Storming the theatre, the children broke windows and doors, damaged the foyer, before they were dispersed by the police. . . .

FILM SENTENCE

A unique ruling by Judge Samuel D. Levy of Brooklyn, N. Y., domestic relations court last week required the parents of a nine-year-old girl to see "Little Friend," Gaumont-British picture of marital difficulty and its effect on a small daughter, then playing at the Fox theatre. The jurist expressed the belief that films have become a great factor in the life of the general public. . . .

DISTURBED PROGRAM

The program at the Earle in Washington last week was disturbed when it was discovered the weekly broadcast of Waring's Pennsylvanians band was due when the orchestra was normally on the stage. To overcome the difficulty, the theatre, for the first time, used the stage presentation to close the day's program. . . .

WARNER THEATRE BID

A total of $1,645,000, with a maximum cash settlement of $240,000, was offered last week by Warner for four Philadelphia theatres owned by the William Friehofer and Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger estates, it was revealed at a hearing relative to the advisability of selling. Warner's Lionel Friedman said the company had placed $25,000 on deposit, with the understanding it would not be responsible for payment of liabilities. . . .

CONTEST WINNER

Declared grand winner from among the five who were selected recently in the national Monogram-Agfa contest for potential feminine players was Harriet de Bussman, 18-year-old Kansas City model, local beauty contest. . . .

The TEN BIGGEST MONEY MAKING STARS of 1933-34

The independent exhibitors judge the box office ranking of 208 players

WILL ROGERS' steady ascendance to the top rung of public favor cinematic is the story told by the independent exhibitors of all Continental United States in naming "The Ten Biggest Money Making Stars of 1933-34", in response to MOTION PICTURE HERALD's annual canvass of the box-office. [Survey standings, in full, appear on the following pages.]

It is a story of tickets sold, not opinions ventured, a story of the players writing most of the black ink into the theatre owner's books, not of the screen personalities appealing to the exhibitor personally, though the results doubtless bespeak that majority preference also. The question asked of the independent theatre owners and managers was: "Please list the ten players whose pictures drew the greatest number of patrons to your theatre from September 1, 1933, to September 1, 1934." The answer is therefore a summarization of box-office.

The vote is essentially an independent exhibitor verdict of player popularity among the patrons of the independent theatres. Ballots were limited to showmen without producer or distributor connections, direct or indirect, with the objective of discovering the facts of the box-office itself, by eliminating any extraneous factors which might influence the interpretation of admission totals by the manager of a producer-owned theatre.

For the motion picture season of 1931-32 Will Rogers stood sixth in the final vote, second among the men players; for 1932-33 he was ranked second only to the winner and was first among the men. The latest poll showed Rogers leading all players, the first time a male player had won first place. The 1933-34 survey set another precedent: with Clark Gable as runner-up, the box-offices for the first time showed men taking both first and second rankings in the exhibitor poll.

The ten largest number of citations for 1933-34 went to the following, in the order

The Winners

1. Will Rogers
2. Clark Gable
3. Janet Gaynor
4. Wallace Beery
5. Mae West
6. Joan Crawford
7. Bing Crosby
8. Shirley Temple
9. Marie Dressler
10. Norma Shearer of total times mentioned by the exhibitors:

- | | |
|------------------|-------------------|
| 1. Will Rogers | 6. Joan Crawford |
| 2. Clark Gable | 7. Bing Crosby |
| 3. Janet Gaynor | 8. Shirley Temple |
| 4. Wallace Beery | 9. Marie Dressler |
| 5. Mae West | 10. Norma Shearer |

For the first time a child player was given ranking among the first ten, and that a child star who had made her initial appearance on the screen in 1932. The replies to the 1933-34 questionnaire reflected the meteoric rise of Shirley Jane Temple, Fox contract star born April 23, 1929, more graphically than do the myriad news and feature articles of the past year or so, from the Baby Burlesque short product of Educational starting in 1932 through her Fox and Paramount pictures in 1933 and this year. Five-year-old Shirley is in eighth place in the final ranking.

Number of Mentions Decides

Final standings were determined by the total number of times a player was mentioned, regardless of that player's relative specified position among the ten nominations. This system was used as the true mirror of the voting because, while exhibitors were given the opportunity of naming the players specifically in the order of their relative box-office strength, some replied that the sequence they indicated was only approximately based upon actual box-office criteria individually, and some pointed out definitely that their selections had not been made in any order of relative importance of each of the ten.

Taken into consideration also was the factor that the box-office evolutions necessarily were founded upon the product in which the players appeared, the exhibitors naming the players according to their pictures which had caused the ticket reels to spin the fastest. The problem raised by that situation is one not of whether the player makes the picture or the picture makes the player, but rather to what extent the player once made a star by previous pictures' success will draw patronage to his or her latest.

A tribute to the affection of the public for Miss Dressler, both as a personality and as an artist of the screen, was paid the winner of first place in both previous years. Her death came July 28, 1934, after three months of retirement forced by her illness. "Dinner at Eight," with official release date Jan. 12, 1934, had been roadshown for some time before that; "Her Sweetheart, Christopher Bean," released Nov. 17, 1933, actually was a later production. Yet Miss Dressler was among "The Ten Biggest Money Makers" for the period ended Aug. 31, 1934, in ninth position.

While the 1934-35 results established men players in first and second positions for the first time, the feminine stars again outnumbered the men among the ten leaders. Six feminine players and four men won places, the same division of honors as in the previous year, but in 1931-32 the rankings were shared equally. In individual positions, however, the men won first, second, fourth and seventh this year, as against second, fourth, fifth and seventh in 1932-33, a progressive continuation of the improvement of the men's standing in the survey.

Wallace Beery, fourth, had the same relative place as in the 1931-32 vote. He was fifth in 1932-33.

In a general classification as to type of product in which the ten leading players appear, there are changes from the preceding year, when five were stars of comedy-drama for the most part, three of more seriously dramatic roles, and two in comedy. This year there were only two of the drama classification, one in comedy, six in comedy drama, and the music factor in the talking motion picture now is exemplified by the ranking of Bing Crosby in seventh position.

Greater divertissement of player representation in the past year may be seen in the fact that 208 were mentioned for positions, as against 163 in the 1932-33 poll.

More than 70,000 persons are estimated to have been employed by motion picture theatres of the country last year, figures compiled by the United States Census Bureau in its recent survey showing a total of 63,473 on full-time payrolls. No figures were compiled as to the number of persons employed part-time in theatres, but general estimates place it at probably 10 per cent of the full-time total.

The total payroll of all film theatres, for both part-time and full-time employment, reached $85,416,000, or slightly more than 20 per cent of the national box office receipts of $414,468,000 reported by the 10,263 theatres counted by the bureau.

Six Per Theatre on Full Time

On the whole, it is figured that the average full-time employment per theatre last year was six persons. No estimate of average wages can be made, however, because of the fact that part-time employment is included in the payroll total; further, such an average would be valueless because of the great range between the bottom wage and the top salary paid in the average house.

Analysis of the bureau's figures indicates that the average number of employees per theatre ran from less than two in North Dakota, where 102 houses reported 175 employees, to nearly 20 in the District of Columbia, where 25 theatres employed 487 persons. The average payroll per house ran from something under $720 a year in Mississippi to nearly $1,800 in New York.

That the theatre business is one of the major industries of the United States is demonstrated by the figures.

Over $5,000,000 in Five States

To the 63,473 persons given full-time employment in the theatre business, as such, must be added the 19,037 persons engaged in production, and the undetermined number of persons engaged in motion picture distribution, as well as actors, musicians and others in the legitimate and vaudeville.

To the $85,416,000 paid the theatre employees must be added the $71,343,941 payroll of the producers and the salaries of the other groups mentioned above, for which no figures are available.

While in 18 states the theatre payroll last year was less than $500,000, in five states it exceeded $5,000,000, and in 12 others it ran between $1,000,000 and $5,000,000.

The leading states in employment were those with the heaviest grosses—New York, 11,463 employees and a total payroll of $20,780,000; Illinois, 4,303 employees and a payroll of $7,123,000; California, 5,220 employees and a payroll of $6,771,000; Pennsylvania, 4,889 employees and a payroll of $5,872,000; and Massachusetts, 3,678 employees and a payroll of $5,363,000.

BROADWAY STAGE FINDS FIRMER FOOTING THAN IN ALMOST DECADE

More Than 75 Per Cent of Current plays and Musicals Classified as Hits, Real or Potential, With 22 Others in Rehearsal

By FRED AYER

New York's legitimate theatre, working furiously in the first months of its 1934-35 season to pull itself out of a depression in which it has struggled pridefully for five long years, this week took stock and discovered that its feet are on firmer ground than at any time in nearly a decade. Evidence includes, among the less material things, a definite spirit not to let this oldest dramatic medium die. More embryo playwrights are be-ribboning their typewriters than last season, more would-be Bernhards and Terrys are storming theatrical agencies and more producers are putting on a greater number of shows than at this time a year ago.

The more material evidences of definite gain in the theatre include:

1. More than 75 per cent of current plays and musicals are classified as hits or potential hits.

2. A gain of 30 per cent in theatre employment over this time last year has been noted.

3. Four dramatic productions from the 1933-34 season are still running.

4. A Gilbert & Sullivan repertoire has held the boards since September 3—a record for several years.

5. New York is making a real effort to capitalize on film players' popularity by engaging them for stage plays—and the film folk are responding.

6. Twenty-two plays are in rehearsal, with at least a dozen more scheduled to get underway in a few days.

Many critics of the legitimate theatre have maintained that because Broadway did not crash through the 1933-34 season with a series of winning plays it breathed its last dying gasp. Producers feel, however, that last season laid a firm groundwork and point out that any season which can produce four plays carrying over into the next cycle must have something solid in it. These plays—"Sailor Beware!" "Tobacco Road," "Dodsworth" and "Stevedore"—also are fairly representative of four types of drama; broad comedy or farce, drama, comedy drama, and melodrama. Three are still running as we go to press, "Sailor Beware!" with 480 performances; "Tobacco Road," 427, and "Dodsworth," on a return engagement, about 250. "Stevedore," produced at the end of last season, closed November 21. "Kill That Story," also a return engagement from the end of the 1933-34 season, closed last week after 80 performances.

Definite Hits

Among definite hits of the current season—according to the ticket brokers and the stories told by their box offices—are "The Distaff Side," "Merrily We Roll Along," "Lost Horizons," "Personal Appearances," "Within the Gates," "The Farmer Takes a Wife," "Life Begins at 8:40," "The Great Waltz," "Continental Varities" and "Conversation Piece." More than a dozen others have been placed in the list of potential hits.

The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, from London, playing a limited engagement, has presented some 20 Gilbert & Sullivan operettas to capacity houses at the Martin Beck. This group, which has been in New York since September 3, will close in three weeks, during which time it will present 11 productions.

Among motion picture personalities currently appearing and shortly to be seen on the Broadway stage are Tallulah Bankhead, "Dark Victory"; Walter Huston, "Dodsworth"; Bert Lytell, "The First Legion"; Eric Linden, "Ladies' Money"; Kenneth MacKenna, "Merrily We Roll Along"; Lilian Gish and Bramwell Fletcher, "Within the Gates"; Leslie Howard, "The Petrified Forest"; Julie Haydon, "Bright Star"; Walter Connolly and Ernest Truex, "Gather Ye Rosebuds"; Constance Cummings and Nicholas Hannen, "Old Love." Sometime in December Harold B. Franklin will bring Elizabeth Bergner from London to appear in "Escape Me Never." With Miss Bergner will be Griffith Jones, who played in the London Films production of "Catherine the Great." Other film personalities promised or being considered for the present season are Miriam Hopkins, Jean Arthur, Katharine Hepburn, Mary Pickford.

Some idea of the renewed activity of Broadway's drama may be gleaned from the following list of plays and musicals in rehearsal:

GATHER YE ROSEBUDS—Max Gordon-Gilbert Miller.

POST ROAD—Potter & Haight.

ODE TO LIBERTY—Gilbert Miller.

FOOLS RUSH IN—Leonard Sillman.

THUMBS UP—Eddie Dowling.

BRIGHT STAR—Arthur Hopkins.

ROMEO AND JULIET—Katharine Cornell.

RAIN FROM HEAVEN—Theatre Guild.

POINT VALAINE—Coward-Lunt-Wilson.

THE O'FLYNN—Russell Janney.

THE SAILORS OF CATTARO—Theatre Union.

PAGAN LADY (COAST-TO-COAST TOUR)—Wee & Leventhal.

OLD LOVE—Crosby Gaige.

MOTHER LODGE—Busbar & Tuerk.

THE PETRIFIED FOREST—Miller-Hopkins-Leslie Howard.

VALLEY FORGE—Theatre Guild.

A ROMAN SERVANT—William B. Friedlander.

BIRTHDAY—Harmon & Ullman.

PETTICOAT FEVER—Aldrich & de Liagre.

SO MANY PATHS—Abe Cohn & Edward Scanlon.

THE SKY'S THE LIMIT—Raymond Golden.

HOME AGAIN—Douglas G. Hertz.

All these are to open within the next five weeks, many of them out of New York.

Last year at this time there were 26 plays, including musicals, running. Fifty percent of these were classified as hits or potential hits. This season there are 40 plays and musicals running, with 75 per cent classified as hits or potential hits. Including the dozen-odd plays presented to date by the Abbey Theatre of Dublin, there have been 55 dramatic productions presented on Broadway. Of these, 22 were running November 24. Seventeen musical plays, including 11 of the Gilbert & Sullivan repertoire, are still running.

Exhibitors may be interested in learning that Lucienne Boyer dresses almost exclusively in blue, because, she says, "it is neither gay nor sad," or something like that. Mlle. Boyer, incidentally, is being sponsored by erstwhile exhibitor Harold B. Franklin in "Continental Varieties." Mr. Franklin has become one of Broadway's most prolific producers.

Hollywood comes in for its share of ribbing in the current plays. "Personal Appearance" deals entirely with the theme its title suggests, as the heroine, Gladys George—through author Lawrence Riley—lays it on thick for "her dear public." In "The Distaff Side" Clifford Evans comes right out and says: "... I know Hollywood's a lousy place."

PARENTS AND TEACHERS JOIN PRESS ATTACK ON GILMAN CONTROL AIM

New Orleans Better Films Council Calls Charge of Producer Influence Unfair; Says PTA Executive's Plan Is "Ridiculous"

The proposal of Mrs. Robbins Gilman, militant crusader for government control and against "entertainment-for-profit" in motion pictures, and her assertion that the nation's Better Films Councils are "subtly under the influence" of the large producers, last week in New Orleans evoked a storm of criticism from private citizens, the local Better Films Council and the Times-Picayune. For possibly the first time since Mrs. Gilman's campaign against the industry started, back in 1922, the executive of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers came face to face with actively organized opposition not only from the press and the Council, but from the local Parents and Teachers group, whom she had addressed.

Charges Producer Influence

In an interview, Mrs. Gilman had said it had been indicated to her that the Better Films groups are "too subtly under the influence of producers" to expect much organized help. The local Council characterized her remarks as distinctly unfair and called "absolutely impractical and ridiculous" her proposal for production without a profit motive.

Mrs. Gilman detailed her plan for federal control. Her platform, she said, will "revolutionize the motion picture industry as well as public education if put into practice," and has been adopted by the National Congress.

Her proposal No. 1 embraces visual education and is designed to create a demand for films "documented to text" by a national educational committee or board for the production of pictures to be used universally in public schools for educational purposes only.

"No such pictures are being made at present," said Mrs. Gilman. "Every 'flop' made by motion picture concerns is now sold as an educational picture."

Mrs. Gilman did not mention the fact that many companies are both producing and distributing educational and non-theatrical motion pictures, though the demand is not as great as the vast market which Mrs. Gilman describes, and most of these concerns make such films only upon order. Mrs. Gilman did not recognize the juvenile entertainment value of motion pictures in general nor did she take into consideration such films as "Little Women," "David Copperfield," "Girl of the Limberlost," "Anne of Green Gables," "The Little Minister," "Treasure Island," "Jane Eyre."

Would Use Schools and Churches

In order to effect "recreation for children and youths" Mrs. Gilman proposes to utilize 800,000 schools, churches and community auditoriums for "healthful, non-profit-making recreation for children," as against the motion picture theatres (she gave 21,000 as the total) which, she said, now offer them "entertainment for profit."

"We will promote appropriations and funds for the increase of more normal and healthful recreation, including the motion picture, in schools and communities," she told the New Orleans PTA. "This means that we are trying

WHEN IS A MATINEE? EXHIBITORS STUMPED

Whether 6 p.m. or 7:30 is to mark the difference between night and day in St. Louis and, therefore, the time when admission prices are to be changed, has been the subject of hot dispute by exhibitor groups.

After various theatres had been unable to solve the problem, Fred Wehrenberg, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, called all "the boys" together for a conference. The local code board declined to go into the matter.

Exhibitors and exchange representatives aired their views at length. It developed that the rank and file exhibitors—meaning second-runs, subsequents and neighborhoods—believe that 6 p.m. should be the limit for matinee prices. Others were inclined to go to night prices at an earlier hour. The majority agreed that 6 p.m. should mark the difference between night and day—at least in St. Louis.

So what? So the Ambassador and Missouri, both first-runs, continue to recognize 7:30 p.m. as the time when night admission scales take effect.

to educate parents to the point where they will not allow their children to go to pictures produced in Hollywood."

There are, actually, about 12,500 motion picture theatres currently in operation in the United States.

Mrs. Gilman did not reveal how the children would be kept away from the established motion picture house.

Contradicts Herself

Mrs. Gilman contradicted her previous statement that there "are no such pictures (educational) being made at the present time," when she said:

"This move will mean the creation of an entirely new kind of demand for pictures and there are at present at least 250 non-theatrical picture companies which can supply pictures suitable for children. The National Film Institute has already laid the groundwork for this revolutionary move in the motion picture field."

It developed this week that there exists, in Washington, a group of nationally minded citizens calling themselves the "National Film Institute." No prospectus of its plans and organization has been made known. It is known that Dr. Cline M. Koon, assistant to the United States Commissioner of Education, is "interested" in the Institute and that he also is "interested" in Mrs. Gilman's program.

The third point in the Gilman platform calls for a Federal Motion Picture Commission, similar, she explained, to the Federal Securities Commission, to supervise standards of production during the process of film making.

"We do not believe in censorship, state, federal, personal or otherwise," Mrs. Gilman said. "Censorship is not the solution. We are not asking federal control of motion pictures, but for federal supervision during the production of all films entering interstate or foreign commerce."

Times-Picayune Says There'd Be General Revolt Against 'Turning Most Popular Pastime Into Government Propaganda'

Observers were at a loss to understand the distinction drawn by Mrs. Gilman between federal "control" and federal "supervision." The Securities Commission, to which she referred, puts a very definite type of censorship on Wall Street activities.

Calls Pictures "Menace"

Mrs. Gilman concluded her remarks with the following charge:

"With all the scenery to be photographed in Hollywood, movie producers make 43 per cent of their scenes in bedrooms, and their present product is not only a menace to children, but gives foreign countries the wrong impression of Americans. Hollywood is dying out, because foreign countries have become tired of buying our films and having to cut and revise them before they can be shown. Movies of this kind are even a war menace, encouraging other countries to look down on us."

Mrs. Gilman declared persons of adult intelligence are staying away from motion pictures, and leaving them to children, and "that is why pictures are doubly important, because even children of the second and third grades understand 80 per cent of what they see, and remember 70 per cent more of the picture than an adult does. Anything so valuable should be put to some decent use."

The following day the Times-Picayune editorially blasted any idea that Mrs. Gilman might have had of general support from Louisianians.

"The proposal of Mrs. Robbins Gilman for government control of motion pictures echoes unpleasantly in Louisiana ears," said the newspaper. "Coming from her as an individual, it would be just another wild scheme to Hitlerize or bolshevize the country, but unfortunately she speaks with a certain authority as an official of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, a farflung organization that heretofore has been a power for good in the country."

"... There is no more reason for federal control of the movie industry than there is of the making of automobiles or pretzels, except that the movies, next to the newspapers, offer the most fertile field for propaganda, and the freedom of the press is guaranteed by the Constitution."

In Hollywood, Dr. Edward N. Schoolman, psychiatrist, said the present demands for entertainment would not permit the screen to become cultural or educational due, primarily, to the fact that the nation is passing through an age of unrest.

The Raleigh, N. C., News & Observer last week said editorially that its whole-hearted support would be given to a general "heckling" of Mrs. Gilman's program and her suggestion before the Raleigh PTA that films "should be exclusively for the welfare of the children."

"Mrs. Gilman proposes," said the newspaper, "to reduce all motion picture entertainment to an infant level in order to make the movies safe for the children and regardless of the proportions of the failure of schools and parents to direct the child to proper entertainment."
